CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

brethren. What we have seen to-day enables us to felicitate the gentleman now in charge of the majority side upon that wise discretion which they have observed in acting upon the suggestion given to "Little Bo-Peep" in the old nursery rhyme which many of them may have heard—

Leave them alone
And they will come home—

[Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Why do you not give the rest?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will leave the completion of the verse to the vivid imagination of the Democratic members of the House. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was not particularly surprised that the solemn tone of the gentleman from Kentucky should have had so depressing an effect upon my usually versatile and jocose friend from Mississippi as to send him to a graveyard to refresh his sense of humor.

Mr. CARUTH. Does it take all the Representatives from Maine to answer the gentleman from Kentucky? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I think if the other gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] were thrown into the scale we might have to send to Rhode Island for our colleague [Mr. REED] in order to fairly balance the scales.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in regard to this bill [laughter]—this free-wool bill. The gentleman from Kentucky was pleased to say that the principle of the tariff had a different effect—

Mr. SCOTT made an undertone remark.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT] that if he will only keep up this running commentary it will assist me very much—

Mr. SCOTT. I will not treat the gentleman as he did me the other day when I was trying to speak.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will continue to stimulate me with his remarks.

Mr. SCOTT. I am going to be a little more polite than you were.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think you are succeeding admirably.

Mr. SCOTT. Thank you!

Mr. BOUTELLE. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Kentucky, the operation and application of the tariff vary under different circumstances, and its effects may be viewed differently from different standpoints. I have heard gentlemen on the Democratic side in this debate charge that the protective system is an invention of the Republican party; that it is contrary to the fundamental idea of our Government—a violation of the theory and practices of the fathers; and I wish to present an authority that I think will be received here with some respect, although I am constrained to admit that a son of the statesman from whom I am about to quote has gone off in these later days to follow false gods, having, like some other of our modern New England youth, persuaded himself that he knows more than his own father or the forefathers of the country. Edward Everett, in one of his most important speeches, delivered in New York City October 14, 1831, stated that the whole issue involved in the system of the tariff is the question whether a people shall submit to foreign extortion or should endeavor to establish independence by a temporary sacrifice of advantage for the purpose of permanent benefit. He says:

In 1775, on economical principles, it was madness for our fathers to go to war for the sake of independence. It would have been infinitely cheaper for that generation to remain under the British Government than to incur, first, the expense of war; and, second, of all the establishments following a state of independence.

He further says:

The letters of Gen. Washington in the Revolutionary war show the calamitous straits to which the Army was reduced for want of clothing, an article for which they were principally dependent on France. It is the opinion of competent judges that the enhanced price of clothing during the war of 1812 amounted to a larger sum than has been paid for duties on imported cloths from that day to this.

And that was in 1831. He makes another point to which I desire to call attention, because I have not heard it adverted to thus far in this discussion. This eminent authority makes the distinct statement (and it is unequivocally borne out by facts) that the prime cause of the Revolution, the fundamental purpose of the fathers in resisting British oppression, was to free themselves from those conditions which had repressed the development of our own resources in this country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust the House will indulge me for a few moments longer. [Cries of "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will not weary the House much longer. I wish to add the following extract from this same history:

It has been within a few years stated by Mr. Huskisson, and with truth, that the real causes of the Revolution are to be found not in the irritating measures that followed Mr. Granville's plan of taxation, but in the long-cherished discontent of the colonies at this system of legislative oppression. Accordingly, the first measures of the patriots aimed to establish their independence on the basis of the productive industry and the laborers' arts of the country. They began with a nonimportation agreement nearly two years before the Declaration of Independence. This agreement with the exception of the addresses to the people of America and Great Britain, was the only positive act of the First Congress that met in Philadelphia in 1774; and it is signed by every member of that body. The seventh article provides that we will use our utmost endeavors to improve the breed of sheep, and increase their numbers to the greatest extent; and the eighth, that we will in our several States encourage frugality, economy, and industry, and promote agriculture, arts, and the manufactures of this country, especially those of wool.

That was the first legislation of the Congress of 1774 and it is along that line, Mr. Chairman, with frequent halts, with more or less divergence, but along that line of developing the resources, of building up the industries, and of securing the industrial independence of our own country that we have advanced with a degree of prosperity unknown elsewhere amongst the civilized nations of the earth.

Now, this matter of wool, as has been stated, is an important one to every individual in our country. The question of clothing does come home to each and all of us, and the most eloquent and effective tariff speech that I ever heard in my life, from my point of view, was delivered a few years ago in my presence by an aged shoemaker in Massachusetts, who, at the close of a meeting, which had been devoted to detailed and exhaustive arguments on the theories and practices of protection and tariff reform, advanced to the front of the platform and in a few brief sentences, giving his own experience, stated the case of the purchasing power of wages with a cogency that I have never heard excelled in argument since. He said:

I was a Democrat and a free trader, both by inheritance and prejudice, until I began to look into this question for myself and study my own experience. I became converted by looking into this very question of the relative effects of protection and free trade upon wages, and the cost of living to the working people of this country. I simply say to you to-night what each and every one of you know, that every man can earn more money to-day by his labor than ever before in the history of this country; and we are able to buy everything that we need of better quality and at cheaper prices. Fifty years ago, in an adjoining town, I worked in a shoe factory and my average rate of wages was $1.05 per day. I bought my Sunday suit of clothing from our village tailor, and paid him from $27 to $30 for the suit. I had to go to my labor, and put in from twenty-five to twenty-eight days of hard work to buy that suit of clothes. To-day I can earn enough in five or six days by my wages to buy a better suit of clothing than I was able to purchase forty years ago with a month's labor.

And that, Mr. Chairman, covers the whole question involved in this controversy.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, Nero fiddled while Rome burned. We are engaged, sir, upon the consideration of a matter that is of the most vital importance to the people of this country, a matter that affects every man and every woman in the country in every relation of life. We stand here, on the Democratic side of this House, to-day, honestly, earnestly, devotedly undertaking to diminish the burdens that have been imposed by the Republican party upon the shoulders of the people of this land.

In response to our earnest, honest efforts, we are met by jibes and quips and jokes that have no bearing upon this great and important subject. In referring to this matter, Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to call the attention of the House to a fact that has not been broached before, that there is embodied in this bill not merely a question of the reduction of the tariff upon wool, but upon almost every woollen article that goes into the use of civilization as it is in this country to-day. And right now we are upon the consideration of that particular paragraph that relates to a reduction of the tariff upon that which, in my judgment, bears most heavily upon the shoulders of the unprotected people of this country.

The bill itself, in the language which it employs, does not disclose its whole import or meaning. The paragraph beginning on the third page, in line 23, says very succinctly and tersely:

Upon the articles enumerated in paragraphs 396 and 397 the duty shall be 45 per cent ad valorem.

What does that mean to the ordinary observer? What are the articles enumerated in paragraphs 396 and 397?

I can tell you what they are. They are the wool hats, the woollen goods, the woollen underwear of a cheap quality, the ready-made clothing that go into the use of every man, woman, and child in this country engaged in labor. Yet when they come to the question of reducing that burden that has been imposed on the shoulders of the people by the last Congress, in spite of the fact that the gentlemen on the opposite side who are advocating the keeping up of these high duties do not say that they are necessary for the protection of the manufacturer, notwithstanding the fact that we have manufacturers all around us here who declare that they are willing to adopt that schedule, yet we have gentlemen on the opposite side contending that this rate of tariff should be kept up, that it should be imposed upon the wage-earners of this land, simply because it is necessary to protect the industries of this country.

Mr. Chairman, when we are confronted with a matter of this character, when we are confronted with the fact that the passage of this bill will reduce the price of the clothing that is worn by every laboring man and woman in this country by at least 50 per cent, they not being people who can go to tailors and have their suits made to fit them, but who unfortunately have to take what they can get in the stores of the ready-made clothiers, when we are confronted, I say, with the question of whether we shall reduce this, and whether we shall do it without imposing any burden upon the manufacturer, what possible objection can there be to it? Yet upon the opposite side, when we bring this question before them and confront them with the fact that the manufacturers themselves say they do not want this protection, we are nevertheless told that it is absolutely necessary in order to preserve the system of taxation that was prescribed by the Fifty-first Congress that this thing should be kept up, and that if necessary they will go to any length to prevent the reduction of that taxation.

On motion of Mr. WISE, the time of Mr. MALLORY having expired, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not care to continue to any great length, but merely desire to express my views upon what I consider this most momentous subject. In this debate I have heard no reference to the fact that hundreds of articles that are covered by the tariff are included in this bill. The fact that it is a bill to reduce the tariff on wool seems to have taken possession of the minds of gentlemen of this House, and they have given no consideration to the fact that it is not only a reduction of the duty upon crude, raw wool, but that it is a reduction on almost every woolen article that goes into use in our civilization.

And therefore, believing as I believe, and as I have no hesitation in saying what I believe upon this matter—and I speak for no one but myself—believing as I believe that the tariff is unjust and wrong; that it is a system of taxation the most unjust that could be devised by the human intellect; that it is unequal in its bearings upon individuals; that it throws its burdens upon those who are least able to bear them; that it relieves from burdens those who are best able to bear them—believing as I believe, that it is iniquitous and wrong, therefore I say that I am ready to vote for any bill that will reduce anything under the tariff. And right on this point, before I close my remarks, I would like to say what I believe would be the system of revenue that should be adopted in this country.

We have heard from year to year of the immense extravagance of Congress, and we have as an illustration the last Congress, which is known among Congresses as the billion-dollar Congress. If the people of this country could directly feel the burden imposed upon them by this Congress, if there were a direct tax imposed upon the people of this country or if it were a tax imposed upon their incomes, they would very soon realize that $100 per capita, which is about the figure required to-day, was something more than a free people could bear, and we would soon learn the fact that the Congress of the United States would be compelled to restrain itself within legitimate limits or else change the personnel of its body.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, believing as I do that a tariff being unjust and unequal and absolutely impossible to equalize, inasmuch as you can not, under any system that you may choose to adopt, impose it with equality upon the different members of society, it being wrong in principle and unjust in application, why not abandon it, or at least why not let us make up our minds to reach a conclusion for its abandonment by gradual steps?

I stand here a representative of the people of my district, a Democrat representing Democrats, and I believe that I represent them when I say that it is the policy of the Democratic party, it is the policy of the patriotic people of this country, to make up their minds to abandon this iniquitous system and devise some other which will be more just and equal, and which will ultimately reach a result that will cast the burdens of government upon those best qualified to bear them. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is recognized.

Mr. DINGLEY. Just one minute, if there be no objection. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida a question. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. MALLORY. Very well.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida a question. I understand the gentleman to denounce all protective duties, and to say that he is ready to wipe them out of existence. I want to know if he is ready to wipe out the protective duty on oranges?

Mr. MALLORY. I am. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

I want the gentleman to understand that I am not rabid, nor wild. I want to reduce the tariff gradually. I want to protect the manufacturing industries in this country, but also to reduce the tariff gradually.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have gotten an answer to that—

Mr. MALLORY. Permit me to go on and say, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] said the other day, when the time comes I will not ask individuals from other States to give me concessions which I am not willing to give to them; and should I do that I would no longer be qualified to represent the people of my district. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] I would not only do that, but I would take the duty off sugar and lumber. I am speaking for myself. [Applause and cries of "Maple sugar!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply desire to say that the predecessor of the gentleman appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means of last Congress and insisted, in behalf of the people of Florida, that the duty on oranges should be increased, and demanded a protective duty.

A MEMBER. Perhaps that is the reason why he is not here now.

Mr. MALLORY. Who did that? Does the gentleman say I did that?

Several MEMBERS. Your predecessor.

Mr. MALLORY. While I am responsible for myself, I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I do not know what my predecessor did, but I am willing to go before my people on that. I am willing to say that I have not the face to come to this Congress and ask the committee to put a duty upon oranges and take it off everything else. I am willing to take it off everything.

Mr. HERBERT. As the House seems disposed to adjourn, I am quite willing to yield to a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is my purpose to try to get the bill out of committee this evening.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will give me its attention for five minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope that order will be restored.

Order was restored.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer very briefly the speech made by the shoemaker, quoted by my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. The pith of that story, as I understand it, was that this shoemaker said his wages had increased under protection, that he got better wages at the time he was speaking, and was therefore in a better position than he had ever been before. That speech, I take it, was made recently, since hides were put upon the free list, which was in 1871.

By some chance it happened that a bill to put hides on the free list slipped through a Republican Congress. The results were magical. Immediately the leather industries of this country received an extraordinary impulse. Immediately the wages of labor in the manufacture of all kinds of leather goods began to rise. Immediately we began not only to supply our own wants, but within the course of some fifteen years after the passage of that bill, if I recollect right—I have not the statistics at hand—it turned out that we exported, after supplying most of our wants, $16,000,000 or perhaps $20,000,000 of leather goods. It happened that in 1887 I was inquiring in Paris of an experienced American traveler about buying shoes there. Clothing I found was very much cheaper there than at home and I was buying some to bring home. But as to shoes he said: "Don't buy any more than you need, for you can get shoes as cheaply in America as you can get them here. You can get leather goods of all kinds as cheap in America as you can get them here; trunks you can get just as cheaply and a better article in America than you can get here."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If it does not interrupt my friend, I have some facts about the leather trade. When hides were put upon the free list we bought $13,000,000 worth; last year we bought $27,000,000 worth. Then we exported about a million dollars' worth of manufactured leather; last year we exported $13,000,000 worth. We have never imported since that time more than we did then. So that we have gone ahead and occupied the entire trade of the 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 that are in America now more than there were then; and we now import only such leather goods as we do not manufacture, such as kid gloves, morocco sides, and Russia leather, articles that only the rich use, and which we do not expect to make.

Another fact, if it does not interrupt the gentleman. That was the only manufacturing business in this country that actually increased in the number of establishments and in the product of those establishments from 1873 to 1890.

[Here the hammer fell, indicating the expiration of Mr. HERBERT'S time while Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky was speaking. Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for five minutes more plus the portion of his time which I have consumed. [Laughter.]

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to my friend from Kentucky for furnishing me in concise form the figures the substance of which I was endeavoring to give from memory. He, having recently examined them, has given them more accurately than I could have done. Now, Mr. Chairman, these figures mean that the putting of hides upon the free list has vastly increased our leather industries, has given employment to an increased amount of labor in those industries, and has enabled us to export where we formerly had to import. What is the reason that like results should not follow from putting wool upon the free list?

When the McKinley bill was up two years ago, the Republicans, then in control of this House, first reported, if I remember aright, a bill putting hides back upon the dutiable list. It was a part of their purpose then, as it always is, to strengthen the protective ring by adding as many interests as possible. Every robber that can be induced to join the ring will be just that much help to vote down the people who are crying for relief. Upon that idea the McKinley bill, when first reported, put hides back upon the dutiable list. The thought was in that way to catch the votes of the farmers who now and then furnish a few hides for the market, just as they have been able for years to gull a great many of those who now and then carry a few pounds of wool to market.

But, sir, the proposition to put back a tax on hides was withdrawn as soon as it was made. The facts were so clear, the country was so well satisfied with having hides upon the free list, the results which had followed putting them upon the free list were so evidently beneficial to the people and the interests which had grown up under that law were so strong that our Republican friends did not dare to bring that bill before the House in that shape. They struck out the proposition.

Hides are still on the free list, and they will stay there; and let me make the prediction that if once we succeed in putting wool on the free list it is absolutely certain that it never can go back on the dutiable list, because the people of this country will see that just the same results will follow free wool in all the woolen industries that have followed free hides in all the leather industries.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is there not this difference: We do not raise cattle for the sake of the hides. The hides are comparatively a small matter, while wool is a very large and important matter in the sheep industry.

Mr. HERBERT. Wool is a very large and important matter to the people of this country. More people are interested and interested to a greater extent in free wool than in free hides. In just the proportion that the cost of the shoes on the gentleman's feet bears to the cost of the other raiment that he wears is the interest of the people in free hides less than their interest in free wool. And the people of this country, when once we succeed in getting wool upon the free list, will keep it there, for this is the only civilized country, the only country in the world, the only country that does anything at all in the way of manufacturing, that does not have free wool. France has a system of protection, but she has free wool. Germany has a system of protection, but she has free wool. Why is it that we have not free wool here? It is because the system of protection that has prevailed in America has not been so intelligent, has not been founded upon even as good reasons, has not been as systematic as the protection existing elsewhere.

[Here the hammer fell. Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have occupied just eight minutes altogether in this discussion, and I propose now to take five minutes more. [Laughter.]

I listened with great interest and pleasure to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] as he depicted in that glowing language of his and with that eloquent manner for which he is noted throughout the world—I had almost said the universe—the great benefits which would follow to the country from the action of this House. Now, brethren, what have you done? We have been together for four months. This sprightly little periodical (the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD), which we issue every morning to a waiting, I will not say a weary world, containing the words of the wise and the otherwise, has already acquired an amplitude of 3,190 pages. What have you done but talk?

We heard in the last Congress about the tremendous power that was being exercised by the national banks, how they were a gigantic monopoly that was sapping the energies and the industries of this country. You have here a two-thirds majority. What have you done?

We heard a great deal about the currency of this country not being sufficient for the transaction of its business. You have over a two-thirds majority in this House. What have you done?

We heard a great deal about the awful enormity of the demonetization act of 1873 and the necessity for the remonetization of silver. You have over a two-thirds majority in this House. What have you done? Brother BLAND, what have you done? Where is your silver bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. If we had had your help we would have got it through. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Ah! this is your House, not ours. What have you done? The silver bill has "gone where the woodbine twineth;" and the silver men have "fled to the mountains of Hepsidam, where the lion roareth and the whang-doodle mourneth for her first-born." [Laughter.]

We heard a great deal about the influence of "trusts" in this country. We were told the other day by the distinguished leader upon the other side who is in charge of this bill [Mr. McMILLIN] that since this discussion began the sugar trust of this country has taken within its all-embracing folds the last independent sugar refinery in the United States. Well, if the gentleman wanted to strike a blow at that trust why did he not, when the first paragraph of this bill was under consideration, rise and propose an amendment putting upon the free list sugars of every grade. He maintained a silence that was as inscrutable as it was continued and dense.

Mr. STOUT rose.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. My friend will excuse me; I have but five minutes; and those I had a hard time to get.

We heard also a great deal about the iniquities of the McKinley bill. That bill covers 2,500 items. You are now punching the first hole in that bill at the end of the fourth month of this session; and you have not got it punched yet. Out of the 2,500 items the only item that you have touched so far is the item in which the agricultural interests of this country are especially interested. Your first blow is struck at the farmer.

Now, it is easy when you are in the minority to criticise. I noticed in the last Congress that you were a party of criticism. Everything that we did or attempted to do you cried down as unrighteous. Brethren, the responsibility now is upon you. You have been intrusted with power at the hands of the American people, and they will demand of you a return of your stewardship. Ay, as the news comes flashing over the wires from Michigan and Ohio and other States, we find they have demanded the return, and not finding it they have passed the sentence, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Excuse this little brotherly exhortation; but I wanted to spur you up to do something to redeem yourselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. STOUT rose.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the next section be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. And all imported articles enumerated, described, and provided for in said paragraphs, respectively, which may be in public store or in warehouse on the said 1st day of January, 1892, shall be subjected to the same duties when withdrawn for consumption, and no others, as if said articles had been imported on or after said 1st day of January; and only the ad valorem duties as herein provided shall thereafter be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles mentioned in said paragraphs.

Mr. SCOTT. In connection with the remarks which have been made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] as well as those of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] this morning, I wish to have read a resolution bearing upon the sugar trust and the sugar question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. That trust, I want to say, is organized under the laws of the Democratic State of New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, the duties levied by the McKinley law on sugar of over No. 16 Dutch standard of color is a burden of taxation borne solely by the consumers of refined sugar and prevents the price of sugar to the people being reduced to that which it should bring; and

Whereas, the free sugar provision of said bill applying only to No. 16, and under, gives the great, grasping monopoly known as the sugar trust free raw materials; and

Whereas, said sugar trust being composed of less than twenty refineries has succeeded in completely stifling and destroying competition by its unholty, unjust, and cruel exactions, has by increase and manipulation of its capital stock, lately adding $25,000,000 thereto, absorbed all outstanding competitive refining of sugar; has by this made but one buyer for the free raw sugar and practically but one seller of the protected refined product, the only sugar of consumption; and

Whereas, this consolidation has enabled the giant sugar trust to force down the price of raw sugar from the cane plantations of the South and the best farmers of the West, and thus crippled two useful industries of the country and also has made it possible for said trust to oppress the people by increasing the price of refined sugar, changing the relative prices of raw and refined, as shown by the current markets to such an extent as to enable this stupendous corporation to absorb millions of money from the producers of raw and consumers of refined sugars: and

Whereas, this advance and others contemplated were made possible only by the present tariff duties left by the McKinley law on refined sugars coming from abroad; and

Whereas, the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ending June 30, 1891, shows that there was consumed during the year preceding 3,946,490,995 pounds of sugar on which the sugar trust was enabled to increase the price to the full amount of the tariff thus taking from the consumers of the country $19,782,454; and as this greedy monopoly by depressing the price of raw sugar has been and will be able to realize a far greater sum, the same not being far from $40,000,000 per annum; and

Whereas the sugar schedule in the present tariff law simply remains as a safeguard protecting one of the most gigantic and conscienceless monopolies of this age; and

Whereas the abolition of all sugar duties would admit free and thus cheapen sugar to the people, and prevent the trust from depressing cane and other raw sugars produced here: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means of this House be, and hereby is, instructed to report a bill removing all duties on sugar and place the same on the free list, in order that over 60,000,000 of people may no longer be compelled to pay tribute to one of the most prodigious monopolies of modern times and that this article of consumption in every household may be cheapened and the burdens of the people relieved.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer as an amendment to the pending section the proviso which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all wool which is not shipped to the United States directly from the country within which it is produced shall pay an ad valorem duty of 5 per cent until January 1, 1896, when it shall be free.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, those who may remember my speech in advocacy of the policy of removing the duty from wool will remember that I mentioned as one of the benefits that it would enable us to reestablish our mercantile marine by giving us return cargoes from the wool-producing countries. I pointed to the fact that very few of the vessels which went out with cargoes of our manufactured goods returned to our ports directly, but, on account of lack of return cargoes, were diverted to Europe, and that we were brought thereby into serious disadvantage with our European competitors; that at times it was impossible to obtain vessels to deliver the goods sold to our foreign customers. This I hope and expect will be remedied in a great measure by the admission of wool free of duty.

The bad policy of a generation or more in which we have assisted Europe in gaining control of the machinery of trade can not be remedied without wise action on our part. It is the object of this amendment to, for a time, discriminate against wool coming to us free of duty through European distributors, and I believe that it is necessary, as the channels of trade between those countries and Europe have become so smooth that without this check it will continue to come in that way for a long time. Something must be done to break up the trade habit. We want to, and must, become independent of Europe for our supplies of raw material, and this will help us do it more speedily.

While it may for a time force the woolen manufacturer to pay 5 per cent duty on such wool as he gets from Europe, it will assist in making him more quickly independent, and will also benefit him, in common with every other manufacturing interest, by establishing more firmly our commercial relations with countries which will become consumers of his goods.

This small concession in the interests of commerce and the carrying trade of the country is not a large one to ask. I ask it in the interest of our manufacturers, in the interest of our mercantile marine, and in the interest of commerce.

I regret that the Committee on Ways and Means did not act upon this suggestion and embody it in the original bill; for I am satisfied that at this late hour of the discussion, when all are anxious to come to a vote on the main bill, that it can not receive the consideration that it merits; neither can I consent to embarrass the committee by insisting upon a vote, but satisfy myself by putting it upon record for their future consideration, and withdraw it from the Committee of the Whole and ask its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The next section of the bill was read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; but this section shall not take effect until the first day of January, 1893.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move now that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6007) to place wool on the free list and reduce the duties on woolen goods, had directed him to report the same back with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is now late, and I will not press this bill to a vote to-night, but will ask a vote in the morning. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

He also presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Virginia, containing 216 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. BATE presented a petition of citizens of Lincoln County, Tenn., indorsed by 70 members of Hopewell United Presbyterian Church of Tennessee, praying that no exposition or exhibition where United States funds are expended be opened on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of citizens of Sumner County, Tenn., praying for the enactment of a law imposing a tax upon all transactions whereby parties contract or agree to sell and deliver at a future time any of the articles and under the circumstances mentioned in the bills now pending in Congress and sometimes designated as "the Washburn-Hatch antioption bills;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented sundry petitions of citizens of Arkansas, numerous signed, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bills; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of George Spittler and 29 other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill defining lard and imposing a tax thereon; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylvania, containing 360 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of 46 citizens of Fayette County, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill No. 401, supplementary to various acts relative to immigration and importation of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of John Gilmore and other citizens of Pensacola, Fla., praying that their title to the lands on the United States live-oak naval reservation, lying between Pensacola Bay and Santa Rosa-Sound, be granted and approved by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Springfield, Mo., signed by H. A. W. Juneman, secretary, praying for the passage of House bill 257, making eight hours a day's work; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 469) granting an honorable discharge to William Mackey;

A bill (S. 513) to muster into the service of the United States, as second lieutenant of infantry, Joseph B. Samuels; and A bill (S. 1261) for the relief of Nancy Wallace.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2260) for the relief of the trustees of Isaac R. Trimble, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2151) to perfect the military record of Capt. Jacob H. Hay, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1877) for the relief of William H. Nave, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1129) for the recognition of Henry O. Kent as colonel of the Seventeenth New Hampshire Volunteers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WOLCOTT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5119) to prevent the building of houses along certain alleys in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1203) to exempt improvements to real estate in the District of Columbia from taxation, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PORT OF MARQUETTE, MICH.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4534) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for immediate action, as it is a short bill and is recommended by the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1789) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise, to report it back adversely. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HEARING BEFORE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR March 31, 1892, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, to report the evidence and arguments at the hearing with regard to pending measures for the relief of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2861) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase for governmental and industrial use at Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., a testing machine for tension and compression; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to George Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PEPPER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2863) for the relief of Mrs. Lititia S. Elliott; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PEPPER. By reason of the fact that the claim arose out of a matter alleged to have occurred in the District of Columbia, it would be better to have the bill referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARLISLE introduced a bill (S. 2864) for the relief of Elizabeth Fulwiler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2865) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the United States Patent Office; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to E. C. Trowbridge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2867) for the relief of Mrs. Mary L. Roderick; which read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong; and

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the city of Chamberlain in Brule County and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

A resolution to print 8,000 copies each of the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology; and

A resolution to print 50,000 copies of the eighth and ninth annual Reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1891 and 1892.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2056) to repeal the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers," approved March 2, 1889, so far as they relate to steamers plying exclusively upon any of the lakes, bays, or sounds of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, in the case before the Committee on Claims, in the Fiftyeth Congress, of H. K. Belding, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn, there having been no adverse report thereon.

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the amount of silver bullion offered to the Government each month since the passage of the act approved July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," under the provisions of said act, and by whom and at what prices; and also the amount of silver bullion purchased each month during said period, and from whom and at what place, and the prices paid therefor; the number of days given such seller or person offering silver for sale in which to deliver the silver.

SANITARY CONDITION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses incurred by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in making the examination of the sanitary condition of the Capitol, and especially the structure recently built on the terrace of the Capitol, and the tunnels through which the air is pumped through the two wings of the buildings, etc., adopted March 22, 1892, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I think under a statute such resolutions must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Let it go, then, to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have business suspended for a moment while I make a short statement.

I find, in the New York Evening Post of April 5, 1892, a list of mortgages in Alameda County, Cal., made to me, wherein it is charged, and I suppose truthfully, that they contain an obligation to pay in gold coin.

These mortgages to me resulted from several sales made at auction through a firm of brokers in San Francisco, Easton Eldridge & Co., in the usual way, and were made for deferred payments. The mortgages undoubtedly were made on the ordinary blanks used in that country. I never examined the mortgages myself. I signed some of the deeds, but most of the deeds, however, were signed by my agent. Undoubtedly in making the mortgages the ordinary printed form was used, which contained an obligation to pay in gold. That has existed since about 1863, when there was passed in California what was known as the specific contract law, by which the gold standard was maintained during the war. Greenbacks, as they are called, Treasury notes, never circulated on the Pacific coast previous to the resumption of coin payments. In consequence of that specific contract law all the printed forms for mortgages and notes contain an obligation to pay in gold, and I presume my agent used the ordinary form in taking mortgages. I have no doubt of that at all, though I gave no directions in regard to it. I do not recollect that I ever saw one of the mortgages, but take for granted they were the usual forms. That is the established practice there, as is well known on that coast.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will see to it that no such forms of mortgage are used hereafter. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I shall see to it, because money is so scarce now that I shall be glad to get any kind of legal-tender money.

This business was conducted without any directions from me, and in the usual form of doing business there. I have always been opposed to the specific contract law, as is well known, and believe that it was always a great detriment to the Pacific coast. During the war, and for years afterwards, until the resumption of specie payments, immigration to that country was absolutely shut out because the people would not stand the discount in taking their money from here and investing it there. It even kept travelers away. For a time a man who had $100 had to reduce it to $50 when he got to California. I have always been opposed to that law, but the business referred to in this article has been done in the usual way, for which I am not responsible, and I make no apology.

Mr. FELTON. You still survive.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I still survive, notwithstanding I have seen some hard times.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 6th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 808) establishing a port of delivery at Des Moines, Iowa;

An act (S. 2315) to protect foreign exhibitors at the World's Columbian Exposition from prosecution for exhibiting wares protected by American patents and trade-marks; and

An act (S. 2643) changing the time for holding the circuit and district courts in the district of West Virginia.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6746) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to consent to allow me to call up for consideration a pension bill to grant a pension to a very old man. It is a very meritorious case, and I think will only require the reading of the bill. It was favorably reported by the committee yesterday while I was absent. The man is nearly 90 years old.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield for an inquiry, to see what the Senator desires.

Mr. CAMERON. I was about to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I did not know that the morning business had been finished. I intended when it was completed to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but it seems that the Senator from Iowa made a motion to take up the District appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator desire to make some other motion?

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to make a motion to go into executive session. I have been wanting to do that for a week past, but the Indian appropriation bill was delayed so long that I put it off until now.

Mr. HOAR. Why not wait until after the District appropriation bill is concluded?

Mr. CAMERON. The executive session will probably take some time. It will be a long session.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not interpose that motion at this moment. I desire very much, I will say to the Senator and to the Senate, for reasons that are personal to myself, to dispose of this appropriation bill, and in addition to that the public business, I think, would be best promoted by going on with the bill now.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to the appropriation bill being considered to-day, but I now give notice to the Senate that to-morrow immediately upon the conclusion of the morning business—

Mr. ALLISON. Or immediately after the appropriation bill is disposed of, I suggest.

Mr. CAMERON. No, I do not want to do that. I want the executive session early in the day. I shall make the motion to-morrow morning immediately upon the completion of the morning business.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then I hope the Senate will sit with me until we can conclude this bill to-day.

I ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] not to interpose this morning. I think we can finish this bill to-day if we go on carefully with it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6746) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that in the consideration of the bill the formal reading be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be first disposed of and acted on as the reading progresses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 21, on page 2.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee, I move to strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 21 down to and including the word "dollars" in line 22, being the words:

Three laborers, at $1 per day each. #939.

And to insert:

One laborer, at $1 per day. $313; two laborers, at $380 each, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses, executive office," in section 1, on page 3, line 3, before the word "assistant," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three assistant inspectors of plumbing, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 3, line 6, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for salaries and contingent expenses," executive office, from "$44,047" to "$45,047."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "forty-seven" before "hundred" and to insert "one hundred and forty-one;" so as to read "$45,141," to agree with the amendment just adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for assessor's office," in section 1, on page 3, line 8, after the words "assistant assessors," to strike out "until January 1, 1893, at the rate of," and insert "at;" so as to read:

For assessor's office: for one assessor, $3,000; three assistant assessors, at $2,500 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 3, line 20, after the word "law," to insert "in the assessment of real and personal property;" so as to read:

And perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the assessor not inconsistent with existing law in the assessment of real and personal property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same clause, in section 1, on page 3, line 23, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Two clerks, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 3, line 24, after the word "each," to strike out "one clerk, $1,200," and insert "two clerks, at $1,200 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 7, on page 4.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 6, on page 4, I move to strike out the words "and messenger;" so as to read, "one clerk, $900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 4, line 7, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for assessor's office" from "$22,250" to "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 4, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in line 12, after the word "each," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" in line 13, after the word "each," to insert "one clerk and bank messenger, $1,000;" and in line 15, after the word "all," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For collector's office: For one collector, $4,000; one cashier, $1,800; one bookkeeper, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk and bank messenger, $1,000; one messenger, $600; in all, $14,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations "for auditor's office," in section 1, on page 4, line 22, after the word "each" to insert "one clerk, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for engineer's office," in section 1, on page 6, line 17, after the word "each," to insert:

One clerk and stenographer, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 6, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One general inspector of streets, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 7, line 2, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one inspector of lamps, at $900," and insert "two inspectors of lamps, at $900 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 7, line 13, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for engineer's office" from "$41,530" to "$45,230."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, on page 9, line 15, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

That the register of wills of the District of Columbia shall not, hereafter, retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation, over and above his necessary clerk hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $4,000 a year or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year; and the surplus of such fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 9, line 19, after the word "clerks," to strike out "copyists;" in line 20, after the word "increased," to insert "except that additional copyists may be employed for temporary service as the necessities of the office may require;" in line 23, after the word "salary," to insert "or compensation;" in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "said" and after the word "clerks," to strike out the word "copyists;" and in line 24, after the word "salaries," to strike out "rates" and insert "or compensation;" so as to read:

Provided, That the number of clerks and others employed in the office of the register of wills shall not be increased, except that additional copyists may be employed for temporary service as the necessities of the office may require, nor shall the salary or compensation of clerks and others be increased beyond the salaries or compensation paid during the fiscal year 1891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 10, line 1, after the date "1891," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That a deputy register of wills, at a salary of $1,500, to be paid out of such fees and emoluments, is hereby authorized to be appointed by the register of wills, who shall hereafter, in the necessary absence or inability of the register from any cause, perform his duties without additional compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 10, line 15, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "three thousand and six hundred" and insert "four thousand;" so as to read:

That the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation, over and above his necessary clerk hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by one of its justices, appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $4,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year, and the surplus of such fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 10, line 19, after the word "clerks," to strike out "copyists;" in line 21, after the word "increased," to insert "except that additional copyists may be employed for temporary service as the necessities of the office may require;" in line 23, after the word "salary," to insert "or compensation;" in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "said;" in line 24, after the word "clerks," to strike out "copyists;" in line 25, before the word "paid," to insert "or compensation;" and on page 11, line 1, after the date "1891," to insert "and the salary of the deputy recorder of deeds shall hereafter be $1,800 per annum;" so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That the number of clerks and others employed in the office of the recorder of deeds shall not be increased, except that additional copyists may be employed for temporary service as the necessities of the office may require, nor shall the salary or compensation of clerks and others be increased beyond the salaries or compensation paid during the fiscal year 1891, and the salary of the deputy recorder of deeds shall hereafter be $1,800 per annum.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 15, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the streets and avenues shall be completed in the order in which they appear in said schedules, except High street, so far as the amount of money herein appropriated shall suffice for the work, and the cost of widening High street, named in the Georgetown schedule, shall be charged to the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia and collected from said company in the same manner as the cost of laying down pavements, sewers, and other works, or repairing the same, lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of street railways, and for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof, are collectible under the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878; and the act of August 22, 1888, entitled "An act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia," is hereby altered and amended so as to authorize and require such charge and collection.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend that amendment, in line 6, by inserting, after the word "schedule," the words "one-half of which."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 of the amendment of the committee, after the word "schedule," it is proposed to insert the words "one-half of which;" so as to read:

And the cost of widening High street, named in the Georgetown schedule, one-half of which shall be charged to the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ought to say in respect to this subject that when the committee had it under consideration they thought the whole of this expense should be charged to the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railroad Company. Since that time I have ascertained that the company has made absolutely nothing in the way of income, and as far as I am concerned I am willing to let the matter go.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope it will be allowed, because my opinion is that the company is losing from $600 to $700 a month regularly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the thing that ought to be done is to require this company to take up its tracks and place them where they will not be the constant nuisance and menace which they are to-day to everybody who travels this great thoroughfare into the country. The right which this company got to spoil this road was gained in an insidious fashion, and some of us remember that when we returned to Washington one winter a few years ago the Tennallytown road had been occupied by this company and its uses destroyed under a bill which none of us knew anything about. Since that time no man can send his family, his wife, or his children into the country by this road without the greatest danger of accident and loss of limb or life.

The intent of these companies, Mr. President, is by constant importunities before the committees of the House and the Senate to gradually absorb and occupy every avenue from this city into the country. They do not recognize any public rights in these great thoroughfares, and the Senate has been remiss in its duty in not watching and guarding the public interests against these corporations. I do not hold myself wholly free from blame in this regard, although I have sometimes, as Senators may think, "in season and out of season," protested against the gobbling up of the great streets and thoroughfares leading into the country by these companies, but it goes on from year to year, and although Washington is to be the great winter resort, the pride and satisfaction and comfort of a great people, soon to be one hundred millions in number, we are going to be encircled by these street railroad corporations so that it will not be possible for men or women or children to get into the country without great danger, as I have said, to life and limb from these railroads.

Senators know that already there are schemes here for cutting off the few avenues that remain to ourselves, to our friends, and our constituents; that the determination is to occupy and possess them all. I am glad to be able to say that the Committee on the District of Columbia has been awakened to the importance of this matter, and is looking to these things, and I commend to the chairman of that committee, who is a vigilant business man, and who knows what business is, the necessity for eternal vigilance on his part against the encroachments of these corporations. If he does not look out these matters will be smuggled through the committee, and will get through the Senate and the House at hours when nobody is paying attention, and we shall find every year the rights of the public curtailed and at last destroyed.

Now, this company is a chief sinner. It got its privileges and proceeded in a way that nobody knew anything about. It has got the most valuable franchise of all the roads that run into the country.

There are other roads that have put out thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars, who have been obliged to lay their tracks in such a way that it would not be unsafe to the public, because somebody had found out that the intention was to restrict them by amendments to their charters, which have to a degree prevented their doing this mischief; but this company has no such restriction. They went onto that road, a great thoroughfare, and destroyed it, and now because for a short distance—what is the distance they are required to pave?

Mr. STEWART. A little over a thousand feet.

Mr. HALE. A little over a thousand feet, a fifth of a mile; and because, without having paid a dollar for their franchise and contributed nothing to the public revenues, we ask that they shall be compelled to pave this thousand feet, which is only a small fractional part of their line, they come in with a declaration that they are not making money and that they only ought to pave half. Mr. President, they not only ought to be obliged to pave the whole of this, but they ought to be obliged to take their track up and lay it as some other companies that we have been watching and guarding are obliged to do.

But nobody asks that; no committee reports that; and when an amendment is put on here compelling them to do this little paving, all that they have ever done for the public and all that they have ever paid, then we are beset and importuned by agents and lawyers and lobbyists lurking in the pathway of Senators, who clamor at their doors and meet them at their committee rooms and in the corridors, and Senators are persuaded to give way, to yield to them.

Well, the Senate can do that, Mr. President, if they choose. I have done my duty in informing the Senate what this situation is. If the Senate choose to give up to this company and cut the amount down which the committee reported this company should pay, I can not hinder it. I have done what I think is right in notifying the Senate, and I certainly, for one, shall not vote to reduce this amount one-half, whatever may be the action of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it has been about thirty years since the people in that neighborhood and on that road have been clamoring for some conveniences in the way of a street railroad leading from Georgetown out towards Rockville, in Maryland. Some gentlemen who had more intrepidity about this matter than they had money, I suppose, to back them with, induced a large number of citizens of this city to make contributions in the way of subscriptions to the stock for getting this railway established. They came to Congress; they have been here twice; two bills have passed upon this subject, having gone before the Committee on the District of Columbia and been thoroughly examined, and their charter has been amended since it was first granted, and no provision has been inserted of the kind that is now presented on a bill of appropriations.

Well, I think that after all this is rather a harsh way of legislation. The legislation of itself is simply destructive of the railroad. We have granted the privilege; these people have put their money in there; and now, upon a bill of appropriations, to take this subject up and give no chance for consideration, and no chance to answer at all, and bring in an amendment of this kind to the bill, is harsh legislation. I think that the whole provision ought to go off this appropriation bill and go to the Committee on the District of Columbia and let them investigate it.

I am not prepared to accept the very earnest and intense statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on this question. I think the Senator is very widely mistaken about it. I think he is very much mistaken in respect of the men who are concerned in this road, or of their having in any degree or at any time insidiously got an act of Congress passed for their benefit. The truth is, they were making a very risky venture in putting any money in the enterprise at all. This matter has been twice investigated by the Committee on the District of Columbia. The company have got their charter, and this proposition is merely to amend or repeal the charter on a bill of appropriations.

Now, the company can live at one-half of this cost, but they can not live if they have to pay it all. It is pretty bloody sort of work to get a set of people to invest their money in a railway of this kind, and then come in on a bill of appropriations and destroy them. This is going to be the effect of it. I am informed that the railroad company can get along with one-half of this, having to tax their own pockets for the purpose of doing it, and having no chance to get it out of the community.

So I think the Senator from Maine ought not to make the objection after bringing in this amendment here. He ought to be satisfied with one-half now. If that is not enough, let the Committee on the District of Columbia take up the subject and amend the charter. That is the way to do it. The only power we have got over them is to amend it or repeal it, and let the matter come up in some form where these gentlemen can have a chance to be heard.

The Senator complains that lobbyists and lawyers and friends of railroad schemes are around the Capitol. Who else have they got to represent them in this place? What government have they got to represent them? What voice have the people here got in any government of theirs? If the right of petition and the right to see Senators and to talk with them and explain to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Appropriations is cut off from them, then they are helpless, they have no chance to say a word or do anything. They can not make an appeal through any local authority at all. The local authorities in the city of Washington are not under the control of the people in the slightest degree and not responsible to them. They sit in judgment upon their rights and destroy them at will and pleasure; they carry out their own schemes and purposes of government doubtless with good intent, but at the same time it is a cruel method of administering law in an American community.

I hope the Committee on Appropriations will not take upon itself now to amend all the charters of railway companies in the District of Columbia. I have noticed here in the last four or five years that whatever has been done in respect of the amendment of railroad charters or a change of plan, traction, and the like of that, has been done by the Committee on Appropriations, and we have to submit to it because we can not get any appropriation unless we take the wishes of that committee in regard to a proposed improvement or the repeal or the amendment of a charter.

So I think we ought to go moderately about this. While the Senator from Maine doubtless has some good reason for every statement he has made here, I think it would appear that the men who are concerned in this railroad are about as honorable a set of men as there are in this country, just about as good as Washington City can afford, and if they have to be urgent and attentive to their interests it is only because they have got no other chance in the world of being heard.

I hope the amendment will be allowed to stand.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, as a matter of course, whenever the District of Columbia appropriation bill comes up we have the same old discussion in regard to self-government here and corporations. It is hardly necessary to observe that there are two very distinct sides to this question.

I never belonged to the class of legislators who believe that corporations deserve no consideration at the hands of Congress or Legislatures, but I believe they ought to be treated exactly like private individuals, made to observe the law, to assume their portion of the public burdens, and also receive their portion of the public benefits. But it seems to me that, in regard to this matter, it makes no difference what we say here in this bill; the railroads will do exactly as they please, and our experience in the past shows it.

Here is a provision that if the company do not comply with this law, the amount necessary shall be "collectible under the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled 'An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878,'" and the legislation in regard to laying down pavements, etc., between the external tracks of the railroads. I remember very distinctly some years ago that we had a protracted contest over the question of forcing these railroads in the city of Washington to put their tracks down level with the surface of the streets, which is required in every other city in the United States, in order that their rails should make no obstruction to vehicles. It was finally passed here after a long debate, and I call the attention of the Senate to-day to the fact that the Belt Line in this city has paid no more attention to it than if the act had never been passed.

Two of the railroad companies have complied with it so far as I know, but the Belt Line, that runs entirely around the city, so far as my knowledge extends—and I ride upon it every day going to and coming from my residence—has paid no more attention to it than if Congress had never passed the law, and the officers of the District of Columbia have made no attempt, so far as I am informed, to enforce the law at all, just as if, in so many words, they were saying the railroad company cares nothing for an act of Congress, and will do as it pleases. My experience teaches me that they do not propose to obey the law unless they see proper to do it.

If we continue in this line of legislation, as I have noticed here for the last ten years, there will not be a street in this entire city that will not be in possession of some railroad company. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia informed me this morning that there were over twenty bills now pending before that committee for constructing street railroads here, all of them speculative enterprises, and the railroad tracks proposed to be laid down upon streets from 30 to 32 feet wide, where the construction of such railway tracks absolutely destroys the street for any other purposes than the purposes of the railroad, making property upon both sides of it almost untenable; and yet these bills slip through Congress in some sort of way, and the first thing those of us who own property here or live here know is that we wake up some morning and find the street torn to pieces and a railroad being constructed of which we never heard before. So it seems to me that it is "mere leather and prunella" whether we pass this provision of the present bill or not.

I shall take the course indicated by the Senator from Maine

[Mr. HALE], with my present information, being under the impression that the railroad company afterwards, no matter what we do, will do exactly what it pleases.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator think it is worth while for the Senate, before adopting that fatalistic view, to make a few more efforts, or one more effort at least, to see if we can not stand up against the corporations?

Mr. VEST. I will stay with the Senator from Maine to the last ditch, but I do not expect any other result than what we have had.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on the question of legislation. I desire to say that on one occasion since the road in question has been built, I became very much outraged by finding myself involved almost in a runaway with a carriage team, on account of an electric car on that road. I felt that certainly the track had been put there without authority. I could not imagine that the Congress of the United States would deliberately pass a bill authorizing any railroad company to put a track down in the middle of the ordinary traveled road. Hence I felt that the railroad company was greatly to blame for the condition; but on inquiry and examination it turned out that we had authorized all this, and if there is anybody to blame about it it certainly is the Congress of the United States. I have two of the acts which have been passed—I do not know whether these are all or not—first the act incorporating the Georgetown and Tennyaltown Railway Company of the District of Columbia. After reciting the names of the corporators, the act proceeds:

Created a body corporate under the name of the Georgetown and Tennyaltown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, with authority to construct and lay down a single or double track railway, with necessary switches, turn-outs, and other mechanical devices for operating the same by cable or electric power for carrying passengers in the District of Columbia, from the Potomac River near High street, to, and along High street in Georgetown to the Tennyaltown road, but wholly outside of the limits of said road, and along the side of the said road to the District line.

Now, whether the track was put down under that act or under another act that was passed on the 24th of March, 1890, I am not advised.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. The original act from which the Senator has just read provided for a track on High street. High street is a very narrow street, the roadway between Georgetown and Tennyaltown.

Mr. VEST. What is the width?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very narrow street. I do not remember what is the width of it. I do not think it exceeds 60 feet, perhaps not over 54 feet. It is a narrow street, extending entirely through the city of Georgetown and beyond that to the summit of the hill, where it intersects the Tennyaltown road.

By that first act the company was authorized to build in the middle of that street or anywhere they saw proper, and they did construct a railroad in the center of the street until they reached the Tennyaltown road. Then the original act required that when they reached the Tennyaltown road, they should build their track outside of the Tennyaltown road. The subsequent act which the Senator from Illinois now has in his hand, was passed on the 24th of March, 1890, which authorized them to build, not outside of the Tennyaltown road, but in the Tennyaltown road. So the charter was modified in their interest from the point of intersection of High street and the Tennyaltown road.

The point in question here is a little portion of the road between the Tennyaltown road and the city of Georgetown, wherein the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have discovered that, as a matter of fact the road is, as they believe, 120 feet wide, but it is fenced up, so that it is a narrow lane. Now, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia desire to widen so much of High street as will bring High street to the point of Thirty-fifth street, which is now a paved road through its entire length, a road that has asphalt up to the point where this intersection is proposed by this amendment. It will cost a considerable sum of money to widen that road, and the Committee on Appropriations believed, after such examination as they were able to give it, that the Georgetown and Tennyaltown Railroad Company should pay the whole expense, because they had placed their tracks in such a way as to destroy this road practically, as they have.

Mr. MORGAN. They placed the track according to law.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly the law authorized them to do just what they have done.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that in the organic law specific provision is made that the charter may be changed at any time.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that.

Mr. CULLOM. I have only a word more to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I believe he has the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. It is all right. The chairman of the committee has said much of what I intended to say myself, and has said it better than I could have done, and I am very glad of it.

I confess when this subject was up in committee I voted that the railroad company should pay the whole cost of that provision in the bill, but I was not as familiar then with the law that controlled the subject under which the tracks were built as I am now. I confess that it would seem to me a little hard, perhaps, for a company that has not violated any law that I know of, and which is losing money, as this company seems to be doing, to be required to incur the whole expense provided in the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations; and while I shall go with the committee, I am perfectly willing myself that the Senate shall adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has a general complaint to make about railroad legislation and railroad procedure here in this town. I expect it is very just; but at the same time a great deal of the fault of this matter rests upon Congress, and I do not know but that the whole of it rests upon Congress. But the Senator from Missouri, I think, has not stated, and perhaps he will not state, that this railroad company has not complied exactly with the statutes of the United States upon this question.

If the people who took stock in the railroad company to enable the company to build the road had known that Congress, after the railroad had been laid down, would place upon that company or upon that road a burden which would be impossible for it to bear, they certainly never would have put their money in there; and it is the people who have built the railroad by taking stock and paying for their subscriptions who are affected by this legislation. It is very harsh and very wrong. It is true we have the power to amend or repeal this charter, and this provision in this appropriation bill proposes to do that. But we know that that is not a fair way of proceeding, to repeal charters or to amend charters. Men have no notice: they can not bring forward the facts or the circumstances to the attention of the proper committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia, to look into this matter and to ascertain what were all the circumstances.

Now, I am not advised, while I am advocating this amendment, whether this road, or any part of it, is upon an embankment, or whether it is through a cut, or on a level. My impression is that that part of High street, in the center of the street through which this road passes, according to the provision of the act of Congress, is precisely in the location we authorized the company to put it. The widening of a street, either by making a deep cut or a fill is a very difficult work, and I am not certain but both have to be done. Perhaps some Senator can inform me about that.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I have given this matter some little attention; in fact I introduced a bill here for the opening of Thirty-seventh street for the purpose of enabling people driving in carriages with their families to escape this dangerous track that had been built there on High street. When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations spoke to me about the arrangement which he proposed to make to widen this street so as to connect with Thirty-fifth street and avoid to a great extent the travel on this narrow part of the road, I thought it was a very fair proposition to ask this company to pay this small amount. It is only for a short distance, and it does not affect their main line down in the city. It can not cost a great deal of money. The charter is a very valuable charter, and, though the road may not pay now, it will pay hereafter.

Mr. VEST. How much will it cost to do this work?

Mr. McMILLAN. I can not tell exactly, because they have to widen the street, but there is no heavy work to be done there. After this company obtained its charter, built the road on this narrow street and built the road up High street, they never fixed the street at all, but they left it just as it was. They never leveled the street at all. The result is that a man driving there has to go right into a ditch to get rid of the cars. If the company had treated the public a little differently, leveled the road and made it possible for carriages to pass over it, I have no doubt the people of Georgetown and the people of Washington would not have had so much fault to find with it. But now it is actually impassable. This piece of road provided for in the bill is not a very great distance. I do not think it will be a very great hardship for this company to be asked to pay the expense.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand under the provisions of the bill it will cost $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the estimate.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would say in that connection that the District Committee have decided that hereafter these country roads shall be protected and that no company shall be chartered, if the committee can prevent it, unless it has its right of way entirely free from the roadway which has been laid out.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the District Committee will protect the streets somewhat, as well.

Mr. McMILLAN. We are going to do that if we can.

Mr. CULLOM. That has not been done heretofore.

Mr. MORGAN. There is another question about this matter. The private owners, I am informed, on either side of this street have been permitted for thirty or forty years to encroach upon it, and perhaps to the extent of 40 or 50 feet have appropriated the public land of the city of Georgetown to their own private purposes, and yet we find these men are to escape entirely from all the punishment which we are inflicting upon the Tennytown Railroad, and the whole matter is to be dumped upon that corporation, I suppose, because it is a corporation; but that corporation represents only the people of this District who have subscribed their money to it, and I insist again that it is a very great hardship to require them to take upon themselves the whole expense of rectifying that which the Congress of the United States has permitted to take place there in the way of the encroachment of private owners upon that street.

If the encroachments of these private owners had been removed, or if they had been compelled to go back to their proper lines heretofore, there would have been no difficulty, perhaps, about this street at all, but it would have been wide enough and good enough for the accommodation of the public. They are the people who brought this hardship upon the railroad company and upon the community. I think the committee ought to proceed at least now on the line that I suggest, and if Congress think proper let them put one-half the expense upon this railroad company, but let us see if, on a proper adjustment of this matter, the owners of the adjacent lots, who have made these encroachments, ought not themselves to bear at least one-half of this burden.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and largely intrusted by the Senate to see that the rights of the public are maintained, and also that the corporations shall have their fair treatment, has told the whole story about this matter.

Mr. MORGAN. He has not said anything about these encroachments of private owners on that road, I understand. Has the Senator from Michigan made any mention of that?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; I have not.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a very important matter.

Mr. HALE. The railroad company, when it got this charter, which nobody would father, built the road in the most reckless defiance of public rights, ran its track through the center of the narrow street, and did not even look to the care and safety of the street. Whoever has gone along since over this way has been obliged to run into the ditch, as the Senator from Michigan has said.

Now, it is found that this road, over which this company got its charter, has a width ample to protect the public. It is to be opened and paved, and all that is asked here is that this company with this valuable franchise shall do now precisely what, if any attention had been called to it at the time, it would have been compelled to do at first, that is, pave this street. Can anybody give any reason why it should not?

All that has been said is that it seems hard that it should pay the whole, and that therefore we had better let up on it; because it is not making any money now that we should ask it to pay but half. If it is hard that these corporators should pay the whole, it is hard that they should pay half. They have got, as the Senator from Michigan has said, a very valuable franchise, and whether they are making money or not now, they were glad to put their money in there, and in the end it will be one of the most valuable properties about Washington.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state to the Senator from Maine that, while it may be true that it may hereafter be very valuable property, it will be after these people have been driven out who are not able to hold it and pay $26,000, and a new company can come in and absorb this, and perhaps that is the bottom of the whole business.

Mr. HALE. Contrast the treatment which this company has had which is now importing Congress that it shall not pave this little part of the road which it occupies—contrast its treatment with that of some other companies. When the Rock Creek Railroad Company was chartered, we obliged that company to find its own right of way, to condemn lands, to pay the value of them, do its own grading, let the public streets alone, and gave them no avenues, and we put upon that company burdens of hundreds of thousands of dollars compared with what this company has had to bear.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will allow me, the bridge alone that that company has built at Rock Creek must have cost $130,000 or $140,000.

Mr. HALE. I am obliged to the Senator.

Mr. McMILLAN. We granted a charter at the last Congress to build a railroad from the other side of the Potomac at Arlington, near the Three Sisters, in which we compelled the company to build a bridge across the Potomac that will cost $200,000 at least.

Mr. HALE. Precisely. Any one of these items that we have obliged other companies to expend in the way of bridges will six times swamp the little sum that is asked of this company now for paving this street which it has destroyed; and yet this company comes in and finds its advocates here to declare that it is hard that we should oblige it to pay the whole of this sum of $26,000, when we oblige other companies to build bridge after bridge, costing from $100,000 to $200,000 each.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the concluding proviso in the act of March 24, 1890:

And provided further, That said railway shall be located on such side of the roadway as may be indicated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The whole jurisdiction was placed in the hands of the Commissioners. What have the Commissioners been doing?

Mr. HALE. All of these acts have that provision. They followed the letter of the law. There is no doubt about that. As somebody has said here, why should we oblige this company to pay this money when they have not violated the law? They got this law through to the surprise of everybody, and nobody will father it. They then come in and want to take advantage of their own wrong. Undoubtedly the provisions of the bill that Congress passed looked out for these people, because they drew the bill themselves; and it is no answer, when we are seeking to subject them, not to hardship but to an ordinary burden in the course of the transaction of public business, that we shall take this matter in hand, as we are permitted to do by the terms of the act, and vary this charter at any time.

It is to me a wonder, Mr. President—like the Senator from Missouri I ought to be more fatalistic and cease to wonder—that whenever any attempt is made to make a railroad corporation in the District of Columbia contribute its portion to the public burdens, it finds advocates here who declare it is not fair, when here are a thousand feet or less of road that this company has heretofore ruined, which we seek to make it put in order, so that the public can travel over it, and Senators declare that it is hard on this company to oblige them to do it.

Instead of discussing this question we ought to be discussing the question of whether this company shall not be obliged to take up its tracks entirely and find its roadway outside of the street, as we have obliged other companies to do. This has been a favorite company. No company has had the favors that this has. It was allowed to select its avenues, the choicest and best leading into the country, run its line through them, destroy their use, and oblige men to go off elsewhere so as to get out into the country. Here is an opportunity to make the evil less, and this great company is asked to pave part of the roadway to the extent of twenty-five or twenty-six thousand dollars.

Senators say it is hard to make them pay more than $13,000. I do not see the difference. If we are going to exempt this company, if we are going to wait until they begin to make money, and do not ask them to pay anything until then, let us do all the paying for them. If they are not paying dividends, when their track needs repairs, let Congress furnish the new rails, and if their funds are not enough to pay their officers and employees, then let Congress pay them, because it is hard for them to pay their employees! Let us help them! There is no end to this. The truth is it ought to end here. The company ought to be glad to get off with paying this small sum.

The Senator from Michigan, who is vigilant in looking after these things, and who knows all about this matter, voices his committee in saying what ought to be done here. I hope the Senate will stand by the action of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think that there is any more impropriety in advocating what a Senator thinks is a just thing on this floor than there is for a Senator to get up here and lampoon Congress and plead the baby act on what we have enacted solemnly and deliberately. I think Congress is perhaps able to take care of the District of Columbia; at all events it has been compelled to do it very much against what I think is the best policy to be adopted in regard to the government of this city, at least the American policy, if not the best.

The Committee on Appropriations seems to have taken charge of all this business of reforming all the laws of corporations, charters, and the like, in the District of Columbia. Why not leave it to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] and his committee, allow that matter to come before that committee, and let it have a fair investigation and debate on this floor without voting it on appropriation bills?

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows, by the rules of the Senate, that the question of appropriations for these streets, the paving of them, and all that, is found and settled upon the District appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Not always.

Mr. HALE. That is the rule, and in this case the Committee on Appropriations is backed up by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia bring his bill in here and let us have a proper discussion of it without the embarrassment of its being attached to an appropriation bill. That is the fair way to do the thing, not proposed to amend or alter the charter upon accusations which, I am informed, are not correct. I am so informed by gentlemen of very high respectability, and I know personally many persons in this city have taken stock in this railroad company because they thought it was a fair investment. It has never paid a cent of dividends, may never pay a cent of dividends, and the result of this legislation, I think, will be simply to break up this company and transfer it into the hands of some speculators. That is not infrequently done here.

The harsh legislation of Congress prohibits men to make fair and just investments upon the merits of property like this, and prohibits them from enjoying the benefits of their investment by putting burdens upon them that they can not afford, by reason of which they are compelled to sell out their stock, go into bankruptcy and liquidation, and the property passes into the hands of somebody else.

This seems to be, according to the opinion of the Senator from Maine, a very valuable corporation, and yet it will be in the hands of people who can not hold it if these enormous burdens are put upon it. Here is a judgment of condemnation; here is a fine, and nothing but a fine, imposed upon this company for some dereliction that the Senator from Maine thinks he has discovered, perhaps when his carriage horses may have been scared in passing over this road.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is very much distressed because some morning he may wake up and find a street-car line progressing through the city of Washington. That may be, Mr. President, but after all there is nothing that contributes as much to the happiness and comfort and health and welfare of the common population of this city and of the great number of visitors, too, who do not happen to have large sums of money in their hands, as this street-railway system. While it is a system to be regulated, it is nevertheless a system to be encouraged.

It is the poor man's way of getting through the town, and I think there is scarcely a road, not even that Belt line that the Senator from Missouri says has its tracks above the level of the streets, that could be dispensed with without inconvenience to a very large number of people who need this assistance. I have never seen a community in my life where there was as few enormously rich men and such a vast mass of poor people as there are in Washington City. They are drawn here by the invitation of the Government to hold minor offices and the like, in the employ of the Government of the United States, to educate their children, etc., and we have a very large number of impecunious people. They are an industrious people, a good people, for I do not believe that the streets of any city of America, or in the world, present as little that is offensive to the people who pass along them at any time of the night or day as Washington City. According to the outside appearance of it, according to what happens here night and day, we would call it one of the best regulated and one of the most moral cities in the world. There is no question of that.

It is the most orderly city I ever saw. So then, in contributing to the welfare and the happiness and the comfort of this people, we are not violating any of the great laws of government or the proprieties of legislation. Congress has to give due consideration to all these measures. This subject has been twice before Congress, and these provisions have been put into the statutes with care, and I maintain that they have been put into them without lobbying and without any incorrect operations on the part of the persons interested.

The fact is I do not believe any bill of this character or any bill of any other character passes through the Senate of the United States in consequence of its being lobbied. I have never seen a bill passed here that I thought had the least touch of dishonesty about it, and it does not become us to get up here and plead that an act has been surreptitiously passed, then surreptitiously amended, that lobbyists have been about, that Congress has been asleep, and that Senators have not been paying attention to the public interests, have not been taking care of the general welfare of the people. I can not be induced to vote upon a hypothesis of that sort against or for any measure. I must take what is recorded in the statutes of the United States as having been honestly and honorably put there.

These people have built there, they have spent their money upon the foundations that we have laid for them. Here are your Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are authorized expressly by the proviso to this last act of 1890, to indicate where this line of road shall be put. Now, what have they been doing? I do not hear that they are arraigned here for neglect of duty. Doubtless their attention was called to this subject. Senators say that that provision is in every such bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That discretion given to the Commissioners applies to that portion of the road lying west of the junction of the Tennytown road, and does not include the portion of the road that is now under debate.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, if I am incorrect about the part of the road to which this proviso refers—

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking about the act of the 24th of March, 1890.

Mr. MORGAN. At the same time the Commissioners have made no complaint here of this company. They have had the duty resting upon them. I do not hear of any report of the Commissioners condemning it or saying that the company has placed the road in the wrong place, that it obstructed the highway or is impeding travel. Nothing of that sort has been done, and I claim this is very harsh and surprising legislation. If this had come in the form of a bill reported and placed upon the Calendar, somebody would have attended here, evidence would have been produced to have brought the correct information before the Senate of the United States, but the first we hear of it, it originates in the Appropriations Committee room.

No amendment was offered to this bill in the Senate and sent to the committee, but it is the work of the committee itself, with no notice given, no opportunity for defense; and yet because I arise here and say in my opinion this is harsh legislation and unjust in its character, the Senator from Maine rather impeaches me for being always ready to cry out hardship in favor of a corporation.

No, Mr. President, I have as little to do with corporations as any man in the world. I have as much desire and have as frequently tried to put the hand of control upon them as any man in this body, according to my feeble ability. I have been instant "in season and out of season" to try to control the corporations here. I have not been hand in glove with any of these great arrangements by which this city or any part of the United States is controlled, with national banks, or any of the plans of the great corporations of this country.

On the contrary, while I have been willing to do them justice, I have been in a sense inimical to them; that is to say, I have been always anxious that they should have no more power than was absolutely necessary to carry on such part of their functions as made for the general welfare of the people. I feel no embarrassment in the world in getting up here and asking the committee who have originated in this appropriation bill this new measure of appeal, which has never been before the legitimate committee of the District of Columbia for a hearing—I feel no embarrassment in saying that this is a harsh fine to place upon a company that is unable to bear it, and I merely ask that the committee, with all their great powers, will have a little mercy, and at all events postpone one-half of this amendment, one-half of this fine, one-half of this penalty, until the subject can be looked into. I have only had an hour to study it, or less time even than that. At the same time my information comes from sources that I do not discredit in the slightest degree. I believe just as much in the statements made to me about this as in the statements of any person in the world.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator the act from which he was reading a moment ago?

Mr. MORGAN. I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The present occupant of the chair understands that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee was announced as agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the announcement was made that the amendment of the committee as thus amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The discussion has proceeded upon the assumption that no vote had been taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is the desire of the Senate that the amendment of the committee shall be considered open, as well as the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, the Chair will so rule; otherwise there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The discussion has proceeded, as I said, upon the assumption that the subject was still open. I did not know that any vote had been declared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be regarded as pending to the amendment of the committee, and both will be considered open.

Mr. HARRIS. Both amendments remain open, the committee amendment and the amendment proposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so considered.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is no question between the people who use these roads and anybody else. The company has got its charter and built its road in a way that has been described, and now, as an incident to this privilege, finds not suddenly—for this company is not taken unawares; it is not fighting for the people—it finds, as an incident to the great privilege which it has got, that a certain portion of its track needs to be paved for the convenience of the whole public. There is no surprise to this company in this. This condition might occur at any time. The company all the time must take notice. If next year it should be found that another piece of the road that this company occupies needs to be paved and the company has neglected to pave it, the Committee on Appropriations would have to put it on the bill, because by the rules of the Senate that committee takes charge of roads and appropriations for paving, and always decides what part shall be paid by the public and what part by the companies, what part by the nation and what part by the District.

So there is no surprise here. I do not need to repeat and I do not want to repeat what has already been said. It is a small sum. It is not to be compared with what we put upon other companies. The company ought to be glad to get off as cheaply as this.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, whether there has been any consideration by that committee of the cost of this work and the probable effect upon this corporation if the entire amount of this liability is thrown upon it.

Mr. HALE. The committee has no expectation or fear from its investigation that the payment of this small sum of anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 (it has been stated at $26,000, but I do not think it will cost that) will be any serious mischief to these people. It is not a large sum compared with their plant and compared with their resources. It is not a burdensome thing. If we were putting a half million dollars on this company, or if we were obliging them to take up their trucks and find their own right of way, as the Rock Creek Company had to do, it might be said we were interfering with their existence and that we were seeking to stamp the breath of life out of the company; but it is not anything of that kind.

It is an incident of their occupation and their privilege, and I notify the committee that next year if it is found that another portion of the road that they occupy ought to be paved, it is within the jurisdiction of Congress to provide that they shall pave it. It will not be very hard if they have to do it. This other road had to do all its grading, buy its land, and spend hundreds of thousand of dollars. It had to build bridges. They did not come in and ask that we should build them. They paid the bills.

Mr. FRYE. Do you require here that they shall pave anything more than the roadway?

Mr. HALE. Nothing more than in the midst of the street.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the Rock Creek road, as the Senator has said, has done an immense service to this city.

Mr. HALE. And has spent an immense amount of money.

Mr. FAULKNER. It has spent, I think, thus far, between $400,000 and $500,000 in its improvements. But the Senator must take into consideration also, when he examines into the question, that where these companies spend large amounts which would not be justified by reason of the patronage that they receive in the transportation of passengers, they have ulterior ends which necessarily affect private interests of their own. They own large bodies of land there, and they could afford probably to make a very large expenditure which would not be reimbursed by the return from the passenger travel of the road but in the building up and enhancement in value of the property through which the road runs, which is owned mostly by themselves. At the time the Rock Creek road was chartered there was no road laid out.

I am perfectly willing to vote for what is fair and just in reference to this matter, but I think that we ought to be satisfied that we are not doing an injustice to this corporation. I think in some instances we have done injustice to them. We have required corporations, and I voted myself in favor of it, to pay judgments which were declared null and void by the Supreme Court of the United States. We required them to pay a large amount of money, and yet I thought the equities were in favor of the District, and I voted even in a case of that kind to require them to pay it. We have also required the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company to expend, I suppose, not less than $3,000,000 to give greater facilities to the people by a better road along Pennsylvania avenue and connected with it. Wherever the expenditures are at all equal to the receipts or will benefit the road and also the District and will not operate too harshly upon them I am in favor of perfecting the service of street railways. I believe that the Metropolitan and the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Companies have complied with the law in reference to laying the rails on a level with the surface of the street, and in every other respect I believe those roads are complying with the provisions of law.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. He has large familiarity with the management of this District from his valuable service on the District Committee. Will the Senator inform the Senate, while Congress has been obliging these other roads to pay thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars for the public convenience up to this day, what has Congress required this company to pay?

Mr. FAULKNER. I know of no instance in which Congress has required any railroad company to pave a street except between the rails and two feet on either side. I do not know of any instance in which Congress has required any corporation to which it has granted a privilege similar to this, to grade a street if the grade was established at the time the corporation was granted the privilege of using the street.

Mr. HALE. No; but it has obliged them to do other things in the way of adopting a certain method of motive power. It has obliged them to build bridges entirely at their own expense, involving sums of money, ten and twenty and thirty times larger than this amount, and this is the first that has been asked of this company.

Mr. FAULKNER. In the case of the Rock Creek road that was not required by Congress, but it was asked as a privilege by the corporation when it applied to Congress for the franchise which it obtained. The bill which was presented on behalf of that corporation had all those provisions in it. There was no street then laid out through which they desired to run, and they had to grade the street in order to accomplish the purposes which they had in view. They had provided in that very bill when it was presented that the bridge over Rock Creek should be paid for by the company. I do not know of an instance in which, after the franchise has been granted, a regrading even has been charged to the corporation that had the privilege of running upon the street.

Yet that consideration will not affect my vote. If this matter has been properly investigated and it is not too severe a tax upon this corporation, I should be willing to go with the Committee on Appropriations; but when we required the Washington and Georgetown road to lay down the cable system, to change its motive power, to change its rails, as we did the Metropolitan road, we investigated thoroughly as to the ability of both those corporations to do it, as to their capacity to stand under the tax to be imposed upon them; and having once become satisfied of that we then determined to bring up the roads to the very highest state of efficiency.

Mr. HALE. That involved some millions of dollars.

Mr. FAULKNER. Three million dollars, at least, in the case of the Georgetown road.

Mr. VEST. While we are upon this question I should like to have some information from the District of Columbia Committee. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia, while the committee has made this and that road comply with the law, why it is that the Belt Line have never been compelled to do it? They have never observed that law any more than if they were not under the jurisdiction of Congress.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not know anything in reference to the Belt Line. I never travel over it, and I do not know whether they have complied with the law or not. I assume that they have not done so from what the Senator from Missouri has said.

Mr. VEST. I travel on it every day.

Mr. FAULKNER. But I desire to state for myself and not for the Committee on the District of Columbia that it is our province and duty to pass legislation, not to execute the laws. There are other persons whose function it is to see that the laws passed by Congress are properly executed. That does not belong to the District Committee. I did not know there was any violation of the provisions of law in reference to that question by the Belt Line, but I assume that it is true from what the Senator says.

Mr. President, before I am willing to vote for this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations I should like to be satisfied, as that question has been raised by the Senator from Alabama, whether it would really be almost equivalent to the confiscation of this company's property.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether he supposes that the expenditure of anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 by this corporation would be in anyway a death blow to the company? It seems to me that the Senator himself, who is a lawyer, a man of business, and an experienced legislator, can not have in his mind any fear lurking about that this provision is intended or will result as a serious mischief to this company's organization.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am frank to say that I can not answer that question to my satisfaction or that of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I can answer that question upon the information of a gentleman in whose veracity I have perfect reliance, that it would be what the Senator from Maine has said, a death blow to the present organization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdictions of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally for the purpose of proceeding with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside, and the consideration of the appropriation bill will be proceeded with. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think, when the Committee on Appropriations come forward with this amendment, they ought to be ready themselves to answer specific questions put by Senators who have examined to some extent at least into this matter, and who assert that it will be equivalent to the confiscation of the franchise and rights of this company. They ought to be able to state to the Senate that it will not prejudicially affect the company.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt whatever upon that subject. The committee had no belief that it was going to interfere seriously with the company.

Mr. FAULKNER. But has the Senator from Maine examined into the financial condition of this corporation to ascertain that fact?

Mr. HALE. If this company is in a condition now where this slight burden for the public use is going to bankrupt it and throw it out of business, it will be bankrupted and go out of business from other cause. If this simple item is going to destroy it, then it is a failing company and can not maintain itself, and Congress will never find itself able to deal with a corporation to put a reasonable burden upon it without being confronted by the declaration of somebody interested in the company that that very act will cause the ruin of the company. This is a chimera. It is not an actual fear. I do not say that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Alabama do not have these doubts about it; I am not impugning their sincerity, but the officers of the company have no fear of it. This company that is running the cars and getting public benefits increasing its property every year, which will be a great corporation with valuable property, is not going to be harmed by being obliged to pave these few hundred feet. It is not in that condition, and I repeat, if it is in that condition we can not help it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to say that I know nothing about this matter. My only information is what the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Maine have stated. I have no other information whatever. But I desire, in justification of myself and also of the District Committee, to say that any imputation by the Senator from Maine that the act was lobbied through originally, or that there was any improper course adopted either in committee or in the Senate in the passage of the bill originally, is an entire misapprehension upon his part as to the condition under which that act was passed.

Mr. HALE. All I said, which I firmly believe, is not that there was anything improper or any shade or approach of corruption, but that there was negligence on the part of the Senate generally in not looking into it. I know when we came back here and found that this company had taken possession of the street we had a discussion of it, and I could not find any Senator who knew that they had a right to do that; and they had afterwards to get an act through giving them authority to go into the middle of the street, as they claim, although the very act that they got through here to enable them to do this says at the close that—

Said railway shall be located on such side of the roadway as may be indicated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

I think it was the impression—I think the chairman of the committee had that impression—that this road would not be built right through the middle of the street, but that it would be on one side, out of the way. The Senator himself may have known about this, and may have followed it up, but if so he is the first Senator I have ever found who was ready to take the responsibility of saying that he knew what this company was going to do with that street. We could not find anybody at the time who knew.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to try and answer the question which the Senator from West Virginia has just now asked. Everybody who is familiar with the building of street railroads knows that there is a period of time when the road does not pay very much to the stockholders; that they have to wait until the road develops the country round about. This road is built out from the populous part of Georgetown. It is the only road running in the direction of Tennallytown. Senators here know that Tennallytown and its vicinity are growing very rapidly and that that is a portion of the District where property is bound to increase in value. These gentlemen undoubtedly have a valuable franchise. The last report which we have in our committee shows that their receipts amounted to the neighborhood of $35,000 or $36,000.

Mr. FAULKNER. Gross?

Mr. McMILLAN. Their gross receipts, from their earnings from passengers, and their expenses were about $30,000. I have not any hesitation in saying, as one who has had some experience in these matters, that this road will undoubtedly be a good investment. The stockholders may have to wait a year or two for the development of the region tributary to the road, but it is bound to be a valuable franchise, and I do not believe, looking at it in that light, that this is a very great hardship to that company.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to answer the question in regard to negligence, because, if I recollect aright, the original bill was reported by me from the District Committee. I do not know about the amendment to the charter, but the original bill, I am satisfied from my recollection, was reported by me, though I have not referred to the matter since the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I have just looked at the history of the legislation. The original bill was introduced in the Senate by the then Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, but that bill was indefinitely postponed. However, a bill having been introduced in the other House, the bill introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Kansas was adopted in the House as a substitute for the bill introduced there. It was passed there and came to the Senate and was reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] from the District Committee of the Senate, and was so passed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I remember that I had some connection certainly with the passage of the original bill, having reported it from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was the universal practice of that committee, whenever a bill affecting the interests of the city of Washington was before it, to refer it to the Commissioners of the District and to get their report either for or against the bill, or with suggestion of any amendments that they deemed proper.

I have not the slightest belief that any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia or its chairman was guilty of any negligence in reference to this matter. If the bill was not referred to the District Commissioners by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, it was because the bill had come from the other House and had been passed on there by the District Committee and the District Commissioners. It has been the universal practice to do that, so as to bring the attention of those who necessarily have their minds constantly directed to all these local matters to the bills that are before the District Committee so that they may suggest any amendment and give their opinion as to the advisability of the passage of the bill.

Then the bill is considered by a subcommittee and discussed fully by the whole committee, because I can say right here from my experience of five years in the District Committee that I know of no subcommittee that has ever been authorized to report bills that have not been passed upon before the whole committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Never.

Mr. FAULKNER. We have adopted that rule, believing that it is essential to the interests of this city and to good legislation that no subcommittee, even one composed of half the committee, shall have the power to pass on bills and report them to the Senate on behalf of the committee, but that every bill, before being reported by that committee, shall be voted upon when a quorum of the committee is present. I do not know of any exception to that rule. I do not think there has been any negligence on the part of the committee or on the part of those who reported the bill from that committee to the Senate. Perhaps if I had known the road as well as I do now I might have made some objection to its going up High street, but at that time, not knowing it personally, I did not see any reason to object to the bill when it had been passed by the House of Representatives and approved by the District Commissioners.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee who has charge of the bill if this street called High street was an open street in the city of Georgetown? I understand that it is located there. Was it an open street at the time the authority was given to the railroad company to lay their tracks?

Mr. ALLISON. It was.

Mr. MCPHERSON. What was the width of the street?

Mr. ALLISON. That I do not know. It is a very narrow street. Senators who have driven over it will know that it is the narrow street that turns towards Tennallytown right by the aqueduct.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is not the street then that is used for a carriage drive between the ferry and the Tennallytown road?

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, yes; I will ascertain the width of the street.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have heard somewhere mentioned in the debate that the carriage way is about 20 feet wide.

Mr. HALE. It is about 30 feet wide.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The citizens of this city and Georgetown had a right, an easement, in 20 feet of carriage-way room on that road when the permission was granted to this railroad company to lay down their tracks. I understand that the effect of laying the tracks in that street has simply been to deprive the people of the use of the street and confer it upon a railroad company; and that there is authority in the act incorporating the railroad company to amend that act and to compel the railroad company to provide a wider street.

I want to know what there is in that proposition which ought to receive the condemnation of any Senator. In the first place the street belonged to the citizens of the city. They paid for it. The street had been opened perhaps by public condemnation and by tax upon the property on the line, or upon the whole city; but it was proposed to permit the railway company to lay down a railroad track on the street, from which they were to derive a private benefit; and in granting that permission Congress simply deprived the people of their right to the use of the street because, as I understand, the railway company occupy the whole street.

We have granted railroad franchises in the city of Washington as they have been granted in many other cities, that could be sold to-day for millions of dollars. These people invested their money in this railroad property with the full knowledge that the Congress of the United States sitting here and acting as a board of aldermen or councilmen for this city, because it practically has no other lawmaking power, have the right at any time to require this railway company to give better railway facilities for the transit of people over their line, and in giving better facilities they may require them at the same time to occupy only so much or such portions of a public road as will not deprive the people of the right to use it.

I say the franchises granted here could to-day be sold for millions of dollars. It is a gift, a right of way to a railroad, where the business of the road is assured for all time, and is unlike any other railroad property where you undertake to build a line of railroad across an unpopulated country. Here the population exists; it is contributing to the profits and the business of the road; and I think that this railway company should be compelled at their own private cost and expense to widen the road, retaining the rights which have been granted them, and to widen the road in order that the public benefit may not be entirely lost from it; and that the tax should be imposed upon the company instead of anybody else. I have no sympathy with any argument—and I hear it often made in the Senate—in which we approach one of these railroad companies very gingerly, and the question is asked, Can the railway company afford all this? After granting them the free franchise upon a graded road, the street graded at public expense, then the question is, after they have invested their money in this kind of property, whether we have a right to make any exaction upon them with respect to surrendering some portion of the value of that right which we have granted to them for nothing to enable the people to have some rights upon that street.

It would seem to me as though it was about time that we began to deal with railroad companies in the District of Columbia as they ought to be dealt with. If I invest my money in a railroad property in the District of Columbia, believing it to be a good investment, as I presume these people have done, I do it at my own peril. I do it with the full knowledge that the Congress of the United States may amend that law and require some exaction from me provided it be made to appear that it is a just and equitable and reasonable one. I can see no inequity in this requirement. We require these railroad companies, if I am correctly informed in respect to the law, to pave inside their tracks and outside their tracks, and to maintain the trackway; and we have just as much right to say to them, "You shall widen this street." The Congress of the United States did not grant to this railroad company the exclusive right to use that street. The public have some rights there.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask how many tracks there are on the street?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know. There are enough, I understand, to completely occupy it and blockade it so that travel is very difficult, if not dangerous, in going through the street.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think myself that justice demands that this railroad company should pay either the whole or a large proportion of the expenditure necessary to make that way what it ought to be, and I shall so vote.

I rose, however, chiefly for the purpose of saying that inferentially the Senator from Maine, the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from New Jersey, criticize the action of the Committee on the District of Columbia in a way that seems to me hardly fair, and not kind nor just. I have for fourteen years, not in accordance with my wishes but in obedience to a duty, served on that committee, and I want to say frankly that in respect to chartering railroad companies in the District of Columbia I do not know of one single instance where the committee has consented to report a bill granting such a charter until the bill that had been introduced was referred to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and their scrutiny invited, and their report received as to the public necessity for the railroad, and as to the best method and the best location for such road.

In the light of the report of the District Commissioners and in the further light of all the information the committee could obtain from the localities to be served, the committee have responded invariably not to the demand of the people who asked the act of incorporation, but to what they understood to be the public demand and the public necessity.

I want to say further that in my fourteen years' experience on that committee, as organized at the various periods, I have served on no committee in this body that has given more careful attention to all the questions which have been submitted to it for its action. Like any other committee, it may commit errors and make mistakes, but it has been as vigilant, it has been as careful in scrutinizing the various propositions that have been submitted to it for its consideration and report as any other committee upon which I have had the honor of serving since I have been a member of this body.

I do not quite think the tone of criticism that has been indulged in here to-day is fair to the committee; nor is it such as I would be willing to make in respect of any one of the standing committees of this body.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is due to the Senator from Tennessee and the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia that I should disclaim any intention in any manner to criticize either the Senator from Tennessee or any member of that committee. I have done this: I have found fault with the methods that we have pursued with respect to railroads since the time that railroads were first organized in this District. I commend the committee for very much that it has done. It has, I understand, imposed a tax, which I think is perfectly right and proper, upon the receipts of these railroads, and in that way the city is benefited to the extent of that tax.

Speaking for myself, I believe that upon railroad property, wherever it is located, and especially if located within the limits of a city, if franchises are granted and a right of way is given without any purchase of property for right of way or even for making the roadbed, the tax should be very heavy. It should equal at least the tax of any private citizen's property in the city.

I do not criticize the committee with respect to this bill. I think, considering the plan that has always been followed (and I have been a member of that committee myself), I would have voted to grant this railroad company the power to lay its tracks upon High street; I would have done just as the committee have done, and therefore there is no ground for criticism by me upon the Senator from Tennessee or other members of the committee. Congress reserved the right to amend the act, and now it is proposed to amend it. Congress is simply exercising its reserved right under the original franchise, and proposes to say now to that railroad company: "Your road is laid upon High street. The street should be widened, and we demand of you that you shall pay the expense of widening it." The committee are not censured by me. I have no intention to censure them. We have reserved all the rights that we need and require with respect to this railroad company in their charter, and we are asking to-day to exercise those rights; that is all.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations have done nothing in this provision but what this railroad company obligated itself to perform, and that is that whatever the public necessity should require should be done, and that all its franchises should be held subject to this requirement; that is the tenure and the conditions on which all corporate rights are granted.

The railroad corporations of the District of Columbia have been immensely profitable. They have received, I am told, five or six times above their original stock valuation, and their original stock, as that of all railroad companies, is largely beyond the cost of construction. The value of a street railroad franchise in all municipalities is necessarily very great, and the prospective value is as much a part of the consideration value of the property as its present receipts.

The demand which has been made upon this company can not be regulated by its capacity to pay but by the necessity of the public. I do not think it was ever before heard of that while the citizen was taxed the corporation should be considered as exempt from the necessity of contributing to the public policy in the interest of the people.

Whether this corporation is able to perform this public duty, which is part of the consideration of its franchise, is somewhat immaterial. If they can not perform their obligations to the public, then some other persons must be found to take their place. All over this country it is a fact well known that corporations have been stocked far beyond their original cost; and that with this franchise as all other franchises of transportation there is granted a power of taxation of the people quite as direct and far more oppressive than that which is reserved to the people and their representative bodies.

As to whether this trifling imposition upon this corporation, possessing a franchise which of necessity must grow in value with the increase in population of this District, is to crush it out, it seems to me that there is nothing whatever to sustain this objection. The value of this franchise does not depend upon its receipts of to-day, which have been shown by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] to be large and to be growing, but it depends upon the prospective value, the prospective increase in population. The Committee on Appropriations could not have done otherwise in respect to the impositions which have been made upon other corporations in this District than to have recommended this provision.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Florida inform me what the width of that road is there where complaint is being made?

Mr. CALL. I do not know with accuracy.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator know at all, with accuracy or without accuracy?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Alabama should not ask me the question; he should know himself. His propositions are well founded. I know this about it. It was discussed in committee, and it was agreed by every one to be too narrow for public convenience.

Mr. MORGAN. The road?

Mr. CALL. The road.

Mr. MORGAN. As it originally stood?

Mr. CALL. It was said that there was necessity for widening it and for creating these additional facilities, and upon that subject the committee were all united. What the specific width is I do not undertake to say.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, we are going in the dark about this business, and the reason of it is that the case has not come from a committee that is in the habit of making reports upon bills. If the facts could be spread before the Senate in the form of a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia we should find a different state of case from that which has been presented here this morning. I have searched around and got some private information from some Senators on this floor about what the question is and what the facts are. I understand now that they amount about to this: This part of High street was perhaps not originally called that, but it was the Tennallytown road. According to the map it had a certain width, which the Senator from Iowa perhaps has ascertained and can inform me of. I have been trying for an hour to find out what the width of the street is, and I can not find anybody who can tell me. It may be 22 feet or it may be 50 feet; we do not know. The Senator from Florida does not know. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, does not know.

We do not know what the proper legal width of that street is, but one thing we do know, that for twenty or thirty or it may be for fifty years, or longer even than that, encroachments have been made upon what is now esteemed to be or supposed to be the east and west lines both of that street or that road, whatever you please to call it. Many other things have encroached there. There is a cemetery. That cemetery has a great many feet of frontage on the road, and I am informed that before the District of Columbia can tear up that road and make its proper width according to law they have to get the consent of the cemetery company to remove the graves and build a wall.

I suppose that is part of the expense that is to be put upon this railroad company. The expense is entirely indefinite. There is no sum fixed whatever. The sum the Commissioners may see proper to expend there, if it is a million dollars, this bill imposes upon the company. The tearing down of the cemetery, the removal of the dead bodies, if you can get the consent of the people to do it, or if the law compels them to consent to it, is part of this scheme. Does the Senator from Florida know anything about that?

Mr. CALL. That was discussed in the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I know it was discussed, but where is the report.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. There is no reason to suppose that there is any very immense cost involved, or that anything like a million dollars are to be expended in the removal of a few graves.

Mr. MORGAN. We do not know the situation at all. Here is a measure proposed that brings in an indefinite charge against this railroad company, when the Commissioners of the District of Columbia see proper to improve High street, to widen it out to its original boundaries, whatever they are; we do not know what they are at all. They can go on and widen it in accordance with their own will and judgment as to what work ought to be done there. It may cost $26,000 or $260,000 it makes no difference, and we saddle the whole of it by this bill on this corporation. Yet that committee have not furnished us, and in the debate now on the floor of the Senate we are not furnished with the facts. We are mulcting this company in what could not be less than $25,000 or $26,000, and we are doing it really without any knowledge of what the facts are. We do not know what it is going to cost.

Private owners, in addition to the cemetery company, or the cemetery corporation, or whatever it is there, have also encroached upon this road or this street, and they must be gotten rid of in some way or other through some process of law. Actually the boundaries of the street are not now ascertained, and nobody knows whether it can be done or not. No person knows whether the original measurement of this road has not been obliterated by adverse holdings of citizens who have built their improvements down to the line of the road, so supposed to be, and even by the dead who are buried on its side.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I supported this amendment in the committee which reported it, requiring the railroad company to pay the whole of the cost of this improvement in widening the street. I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said in regard to the looseness of Congress in granting charters to these various railroads, and when the proposition shall come in a few days before the body for granting another charter creating another means of destroying another one of the great boulevards here, I shall have something to say upon that matter.

As I said a moment since, when the proposition was presented to require this railroad company to pay the entire amount of this improvement of widening the street it met with my approval, and I voted for it. Since then I have examined the matter more carefully, and I am rather inclined to think that the proposition will be a hardship upon this company; that we are applying to them a rule we do not apply to any of the other existing railroad companies; that in the very bill which we are considering, in the amendments which were reported from the committee, we have adopted an entirely different measure, that is, to make the railroad company pay one-half of the amount.

As the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has said, and said well, in the case of the charter of this railroad company, as in all others, the District Commissioners, or the engineer officer of the District, it coming immediately under his charge, but with the approval of the whole board, recommended the location of this railroad on High street and then upon the road leading thence to Tennallytown; that when they located it on High street and on this road at the particular juncture here designated I understand that they knew that the street would not be wide enough to accommodate the railroad and leave sufficient room for carriages in the highway, but they had in mind and had perfect knowledge of the fact that the street had been encroached upon by private parties, and that more than one-half of the width of the street was occupied, as it is to-day, by private parties. Now the proposition comes to widen it.

The fault of locating the road is the fault of the District Commissioners as well as of the railroad company; and it seems to me that the only question is what amount we should make the railroad company bear. If it was a mistake, and I believe it was, in the location, Congress has determined that matter in all cases heretofore and in this bill by making the amount one-half.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. McPHERSON. If what he states is true, and I presume it is, that private parties have taken possession of the street, they certainly have no right there; and if the Commissioners will force them to move back their improvements on the fence line it certainly would not cost the railroad company much to have the street opened.

Mr. GORMAN. That is all there is in the proposition. It is not one improvement. Under the charter they are required to pave between the tracks and 2 feet beyond; but it is proposed to widen the street, to make private individuals remove their fences and buildings and what not, and put them back to the building line, and to make this railroad company pay the entire cost of grading it and putting it in the form of a street.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the street has been encroached upon by owners of property along the line unlawfully, certainly the Commissioners could have the property moved back without any expense to the public.

Mr. GORMAN. But it is proposed to make the railroad company pay the entire amount of that improvement.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; that is the whole proposition. There is nothing else in it. It is not a payment for making pavements.

Mr. President, what do we find upon an examination of the bill? Take the F street line of railroad, a rich corporation. They pay their dividends, and are able to make the improvements. They are thoroughly able, for the road has been in operation for a great many years, and runs through the center of the city. They were permitted to occupy the bridge across Rock Creek, on P street. They took the whole of that bridge for their use, except a small walkway on each side of the railroad. Public interest requires that there shall be a new bridge put up, the railroad company occupying the present structure almost solely. On page 24 of the bill we find the provision for the construction of a new bridge across Rock Creek at P street, and it is provided that the Metropolitan Company shall pay one-half of the cost of that construction and the District one-half. If that is the right measure, as I suppose it is, upon the recommendation of the Commissioners, then it does seem to me that the same rule should be applied to this smaller railroad.

We have this great railroad with a franchise on Pennsylvania avenue from Georgetown to the Navy Yard, the most valuable franchise I suppose to-day, certainly in this part of the country, paying 20 per cent dividend upon the capital stock and with a surplus nobody knows how much, with their six per cent bonds selling upon this market at 150. They occupy the bridge across Rock Creek at M street. They occupy at least the greater portion of it; but a new bridge is to be constructed. It is necessary for their change of motive power from horses to a cable line that there should be a new bridge, and on page 24 of the bill we provide that that bridge must be reconstructed for the public convenience and for the railroad. The District pays one-half and we require the railroad company to pay one-half.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is true that the recommendation came from the District Committee that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad should pay one-half and the District one-half, but that was because we have required the bridge to be the whole width of the street. It is now about half of the width of the street, and, as the Senator says, it deprives the public of the proper use of it. So we have compelled the bridge to be built the full width of the street, giving room enough for a street railway, room enough for a carriage way, and room enough for sidewalks, and then we ask the railroad company to pay one-half.

Mr. GORMAN. That is precisely as I understand the case.

Mr. McMILLAN. But in this other case the paving is only for a short distance, and the company do not pay for the street. They simply pay for improving one side of the street.

Mr. GORMAN. The distance has nothing to do with this case. In one case you want to make a small railroad company pay the entire cost of widening the street, if it is but for 1,000 feet, and the provision with reference to the Washington and Georgetown Railroad and the F Street Railroad is 300 feet. The principle is the same. The District Committee have come to the conclusion that one-half is the right allotment. If that be true, then we must apply it to all the roads and to this small road.

That is what has convinced me since the adjournment of the committee that we were in error. The Committee on Appropriations went beyond the recommendation of the District Committee, and it does not seem to be fair in the one case. There is no question about this new road. I have, like the Senator from Alabama in front of me, received this morning a statement from a gentleman as to whose integrity and knowledge of the affair I have no question. He says it is a new road and that the owners have not been able to make a dollar. They hope and expect to do so; and I believe, as the Senator from Maine says, that it will be a great charter in the future; but at present it would embarrass them. The point I insist on, however, is that we should not compare them with the Georgetown Railroad, the richest company in the District of Columbia, whose dividends are 20 per cent.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator remember that we have just put upon the Georgetown Railroad Company an immense burden in compelling them to change their entire plant and motive power and to spend, somebody said, $3,000,000? We have never put anything on this company whatever.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt, from my knowledge of the condition of these companies, that the Georgetown company, with its franchise running for twenty-five or thirty years, with a monopoly of the business, is more abundantly able to pay $5,000,000 than this company would be able to pay $50,000. I have no question about that. Left as it is to-day, requiring the Georgetown Railroad to have this new motive power, it is the most valuable franchise in this entire section of the country. It pays 20 per cent upon the capital stock, and I have no doubt that within a year I shall stand with the Senator from Maine in imposing upon them the additional burden of reducing their fare to 3 cents, which they can do and yet make 10 or 15 per cent upon their capital invested.

Mr. HALE. The Senator and I have always agreed in the policy of watching and restricting these railroads and putting proper burdens upon them, and the only way he and I will ever reach it is when the question comes up, as it does here, to make these roads contribute to the public burden. If whenever a case comes up we find reasons for letting them off, as the Senator is now finding reasons, he and I will find our work here in restraining and restricting them all the harder.

Mr. GORMAN. No, Mr. President, I am ready to go now, if the rule is a right one, and I am not certain that it is not, and apply the same requirement to all three of these roads in this very bill, making each of them pay for the whole improvement, if that is the right rule. But I do insist, since looking at the matter, that it is unjust to this company to make them pay the entire amount of the charge and only charge the other two great corporations one-half.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that anywhere in this city a selection can be made of a more valuable franchise than this company have in this very road? It is an exceptional case. There have been no burdens put upon them. This is the first time we have undertaken to make them contribute in any way. They are not like other roads. They have had everything their own way. It is a small matter we are asking from them.

Mr. GORMAN. I will go further than that, and join the Senator in the statement with regard to the recommendation of the District Commissioners in permitting this road to be located where it is that it was a great outrage. It ought never to have been permitted. It has destroyed one of the great drives out of this city, and they are nearly all destroyed. Begin in the eastern section of this city, and you have not built a bridge over the Eastern Branch but that there is a charter for a railroad to be constructed over it; there is not a drive out to any section of the city that there is not a horse railroad or an electric railroad on it, I think.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to correct the Senator from Maryland. We have not granted any charter to build a road on the two bridges, the Bennings bridge and the Eastern Branch bridge. There are applications for half a dozen roads to go over them, but we have not granted any such charter. In the case of the Bennings street road we have recommended that they build a bridge for themselves and that they shall not interfere at all with the highway. There have been no charters granted to go over the bridges.

Mr. GORMAN. There is a railroad across the Eastern Branch bridge, near the navy-yard.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am speaking of the new bridge.

Mr. GORMAN. I am speaking of the old one. There is one in the direction of Blandesburg; there is one in the direction of the Soldiers' Home on Seventeenth street, and on Fourteenth street. Then there is the road that is referred to here, that was built by a private corporation, on which they spent $500,000, the Woodley Lane road, which goes out towards Georgetown, and the sharp angle there at the top of the hill almost destroys it for a drive. Then comes another project, to take the Aqueduct bridge and use that. There are one or two steam roads projected, crossing at right angles and on grade, or running along the side of the river. So we shall be hemmed in and bound down by these roads on every street leading out until every drive will be practically destroyed.

I am ready to restrict them whenever we have the opportunity; but the point I make, after consideration of this matter, is that it is not fair in the same bill to have a different rule for these roads. If we are to make them pay for the whole cost of improvements and widening the streets (for these bridges are nothing but a widening of the streets), then let us apply that rule to all, but if one-half the expense is to be considered fair and is charged on the two great railroads, then one-half ought to be applied to this road.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Maryland does not sustain his conclusions. There is no principle involved in this matter as to the rate of charge or the burdens to be imposed on either road. You can not make a principle out of that. It is a question that must be determined by the public convenience and the necessity for improvement, and whether the railroad company in the specific instance ought to perform that duty. It is true that the matter may be regulated somewhat by the financial condition of the company, but the Senator from Michigan has well discriminated in this case. In the one case there is a bridge to be constructed because of a new public necessity. In the other case there is a street already made and dedicated to the public use, and the question whether the use of that street shall be destroyed by this franchise or privilege given to a few private individuals is the only question to be decided.

In the case of the bridge, there is an artificial structure to be made new. In the other case there is a public property already created and ready for use. Upon what possible ground it can be said that when the use of this public property is granted to individuals they should not be required to keep it in a condition in which the public may make use of it I can not conceive. This is a private interest granted to individuals in a public property and a public use, and the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand it, is that this private interest should not be permitted to destroy the public use.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will examine the question he will find that that is the identical case of the P street bridge. It is in the exclusive use of the railroad tracks. They occupy the whole bridge except two little walks on the sides. The improvement is not for the purpose of accommodating the public travel or to make width enough there to allow a carriage to pass, as is the case with this road.

Mr. CALL. So I agree; but a public bridge is required not only by the use of the corporation and its franchise but by the public convenience in connection with it for other purposes; and in that case we provide that the bridge to be built, not the old bridge, shall be made of the same width with the street in order that it may accommodate the public uses, and at the same time that the use of the corporation shall be provided for, and that they shall pay one-half. It seems to me that that is a very proper discrimination, and in that case a proper rule, because the new structure to be built is to be used conjointly for the two uses. But in the case of the street already built, already used by the public, and which has been destroyed by this franchise to private persons, the committee simply ask that the corporation shall put the street which has thus been rendered incapable of use in a condition in which it may subserve the purposes of a highway.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 16, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Plats of subdivisions outside of Washington and Georgetown: To pay the expenses of such surveys as may be necessary to enable the Commissioners of the District to determine if plats of subdivisions of land within the District offered for record have been made in conformity to the "Act to regulate subdivision of land within the District of Columbia," approved August 27, 1888, §5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 16, after line 24, to insert:

Plan for extension of highways: To enable the Commissioners of the District to prepare a plan for the extension of a permanent system of highways over all that portion of the District of Columbia not included within the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "sewers" in section 1, on page 17, line 7, to increase the appropriation "for cleaning and repairing sewers and basins," from "$40,000" to "$45,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 17, line 9, to increase the appropriation "for replacing obstructed and insufficient sewers" from "$20,000" to "$25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 17, line 11, to increase the appropriation "for main and pipe sewers" from "$65,000" to "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 17, line 14, after the words "intercepting sewer," to insert:

As a part of, and in accordance with, the general plan for sewers recommended by the Board of Sanitary Engineers, appointed by the President of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, and whose report is published in House Executive Document numbered 445, first session, Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish the Secretary to read the rest of the paragraph without action upon any amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments to the entire paragraph.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 17, line 22, after the word "northwest," the committee report to strike out "sixty thousand" and insert "one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

To run from the Potomac River near Easbys Point to near the intersection of Fifteenth and E streets northwest, $112,500.

Also, on page 18, line 9, the committee report to add the following proviso:

Provided further, That the plans for said sewer shall be approved by a consulting civil and sanitary engineer, who shall be appointed by the President, and whose services shall be paid for from this appropriation; and who shall also make personal inspection of the work in detail as it progresses.

So as to make the paragraph read:

For commencing the construction of a main intercepting sewer as a part of, and in accordance with, the general plan for sewers recommended by the Board of Sanitary Engineers, appointed by the President of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, and whose report is published in House Executive Document No. 445, first session, Fifty-first Congress, to run from the Potomac River near Easbys Point to near the intersection of Fifteenth and E streets northwest, $112,500: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to enter into contract for the construction of the whole of the said sewer, at a cost not to exceed $25,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law. And the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to construct the said sewer where necessary across lands and reservations belonging to the United States: Provided, That after the construction of the said sewer the excavated portions of the said lands and reservations shall be restored to their original condition from the appropriations herein provided for: Provided further, That the plans for said sewer shall be approved by a consulting civil and sanitary engineer, who shall be appointed by the President, and whose services shall be paid for from this appropriation; and who shall also make personal inspection of the work in detail as it progresses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendments of the committee to the paragraph will be treated as one question.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is acted upon, in line 13, on page 18, in the last proviso, after the word "appropriation" I move to insert—

At a rate fixed by the President.

That relates to the compensation of the consulting engineer. These are amendments to perfect the text. I suppose there will be no objection to them.

Mr. GORMAN. None in the world.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "progresses," in line 14, at the close of the paragraph, I move to insert:

And shall forward all approved plans, and report the result of all inspection, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

So as to read:

And who shall also make personal inspection of the work in detail as it progresses, and shall forward all approved plans, and report the results of all inspection, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator object to any part of the amendment?

Mr. GORMAN. No, I only wish to ask the chairman of the committee, for I have not had an opportunity to read carefully the amendment until this moment, whether it is the intention of the amendment to follow out the plan recommended by the commission, consisting of Messrs. Hering, Gray, and Stearns, found in Executive Document No. 445, of the first session of the last Congress, or whether by the last provision, on page 18, in which "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be made the needful surveys and investigations, and cause to be prepared all the detailed plans, specifications, and estimates necessary for constructing in the District of Columbia a system of works for the disposal of the sewage," etc., it is intended to place in the hands of the Commissioners and their engineers who may be employed the power to change this plan or to make a new one.

Mr. ALLISON. It certainly was not our intention, and if the words are not there I think they should be inserted. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it. I think, in line 10, on page 18, it should read, "that the detailed plans for said sewer," that is to say, the working plans for said sewer shall be approved by this consulting engineer. The general plan has been marked out by the sanitary commission or sanitary board; and our own purpose in the committee was—and I endeavored to execute that purpose in framing the amendment—

Mr. GORMAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. ALLISON. To provide that this sewer should be a part of this general plan, and that when the detailed plans for this portion should be made by the Engineer of the District of Columbia they should receive the approval of this consulting engineer. So I think the word "detailed" before "plans" should be inserted.

Mr. GORMAN. So I understood the intention of the Senator, as it was of the committee, and I thought it well to call attention to it, so that we may have no mistake about the construction of the language.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 10, after the word "the," I move to insert the word "detailed;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the detailed plans for said sewer shall be approved by a consulting civil and sanitary engineer, who shall be appointed, etc.

Mr. HALE. I had not noticed the print before. I thought it was the understanding that that was to be in.

Mr. ALLISON. I prepared the amendment with that understanding. The Senator from Maryland raises the point that the words as they appear here may not cover just what we intended.

Mr. GORMAN. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to put words in that will.

Mr. HALE. That will exactly cover what the committee intend.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 18, after line 14, to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be made the needful surveys and investigations, and cause to be prepared all the detailed plans, specifications, and estimates, necessary for constructing in the District of Columbia a system of works for the disposal of the sewage of said District, and for the protection of the low portions of the city of Washington against damage by local flooding and freshets, which system of works shall be in accordance with the general plan recommended by the Board of Sanitary Engineers appointed by the President of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, and whose report is published in House Executive Document No. 445, first session Fifty-first Congress, and may employ all requisite assistance for said purpose, which said plans, specifications, and estimates shall be approved by the consulting civil and sanitary engineer hereinbefore provided for. And for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, line 6, after the word "approved," I move to insert the words "from time to time." Otherwise it might be inferred that this whole detailed plan should be completed before it is presented to the consulting engineer.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, this is a very important provision in the bill. The matter of sewerage in this District is one of the greatest concern to everybody who has had occasion to examine into it. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and his committee two years ago inserted a provision in the appropriation bill providing for the appointment of a commission of three sanitary engineers to take this whole matter into consideration and report to Congress. The result of their examinations is before us in the document referred to in the pending amendment; but in that report they have three or four or half a dozen suggestions, practically all on the same plan, differing in character as to the size of the sewers and the outlets and the pumping arrangement.

Mr. HALE. And location sometimes.

Mr. GORMAN. And locations. Either of these, they claim, would perfect the sewerage system. Their description of it in its present condition is alarming. It was constructed, I think principally, by army engineers who had had no special training and knowledge of that class of work, and the result I think is that we are simply living in the lower section of this city over a great cesspool, with no way at all to carry off the sewage. It is marvelous that the health of the town is as good as it is.

But what I want to get at, and I do it for the purpose of having the opinion of the Senator from Iowa that it may guide the gentlemen who are to do this great work, having disposed of the commission of scientists and provided for the employment of someone to be appointed by the President, is whether they are at liberty to take any one or all of these systems which have been proposed. I understand that it is to be in accordance with the recommendations made in Executive Document No. 445. Has the Senator in his mind, after consultation with the engineers, any knowledge as to which of the recommendations will be acted upon?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. GORMAN. I do, and that is all I want to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I take it that the consulting engineer may adopt not any new plan, but that he may adopt suggestions respecting the general plan. For example, this board of consulting engineers suggest that the sewage of this city may be thrown into the Potomac at two or three different points. Then they suggest (I so regard it) that the best is a point crossing the Eastern Branch by a tunnel or pipe having the pumping station at the foot of New Jersey avenue, and emptying the material into the Potomac River below Giesboro Point, which is, I believe, the narrowest point in the river between here and its mouth, with a quick and rapid current, and with deep water.

So the Commissioners think that ultimately the whole sewage of this city should be thrown into the river by means of pumping machinery, etc., at that point. They have said, however, that it might be done at what is called Gravelly Point, which is a point, I believe, on the Virginia side. They say it might be thrown in there, but they think it would be only a question of time when that should be changed. I have no doubt that any consulting engineer will adopt what might be regarded as the plan suggested by these three eminent engineers.

So far as I am concerned as a member of this body, when that matter is brought to my attention for action I shall be in favor of appropriations of money that will put this city and this District into the best possible condition of sewerage. I believe that that is the best economy. If Senators will examine the details of this bill they will see, as the Senator from Maryland very well knows, that the increases we have made here have been made chiefly for the purpose of supplying this city with additional sewerage and additional water and conveniences for securing health. If I had supposed it could have passed the ordeal of another coordinate body, I should have been willing to double the appropriation this very year for this sewerage.

This sewerage system when completed will be completed upon the best modern plans and methods. They have been prepared by three of the best sanitary and mechanical engineers in the United States, and we have provided here that one of them, as we supposed, is to be employed as the consulting engineer to execute this work. It will cost when completed a very large amount of money, but it is so devised that it can be completed in detachments, as it were. The first sewer is the most important one of all for present construction.

Mr. MCPHERSON. May I ask the Senator if this plan involves the pumping of the sewage?

Mr. ALLISON. It does eventually, a portion of the time.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Are we to have the continual expense of pumping the sewage for all future time? Is it not possible to cast the sewage into the river here in front of the city?

Mr. ALLISON. We certainly are to have it. The annual cost of that pumping of sewage is given here. It will not exceed $21,000, and there is no doubt, at least I think there is no doubt, as a layman having no special knowledge upon this subject, that the project and plan of these engineers is absolutely necessary to the future health of this city. If the Senator from New Jersey will take up House Executive Document No. 445, Fifty-first Congress, first session, and will read it carefully, as I have read it, and if he will examine as I have examined the maps accompanying this statement, I think he will readily agree with me that the plan here is a plan that should be entered upon and prosecuted with as much vigor as the condition of the finances of the District of Columbia will justify.

The first sewer under this plan is the sewer provided for in the bill. It will cost in round numbers $228,000. It empties into the Potomac River at what is known as Easby's Point, a point where the river is comparatively narrow, and the channel of the river is on the Washington side, where the flow of the river is such that except perhaps during a very few weeks in the year, perhaps only two weeks, there will be an active flow of the sewage down the Potomac. During extreme low water there may be some trouble. When that is completed it will dispense with an open sewer which runs down Seventeenth street, and which is an absolute disgrace to this city and to this country.

The next important sewer that is to be built, and that one I should be perfectly willing to provide for myself in this bill, is a sewer which is called the Rock Creek connecting sewer, which also will cost about $228,000, and that is the sewer into which empty two-thirds of the pipes of this city. The first sewer I have named extends as far as the Patent Office and the Post-Of-five buildings, and this sewer comprehends the entire north-western portion of this city.

I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I do not believe there is any probability that the general plan which has been laid down here with such clearness by this board will be diverged from in any material particular by any sanitary engineer who may be consulted, because I think it will be seen that this general plan is practically the only effective plan whereby the people of the District of Columbia can have sewerage such as should be had here.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Maryland has called the attention of the Senate to this most important matter which has evoked this discussion. The committee, which took a good deal of pains in this matter, was, as the Senator from Iowa has said, greatly impressed with the strength and wisdom of the report of these sanitary engineers. They were three of the most eminent in their profession throughout the country selected by the President and appointed on the 17th day of August, 1889—Rudolph Hering, of New York, Samuel M. Gray, of Rhode Island, and Frederic P. Stearns, of Massachusetts. They gave much time and attention to this great subject, coming upon the ground, employing all the assistance needed, and they mapped out this great work in which we are all and in which the whole country are interested. A short summary of their conclusions is found at the bottom of page 50 of their report, where they say:

The more important features and the merits of the recommended project may now be summarized as follows:

The proposed plan includes deeply-laid intercepting sewers to carry practically all the sewage of the city to a suitable outlet in deep water of the Potomac River, storm-water sewers to drain the low districts and to intercept the waters which would otherwise reach it from the higher districts, dikes to prevent the entrance of river water during freshets, and pumps to lift the sewage at all times and the storm water of the low district when the river is unusually high. The pumps for both purposes are to be at one station near the foot of New Jersey avenue. The large sewers designed primarily for storm water removal, serve also as sewage interceptors.

They estimate the cost of this great work at $3,598,003.

Mr. President, it is most important, if the scheme of the committee which rests upon the report of these engineers is carried out, that it should be carried out in complete harmony with that original project. That is why the committee have provided for this sanitary engineer. I should hope, and I think that is the feeling of the committee, that if it is practical one of the gentlemen who were engaged in the work of making this report shall be appointed for this purpose. The committee have given money enough so that it can be made an object for one of these great sanitary engineers to devote, if not the whole of his time, enough of it to take charge and supervision of the work. Then we may feel when we are appropriating from year to year, as we shall be reaching at last the sum of $3,000,000, that if not for ourselves for others who will come soon after us there will be a city here at the national capital with as good a scheme for water and sewerage as the wit of man can devise.

Mr. GORMAN. My only object in interrupting the Senator in charge of the bill was to call attention, first, to the report under which we are acting and under which this scheme is proposed, so that there might be some expression from him as the representative of the committee immediately in charge of the bill, and we would have no trouble hereafter with a new scheme to be presented by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or the sanitary engineer, who may be appointed by the President, but to show that the intention of Congress in making this appropriation was to follow out the recommendations of the commission; and I am very glad to have had his expression.

There is one other thing that I desire to say. While the bill came here from the House of Representatives appropriating $4,987,580.27, the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations have been to increase it $746,110, and of that amount of increase two hundred and seventy odd thousand dollars, I understand, are embraced in this one item of sewerage. While I am in favor of economy and of making the appropriations as small as they can possibly be made with due regard to the management of the affairs of the Government, I do express the hope that in paring down, if that shall be necessary, the appropriations we are making in this bill when it comes to be considered elsewhere, this one item will not be abandoned by the Senate conferees.

We have had complaints in this body of the bad ventilation of the Hall, and we have had them for years. There have been complaints in both Houses of Congress. When we come to take into consideration the facts stated in this report by the sanitary engineers that the sewerage from the building in which we are, emptying into the tide sewer, which is one-third of the time closed by high water or by high tides in the Potomac River, and driving the noxious gases back into this building and into all the buildings whose sewerage empties into the old Tiber Canal, we can not afford, in my judgment, to abandon the worthy project we are now entering upon to correct that great defect.

I trust there will be no opposition here or elsewhere to the appropriation, and I again express the hope that if there is opposition to the appropriations we intend to make, the Senator from Iowa, in the interest of humanity and good health, will insist upon this appropriation being retained in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 19, line 12, to increase the appropriation "for suburban sewers" from "$58,300" to "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 19, after the words "public sewers," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For condemnation of rights of way for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of public sewers, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for streets, in section 1, on page 20, in line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Repairs county roads: For current work of repairs of county roads and suburban streets, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 20, after line 20, to insert:

For the extension of Kenesaw avenue to the Zoological Park, $1,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until the owners of the land shall dedicate a street at least 90 feet wide for said purpose, nor until a street is dedicated by the owners of the land 60 feet wide from Quarry road around the east side of the Zoological Park to the Rock Creek National Park and connecting said Quarry road with Kenesaw avenue extended.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before agreeing to this amendment I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee: What disposition is being made in appropriations at this session of Congress to supply the Zoological Park or the grounds with animals; in other words, to complete the park in the manner intended and provided for in the original act? If nothing is to be done what is the particular necessity of improving the streets leading to the Zoological Park at a vast expense? I understand that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction, and justly, as I think, manifested on the part of the citizens of Washington against the plan which was adopted of charging one-half of the cost upon the people of the city of Washington for the Zoological Garden—one-half the cost of its maintenance, and even the purchase of the property as well. I should like to know if any change is contemplated by the committee with respect to that matter?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriations for the Zoological Park are generally made, as the Senator is aware, in the sundry civil bill. That bill has not yet passed the other house. It has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. It has not been considered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. So I am not able to state what will or will not be done in that regard. I will say, however, as respects this particular appropriation, that it is an easy method of reaching the Zoological Park, and inasmuch as we own the ground, although we may not be able in the future to feed the animals, a good many people will want to go out there for recreation, I have no doubt.

Mr. CULLOM. While, as the Senator from New Jersey states, there is a good deal of complaint on the part of the citizens here on account of the division of the expense necessary to establish and maintain the park, yet I think in the other branch of Congress there will be an appropriation made probably in the line of taking care of the park, and it is only a question of amount as to what sum will be appropriated, so far as I now know. I am aware that there are a number of gentlemen who are taking quite an interest in the subject, and I think it may be reasonably expected that some reasonable appropriation will be made to maintain the park.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 3, to insert:

In regulating and macadamizing the street connecting Columbia road with Connecticut avenue extended toward the District line, $10,000, and the appropriation of $10,000 made by the District appropriation act approved March 3, 1891, for graveling said street is hereby authorized to be used for regulating and macadamizing the same: Provided, That the sum of $20,000 shall be contributed by the abutting owners for the same purpose.

the disposal of the sewage," etc., it is intended to place in the hands of the Commissioners and their engineers who may be employed the power to change this plan or to make a new one.

Mr. ALLISON. It certainly was not our intention, and if the words are not there I think they should be inserted. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it. I think, in line 10, on page 18, it should read, "that the detailed plans for said sewer," that is to say, the working plans for said sewer shall be approved by this consulting engineer. The general plan has been marked out by the sanitary commission or sanitary board; and our own purpose in the committee was—and I endeavored to execute that purpose in framing the amendment—

Mr. GORMAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. ALLISON. To provide that this sewer should be a part of this general plan, and that when the detailed plans for this portion should be made by the Engineer of the District of Columbia they should receive the approval of this consulting engineer. So I think the word "detailed" before "plans" should be inserted.

Mr. GORMAN. So I understood the intention of the Senator, as it was of the committee, and I thought it well to call attention to it, so that we may have no mistake about the construction of the language.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 10, after the word "the," I move to insert the word "detailed;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the detailed plans for said sewer shall be approved by a consulting civil and sanitary engineer, who shall be appointed, etc.

Mr. HALE. I had not noticed the print before. I thought it was the understanding that that was to be in.

Mr. ALLISON. I prepared the amendment with that understanding. The Senator from Maryland raises the point that the words as they appear here may not cover just what we intended.

Mr. GORMAN. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to put words in that will.

Mr. HALE. That will exactly cover what the committee intended.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 18, after line 14, to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be made the useful surveys and investigations, and cause to be prepared all the detailed plans, specifications, and estimates, necessary for constructing in the District of Columbia a system of works for the disposal of the sewage of said District, and for the protection of the low portions of the city of Washington against damage by local flooding and freshets, which system of works shall be in accordance with the general plan recommended by the Board of Sanitary Engineers appointed by the President of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, and whose report is published in House Executive Document No. 445, first session Fifty-first Congress, and may employ all requisite assistance for said purpose, which said plans, specifications, and estimates shall be approved by the consulting civil and sanitary engineer hereinbefore provided for. And for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, line 6, after the word "approved," I move to insert the words "from time to time." Otherwise it might be inferred that this whole detailed plan should be completed before it is presented to the consulting engineer.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, this is a very important provision in the bill. The matter of sewerage in this District is one of the greatest concern to everybody who has had occasion to examine into it. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and his committee two years ago inserted a provision in the appropriation bill providing for the appointment of a commission of three sanitary engineers to take this whole matter into consideration and report to Congress. The result of their examinations is before us in the document referred to in the pending amendment; but in that report they have three or four or half a dozen suggestions, practically all on the same plan, differing in character as to the size of the sewers and the outlets and the pumping arrangement.

I understand that it is to be in accordance with the recommendations made in Executive Document No. 445. Has the Senator in his mind, after consultation with the engineers, any knowledge as to which of the recommendations will be acted upon?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. GORMAN. I do, and that is all I want to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I take it that the consulting engineer may adopt not any new plan, but that he may adopt suggestions respecting the general plan. For example, this board of consulting engineers suggest that the sewage of this city may be thrown into the Potomac at two or three different points. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 19, line 12, to increase the appropriation "for suburban sewers" from "$58,300" to "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 19, after the words "public sewers," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For condemnation of rights of way for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of public sewers, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for streets, in section 1, on page 20, in line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Repairs county roads: For current work of repairs of county roads and suburban streets, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 20, after line 20, to insert:

For the extension of Kenesaw avenue to the Zoological Park, $4,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until the owners of the land shall dedicate a street at least 90 feet wide for said purpose, nor until a street is dedicated by the owners of the land 60 feet wide from Quarry road around the east side of the Zoological Park to the Rock Creek National Park and connecting said Quarry road with Kenesaw avenue extended.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before agreeing to this amendment I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee: What disposition is being made in appropriations at this session of Congress to supply the Zoological Park or the grounds with animals; in other words, to complete the park in the manner intended and provided for in the original act? If nothing is to be done what is the particular necessity of improving the streets leading to the Zoological Park at a vast expense? I understand that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction, and justly, as I think, manifested on the part of the citizens of Washington against the plan which was adopted of charging one-half of the cost upon the people of the city of Washington for the Zoological Garden—one-half the cost of its maintenance, and even the purchase of the property as well. I should like to know if any change is contemplated by the committee with respect to that matter?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriations for the Zoological Park are generally made, as the Senator is aware, in the sundry civil bill. That bill has not yet passed the other house. It has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. It has not been considered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. So I am not able to state what will or will not be done in that regard. I will say, however, as respects this particular appropriation, that it is an easy method of reaching the Zoological Park, and inasmuch as we own the ground, although we may not be able in the future to feed the animals, a good many people will want to go out there for recreation, I have no doubt.

Mr. CULLOM. While, as the Senator from New Jersey states, there is a good deal of complaint on the part of the citizens here on account of the division of the expense necessary to establish and maintain the park, yet I think in the other branch of Congress there will be an appropriation made probably in the line of taking care of the park, and it is only a question of amount as to what sum will be appropriated, so far as I now know. I am aware that there are a number of gentlemen who are taking quite an interest in the subject, and I think it may be reasonably expected that some reasonable appropriation will be made to maintain the park.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 3, to insert:

In regulating and macadamizing the street connecting Columbia road with Connecticut avenue extended toward the District line, $10,000, and the appropriation of $10,000 made by the District appropriation act approved March 3, 1891, for graveling said street is hereby authorized to be used for regulating and macadamizing the same: Provided, That the sum of $30,000 shall be contributed by the abutting owners for the same purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the one reported by the committee. I believe it is satisfactory to the committee. I move to strike out the amendment of the committee and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraph and in lieu thereof to insert:

For regulating and macadamizing the street connecting Columbia road with Connecticut avenue extended, and thence along said avenue extended to the District line, $30,000, which said amount shall be assessed upon the property fronting on said street and avenue in proportion to the number of front feet of each lot or parcel of land so fronting. Such assessment shall be collected in the same manner as other taxes on real estate in the District of Columbia. And the $10,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1874 for graveling said street and avenue shall be used for regulating and macadamizing the same, and both of said sums shall be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment was prepared by some gentleman and shown to me. The difference between that and the amendment proposed by the committee is, that I believe the whole sum is assessed upon the property. I certainly see no objection to it if the property is worth enough to pay the cost of improvements. It seems to be assessed against the property.

Mr. FAULKNER. According to the front foot.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose there is no doubt about the fact that the property is valuable enough to pay the cost of the improvement.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to inquire what has been the custom in regard to the opening and improving of streets in the District of Columbia heretofore? Has any portion of the expense heretofore in the opening, regulating, grading, and paving of the streets, been paid by the District, or has it all been paid out of the Treasury by taxes levied upon the whole people?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, recently, as a rule, the cost of paving has been paid, under an arrangement we have made, one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and the other out of the taxes levied upon the people of this District; but that rule has been varied from in various ways and at various times. This is the best variation that I have seen. The amendment practically assesses the whole of the tax upon the abutting property-holders, except that $10,000 of this sum is to be paid out of the general revenue and $30,000 is to be assessed upon the property; that will be three-fourths to one.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Right in the line of my previous inquiry, I now ask if the practice heretofore has been to make payments for these improvements out of the District Treasury, of which this property has paid its share to complete by way of taxes paid into the public Treasury? By what right do you vary the rule now, and because this property is to be improved and developed, compel the owners to pay the whole cost of the improvements, when they have already paid their share of the cost of all other improvements in the city of Washington? Is there any equity in that?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, to thoroughly go into that question would require considerable time, and it would be necessary to inquire why it was that the cost of improving and paving streets in this city and in Georgetown has been paid out of the general revenues.

I will state the case briefly as I understand it. It will be borne in mind that during the system of Government which prevailed here from 1871 to 1875 abutting property-holders were required to pay one-third of the cost of the grading and of the paving of the streets and alleys in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the cost was assessed against those property-holders.

The pavements that were laid were wooden pavements that rotted out, as we all know, in the course of five or six years. The people owning land in this city were taxed, of course, to pay for those pavements. When the readjustment was made, all these sums were thrown into the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia as respects the pavements not paid for by the city. Therefore, there was an equity in the Government of the United States by appropriations paying for these pavements, because they had once been paid for, or at least one-third of them had been, and they had proved to be of no value. That was within the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

Now, we go outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and we find enterprising and energetic people who contribute their pittance of revenue and income to the purchase of land. They lay that land out into city lots and property, and they having paid a portion of the taxes that were assessed for the purposes of paving in this city, have no equity, in my judgment, that will justify us in paving outside of the city in the District as we have paved within the limits of the city. Therefore, for one, I wish to say that when the question comes up for my consideration I shall apply what I regard as an equitable rule outside of this city in any vote I may cast here, and that will be a rule which will put upon a par the people outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown with the people inside the cities.

If we are to pave the new portions of this District that are carried into our expenditures, I do not think it is wise, or even just, for us to pave these portions of the District outside of the city out of the general revenue. Hence I, for one, welcome this proposition which proposes to have three-fourths paid by the proprietors.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say that I am in entire sympathy with the amendment. I see the distinction now which the Senator draws between the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. If I understand him aright, the rule which had been applied to the city of Washington was a rule which had not been enforced outside of the city within the District.

I believe street improvements should be assessed upon the property benefited, and whenever the people along a proposed street line desire the opening of a street, the regulating, the grading, the paving, or the sewerage of that street, they may petition the District Commissioners to do it, and, when it is done, the cost of the entire improvement should be paid by them.

I supposed that the same rule was enforced outside of the city within the District which had been enforced within the city proper, and that was why I propounded the inquiry.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to say in reference to condemnation that, after a most thorough examination by the District Committee, as to the extension of streets here, the committee adopted the plan which seems to carry out the views of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that, after first ascertaining by a jury the difference between the damages to the property taken and the benefits to the residue of the tract, say for a space of a thousand feet or any particular tract of land, after ascertaining and setting off the benefits against the damages of taking, then the bill provides that one-third of those damages shall be assessed upon the property, having already deducted from the damages the benefits received—one-third of the damages shall be assessed on the property so benefited and taken, and of the other two-thirds, one-third shall be paid by the District and the other third by the Government of the United States, carrying out, to some extent at least, the view of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. This amendment is right in the same line.

Mr. FAULKNER. This amendment goes further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, which is offered as a substitute for the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, I wish to make another inquiry. I do not understand the Senator from West Virginia. If I understand him aright, he says the rule applied heretofore to property outside of the city within the District, has not been to assess the benefits entirely upon the property, which his amendment now proposes to do, if I understand the amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is right.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the streets outside of the city limits and within the District line have been improved by other methods, and if other property outside of the city has been taxed a portion of the expense, and the public to-day have the benefits of those improvements, which they have not paid for in toto, but paid for in part, why adopt this rule in respect to that class of property?

If the Senator from West Virginia will give me his attention a moment, I understand him to say that this is a new rule and that it has not been applied to other property outside of the city limits within the District.

Mr. FAULKNER. Not to the extent that this amendment proposes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The improvements heretofore made are public improvements, and all the people of the District have the benefit of them. Why adopt a new rule, then, in respect to the people who own this property and compel them to pay a larger share of the expense of improvements than we have compelled other people to pay for like improvements of which they are now receiving the benefit?

Mr. FAULKNER. Because the parties who have to pay this I think are more benefited by these public improvements than others which have been made outside of the city limits. I do not think there is any objection on the part of the persons against whose land this amount would be assessed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia as a substitute for the committee's amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 21, after line 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

For grading North Capitol street between T street and the Soldiers' Home, $5,000, to be expended only when the land is donated: Provided, That the sum of $5,000 shall be contributed by the parties directly interested in the grading of said street for the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 21, in line 14, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "streets" from "$41,500" to "$55,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Secretary may be authorized to change the footings so as to correspond with the amendments which have been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is customary to do that after the bill has been passed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 21, line 17, after the word "alleys" to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys: For condemnation of streets, roads and alleys, $10,000

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "fifteen;" and in line 22, after the word "dollars" to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no expenditure hereunder shall be made at a price higher than 24 cents per 1,000 square yards for improved streets and avenues—so as to make the clause read:

Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning: For sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "nineteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For the parking commission: For contingent expenses, including laborers, cart hire, trees, tree-boxes, tree stakes, tree straps, planting and care of trees on city and suburban streets, whitewashing, care of parks, and miscellaneous items, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 23, line 17, after the word "scales," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to read:

For public scales: For repair and replacement of public scales, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 24, beginning in line 1, to insert:

Rebuilding bridges: For rebuilding the bridge across Rock Creek at K street NW, to be rebuilt in such manner that the bridge shall be substantially a part of the street as to width, paving, and sidewalks, $30,000: Provided, That no street railway shall be constructed over said bridge.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to amend the amendment, in line 4, by striking out "twenty" and inserting "forty," before "thousand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 24, line 4, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to read: "$40,000."

Mr. McMILLAN. The amendment is offered for the reason that the District Committee and the Commissioners believe that it is now proper to rebuild a number of bridges, and among others the K street bridge. Instead of having flimsy, narrow bridges, it is intended to build them as wide as the streets, pave them, and have proper sidewalks. The engineer in making up the estimate made a mistake in regard to the cost of this bridge across Rock Creek. He estimated that it could be done for $20,000. He writes me now that it will require $40,000, and I ask the Committee on Appropriations to allow that amendment to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a letter of a similar character from the Engineer Commissioner.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to that bridge, for I know it is important, being on one of the principal streets in the city. On the west side of it, the Georgetown side, coming right up to the bridge, by a charter which has been granted, there is a steam railroad, with the right to construct a road, to lay tracks, but with no engines or cars yet running. There is a measure now pending before this body, reported from the Senator's committee, to permit the use of steam right across the creek where this bridge is to be constructed. It is true that there is a proviso that the bridge itself shall not be used for railroad purposes, but if that railroad is permitted to be operated there by steam, coming right up to the bridge, then the bridge will be practically of no earthly use for travel, and the $40,000 proposed to be appropriated will be thrown away.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand that to be the case, but the Board of Commissioners recommended that this bridge, being out of repair, should be rebuilt. They themselves prepared a bill. It was done under the charge and control of the engineer, and I suppose there is a necessity for this bridge.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no question but that the engineers are right. I am perfectly familiar with the bridge, and have been since its construction. It is in a very bad condition.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that there is authority now to run steam cars right above this bridge on the Georgetown side?

Mr. GORMAN. I do, and the tracks are down. The charter has been granted, and there is pending now in this body a bill providing for the extension of that road across Rock Creek. I have no doubt that but for this provision, which the Senator himself has inserted here, that the bridge shall not be used for railroad purposes, it would have been constructed for a steam railroad.

Mr. HALE. What bridge is that?

Mr. GORMAN. The K street bridge across Rock Creek.

Mr. HALE. Is it the bridge that we cross in driving out to Georgetown along Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. GORMAN. No; below that.

Mr. HARRIS. Away below.

Mr. GORMAN. It is on the street below the Aqueduct bridge, where the water pipes are.

Mr. HALE. At the line of Rock Creek, and it is below Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. GORMAN. It is below Pennsylvania avenue. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that this appropriation is, I think, a very proper one and a very necessary one, but he ought to move to recommit the bill which has been reported to this body providing for the extension of the line of that steam railroad. If this appropriation is to be of value, the railroad certainly ought not to be permitted to use the bridge or to come within 40 feet of it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not know of any railroad that has authority to use this bridge or cross it. I know of no such bill that ever came from the District Committee.

Mr. GORMAN. No, I did not say they had authority to use this bridge, but they occupy the street up to the bridge on the west side, and a bill is pending now permitting them to cross Rock Creek, and as a matter of course they will cross right at this proposed bridge to come over on the Washington side. There is no question about that at all.

Mr. FAULKNER. To what company does the Senator refer?

Mr. GORMAN. The Georgetown Barge, Dock, and Elevator Company.

Mr. FAULKNER. That bill requires the company to go south of this bridge in coming over as far as Twenty-sixth street. That is not involved in this question at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, line 4, in the amendment of the committee, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Rebuilding bridges: For rebuilding the bridge across Rock Creek at K street northwest, to be rebuilt in such manner that the bridge shall be substantially a part of the street as to width, paving, and sidewalks, $40,000: Provided, That no street railway shall be constructed over said bridge.

Mr. HALE. I think it ought to be understood that the action of the Senate here, so far from being an encouragement that this road shall use this bridge or cross Rock Creek at the particular place where this bridge is to be rebuilt, shall be notice to them that they are not to have that privilege. Otherwise, with their tracks laid and coming squarely against the end of this bridge, unless we take such action here as would negative it, the presumption would be that they would ask us to run over this bridge, and permission would be given them. It ought to be understood that they must build somewhere else, that they must divert their track either below or above.

Mr. CULLOM. We could not afford to have engines standing at the other end of the bridge.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will examine either of the bills now pending in the Senate in relation to this subject he will see at once that they do not in any way interfere with this bridge.

Mr. HALE. The track should be taken away from the end of the bridge and there should be no railroad over the bridge.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no railroad over this bridge.

Mr. HALE. No, but the Senator from Maryland says the track comes up square to the end of the bridge. That must be taken away, of course.

Mr. FAULKNER. It comes, I suppose, to within 50 or 100 feet of the bridge.

Mr. HALE. Below it?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, down by Water street, which is used entirely for warehouses and foundries.

Mr. HALE. That is below.

Mr. FAULKNER. No, it is on the same street. This bridge is right near Water street.

Mr. HALE. That is the river street, the lower street.

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, there is nothing on either side of that street, except warehouses and foundries, and the railroad was put there originally for the purpose of supplying and accommodating those foundries and warehouses. That is the purpose for which it is used, entirely and exclusively.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move in line 5 of the amendment, after the word "street," to insert "or steam."

Mr. McPHERSON. I have not heard any reason for increasing this appropriation from $20,000 to $40,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator that the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia in making the original estimate for $20,000, did not estimate for the full width of the street, and the Commissioners now recommend that it shall be built with sidewalks, etc., to go with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, of the amendment, after the word "street," it is proposed to insert the words "or steam;" so as to read:

Provided, That no street or steam railway shall be constructed over said bridge.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 24, after line 6, to insert:

For rebuilding the bridge across Rock Creek at M street northwest, to be rebuilt in such manner that the bridge shall be substantially a part of the street as to width, paving, and sidewalks, $40,000, one-half of which sum shall be paid by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

Mr. McPHERSON. Here comes that question again. I wish to submit just this one proposition, and I think it is an exceedingly fair and proper one. The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company have the free use of the streets of the city of Washington, I understand, from the navy-yard clear across to Georgetown, for which they pay nothing whatever, which is a most valuable franchise. They have had the free use of this bridge in the past. Now, adopting the same principle which was adopted with reference to another line of railroad in a former amendment, I think this company should be compelled to rebuild the M street bridge at their own expense. I think the same rule should apply to this amendment and the one which follows in relation to the Metropolitan Railroad Company.

The District has furnished them trackways through the streets of the city and a bridge across Rock Creek up to the present time. Now the railroad company should furnish to the District, reserving, of course, its right to cross this bridge, as it has its right under the charter, a free bridge across Rock Creek as a partial equity for the advantages they have in this city and for the great revenues they are deriving from the contributions of the people who patronize their cars. I move that the word "one-half" be stricken out.

Mr. McPHERSON. The amendment reads:

One-half of which sum shall be paid by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

I propose to strike out the words "one-half of."

Mr. McMILLAN. I introduced a bill on behalf of the District Committee proposing that the amount to be paid by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company and by the Metropolitan Railroad Company should be divided in that way.

In reply to the Senator from New Jersey, I would say that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company pays a large tax for its privileges, upwards of $30,000 a year to the revenues of this District. They were originally given by Congress the right to use the M street bridge. The bridge is a weak and narrow one, not fit for the purposes for which it was originally built, but the policy at that time seemed to be a cheap policy, to build anything that would take across a team.

To-day on all these bridges there are notices that you must walk your horses across the bridges, because they are not safe. A bridge could be built on M street for a very small amount of money that would answer the purposes of the railroad company, but it was thought desirable by the committee that a proper bridge should be constructed, as wide as the street itself, properly paved, and with paved sidewalks, as if it was part of the street. Under those circumstances the committee thought it was only right and fair that the District government should pay one-half the cost, and I believe that is a fair division of the amount expended there, considering that the people of the District are going to use this bridge with their carriages and teams and as foot passengers, and it is intended for the public. If the railroad was not there, the public would have to have the bridge just the same. I therefore think the provision in the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations is a fair division of the amount that should be paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 24, in line 10, in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "one-half of;" so as to read:

Which sum shall be paid by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

Mr. McPHERSON. If it be the decision both of the District Committee and the Committee on Appropriations that this is equitable, and only equitable to the railroad company, I do not wish to press my amendment, although I think the railroad company at this time should be compelled to build the entire bridge and to give the easement over the bridge to the citizens of Washington, the same as the railroad company has been enjoying from the District government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 24, after line 12, to insert:

For rebuilding the bridge across Rock Creek at P street northwest, to be rebuilt in such manner that the bridge shall be substantially a part of the street as to width, paving and sidewalks, $30,000, one-half of which sum shall be paid by the Metropolitan Railroad Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment to be inserted on page 24, at the end of line 17:

Provided, That the control of bridges in the District of Columbia is hereby conferred on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they are hereby required to make such proper regulations as they may deem necessary for the safety of the public using said bridges, and for the lighting and police control of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for "Washington Aqueduct," in section 1 on page 24, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-one," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That all appropriations for the Washington Aqueduct shall be available until expended.

So as to make the clause read:

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

For engineering, maintenance, and general repairs, $21,000: Provided, That all appropriations for the Washington Aqueduct shall be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "officers of public schools," in section 1, on page 25, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One clerk to superintendent of the first six divisions who shall also have charge of the accounts of all personal property pertaining to the school, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 25, line 11, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for salaries of officers of public schools from "$8,050" to "$8,950."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for teachers of public schools," in section 1, on page 25, line 18, after the word "for," to strike out "one" and insert "three," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "each," so as to read:

For three, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 25, line 20, after the word "for," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve," so as to read:

For twelve, at $4,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 26, line 24, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for salaries of teachers of the public schools from "$612,400" to "$612,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 28, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of tools, machinery, material, and apparatus, to be used in connection with instruction in manual training, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 29, line 5, before the word "grades," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in line 10, after the word "supplies," to strike out "twelve" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For text-books and school supplies for use of pupils of the first six grades, who at the time are not supplied with the same, to be distributed by the Superintendent of Public Schools under regulations to be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for the necessary expenses of the purchase, distribution, and preservation of said text-books and supplies, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 30, after line 3, to insert:

The Commissioner of Education is hereby authorized and directed to examine and report to Congress, on the first day of its next session, on the schools of the District of Columbia, as respects their organization, efficiency, methods, and cost, and, with said report, make such recommendations as to him may seem advisable; and for this service he shall receive $500, which sum is hereby appropriated, as compensation in addition to the compensation now received by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for Metropolitan police," in section 1, on page 31, line 2, before the word "privates," to strike out "five" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Two hundred and twenty privates, class 1, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 31, before the word "drivers," in line 16, to strike out "ten" and insert "thirteen;" so as to read:

Thirteen drivers of patrol wagons, at $360 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 31, line 18, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for salaries of the Metropolitan police from "$468,090" to "$482,660."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 32, line 6, to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing," etc., from "$16,000" to "17,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, on page 32, line 8, to increase the total amount of the miscellaneous appropriations for the Metropolitan police from "$21,700" to "$23,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for the fire department," in section 1, on page 33, after line 10, to insert:

For one new engine and house and lot for same, $31,530.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senate having agreed upon the amendment just reported by the committee, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, line 25, it is proposed to insert:

For one new engine, and house and lot for same, $31,530.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 32, after line 25, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

For the following additional force from the 1st day of January, 1893, namely: One foreman, at the rate of $1,000 per annum; one engineer, at the rate of $1,000 per annum; one hostler, at the rate of $840 per annum; six privates, at the rate of $800 each per annum: in all, $7,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 33, line 16, to increase the total amount of the miscellaneous appropriations for the fire department from "$32,600" to "$64,120."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "telegraph and telephone service," in section 1, on page 34, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause beginning in line 14, on page 43:

For St. Joseph's Asylum, maintenance, $500.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment in line 14, on page 43, in the clause which has just been read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that by the understanding when the bill was taken up the committee amendments were to be first considered. I ask the Senator to postpone his amendment until they are all disposed of.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 43, line 22, after the word "Senator," to insert "as such trustee or director;" so as to make the clause read:

That in all cases where Members of Congress or Senators are appointed to represent Congress on any board of trustees or board of directors of any corporation or institution to which Congress makes any appropriation, the term of said Members or Senator as such trustee or director shall continue until the expiration of two months after the first meeting of the Congress chosen next after their appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Industrial Home School," in section 1, on page 44, after line 2, to insert:

For reconstructing the garret of the old central building so as to make it into a story of the regular height, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 44, line 6, to insert the subhead "Reform School for Girls;" in the same line, after the words "For the," to insert "purchase of ground, not to exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, and the;" in line 8, after the word "completion," to insert "on the land so purchased;" in line 12, after the word "buildings," to strike out "on the United States Reform School farm in said District;" in line 13, after the word "girls," to strike out "the sum of thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Reform School for Girls: For the purchase of ground, not to exceed 20 acres, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, and the erection and completion on the land so purchased, according to plans and specifications to be prepared by the inspector of buildings and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, of a suitable building or buildings, to be used as a reform school for girls, $40,000, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 44, line 15, after the word "Commissioners," to strike out:

Said building shall be erected on a site to be selected by said Commissioners and the trustees of the Reform School of the District of Columbia: Provided, That not more than 50 acres of said Reform School farm shall be appropriated for the Reform School for Girls herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause, beginning in line 21, on page 44:

For the St. Rose Industrial School, maintenance, $2,500.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the consideration of the bill, but simply ask the chairman of the committee to note that after it shall have been finished I shall offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 23, on page 44, to line 4, on page 45, inclusive, as follows:

For expenses attending the instruction of deaf and dumb persons admitted to the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb from the District of Columbia, under section 4864 of the Revised Statutes, $10,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and all disbursements for this object shall be accounted for through the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 45, after the date "1880," to strike out "four thousand three," and insert "three thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the education of feeble-minded children belonging to the District of Columbia, as provided for in the act approved June 16, 1880, $3,400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

For expenses of camp of instruction, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "revenue and inspection branch of water department," in section 1, on page 46, line 15, after the word "each" so strike out "one clerk, $1,000," and insert "two clerks, at $1,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 46, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert—

One assistant engineer, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, in section 1, on page 47, line 18, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

And for not to exceed at any time two inspectors on manufacture of cast-iron pipe, at a maximum rate of $1.50 per day for such periods as their services may be actually necessary, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 47, line 19, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for salaries of officers and employes of "War Department" from "$40,656" to "$43,156."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 48, line 4, after the word "hydrants" to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, repairs to boilers, machinery, and pumping stations, pipe distribution to high and low service, material for high and low service, including public hydrants and fire plugs, and labor in repairing, replacing, raising, and lowering mains, laying new mains and connections, and erecting and repairing fire plugs and public hydrants, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 48, after line 21, to insert:

For extending the high-service system of water distribution, to include all necessary land, machinery, buildings, reservoirs, standpipes, mains, and appurtenances, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be available in the water fund after providing for the expenditures hereinbefore authorized; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the land, including necessary portions of public roads, required for the said extension, and the right of way, where necessary, for the construction, maintenance, and repair of the requisite water mains and their appurtenances for the said extension.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 23, I move to strike out from the amendment the word "reservoirs" before "standpipes."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed and authorized to apply such portion as may be deemed expedient of any surplus which may remain at the close of the fiscal 1893, and of each fiscal year thereafter, of the general revenues of the District of Columbia in excess of one-half of those appropriations payable equally out of the revenues of the District and the United States, together with any surplus revenues of the water department, to the payment of the balances yet remaining unpaid of the debts of the District of Columbia created by the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," and of section 2 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved March 3, 1891: Provided, That the amount of said surplus shall be first reported to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Treasurer of the United States by the First Comptroller of the Treasury when called upon to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, recommended by a majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Then I have a substitute to offer on my own account.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the proper and legitimate expenses attending the reception and entertainment of such honorably discharged Union soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war of the rebellion as may attend, as delegates or otherwise, the twenty-sixth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and attending the preparation for such reception and entertainment.

SEC. 2. That one-half of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the remainder out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to, and be disbursed by, the citizens' executive committee of Washington having in charge such reception and entertainment, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of the above appropriation shall be available until the sum of $60,000 shall have been raised by popular subscription for a like purpose, and said money so subscribed shall first be expended.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now offer a substitute for the amendment just read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

National encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic: To pay the proper and legitimate expenses attending the reception and entertainment of such honorably discharged Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, who served in the war of the rebellion, as may attend as delegates or otherwise the Twenty-sixth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the city of Washington, D. C., and attending the preparation for such reception and entertainment, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that the amendment reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia was not authorized by the unanimous committee. It is a report of a majority.

I have stood here for fifteen years objecting to and voting against all appropriations which proposed to take money out of the Treasury and appropriate it to any mere charitable purpose, for any mere donation. I am one of the few who believe that Congress has no constitutional power or authority to levy taxes and collect money from the earnings of the people for any other than a public and legitimate governmental purpose. This can not be considered as a public or a governmental purpose. It would be a graceful charity if Congress should take $100,000 or $75,000 of the moneys of the people out of the Treasury and give a magnificent entertainment to our distinguished visitors, but I deny the right of the Senate to appropriate moneys out of the Treasury, obtained by taxation, to any such purpose or to any purpose other than that of defraying the necessary expenses of the Government itself.

Upon that narrow, but as I think constitutional, ground I have stood for the fifteen years that I have had the honor of occupying a seat upon this floor, and upon that ground I shall continue to stand.

It would not have mattered with me, sir, whether this were proposed as a fund to honor the visitation of a Confederate reunion any more than for the persons to whom it is proposed to be appropriated. My point is that it does not fall within the line of any duty of the Government; that we have no right to levy and collect taxes for any such purpose; and when you take the revenues out of the Treasury already collected, you superinduce the necessity of levying and collecting a similar amount to replace them.

I shall be for that reason compelled to vote against the amendment, and against any appropriation for the object suggested.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I desire to add that this seems to me the most extraordinary movement in the way of particular appropriation which I have encountered during my public service. In defiance of all sorts of misconception arising from the fact that I was not a Federal soldier, I simply want to appeal to the justice of the Senate in regard to appropriating this amount of money, not out of the treasury of the District of Columbia, not out of the municipal funds of the city of Washington, but from the tax-money of the whole people of the United States.

If, Mr. President, Congress had invited this association here, then, under the rights of hospitality and the generous liberality that characterizes the American people in regard to all such occasions I should be the last Senator to oppose an appropriation twice or three times as large; but Congress has not been consulted in regard to this matter at all. The invitation was extended by the citizens of the city of Washington alone, and a brief résumé of the facts will show how palpably unjust would be the appropriation of this amount of money from the general treasury of the people.

It is very well known that it has been the custom for years of rival cities extending invitations to the Grand Army of the Republic to hold their national encampments from year to year in those cities, and it is very well known that the merchants, hotel-keepers, saloon-keepers, and others reap a rich harvest from the assembling of this large number of old soldiers upon these occasions. When this annual encampment was about to occur, during the last year the city of Washington, as a municipality, sent its citizens, with large promises of hospitality and entertainment, to attract this encampment to their midst. Was it the action of Congress? Was it the action of the representatives of the people, or was it the action of the citizens, shop-keepers, hotel-keepers, and others in the city of Washington alone? Now, under this promise of obtaining this encampment the people of the whole country are called upon to defray one-half of the expense of it.

Mr. President, these exorbitant demands, for they are nothing else, by the people of Washington upon the General Government are becoming disgusting to the people of the whole of the United States. We have built up with the money of all the people of the country the most beautiful city almost in the world. There is not a city in the United States that would not to-day give $20,000,000 in order to obtain the location of the capital of this great country of 65,000,000 people and it would pay all the taxes besides. But we are now building magnificent edifices here; we are paying one-half the taxes; we are making this city the favorite amongst all the municipalities of the country. They are not satisfied with this, but come here now and propose to make us pay one-half of the expenses of entertaining their guests, when they know at the same time that Congress has not been consulted in regard to the matter at all. It surpasses all that I have ever known in the exorbitant demands that are made upon the Congress of the United States because it is located here in this city of Washington.

As to what has been said by the Senator from Tennessee in regard to the constitutional objections, if the right were so clear under the Constitution that it could be seen of all men at a distance, I should not vote for this appropriation. When Washington City and its people are reaping all the results and all the benefits, when they are their guests and not ours, when the Treasury to-day is not in a condition to sustain this sort of expenditure for any such purpose, it would, with my convictions, be a criminal act upon my part to sit here silent at the risk of any such misconception and permit any such appropriation to go through.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the proposed amendment:

And the whole of said amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the objection to that in my mind is, that all the expenses of the District of Columbia are governed by Congress. The amount expended here for every purpose is divided between the Government of the United States and the District. The United States Government own practically one-half of the property in this District, and, therefore it pays one-half of the taxes. It seems to me in a matter of this kind that it is only right and proper that this amount of money should be divided between the two, just as everything else is, just as it is suggested to me as the Zoological Park is, which is a national matter, though we make the District pay one-half, and for the Rock Creek Park, which is practically for the use of the whole country, Congress has made the citizens here pay one-half of the expense not only of the land, but of supporting it.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, the annual encampments of the Grand Army of the Republic have been held at one and another city of the country always upon the invitations of such cities, and upon them has fallen, as a part of their municipal functions, the duty of hospitality. In every case the fund for such entertainment, as has been stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], has been made up in part by the subscriptions of citizens, and invariably in part by contributions from the municipality and from the State in which the encampment is held.

This year the invitation has been extended by citizens of Washington, it has been accepted by the Grand Army of the Republic, and their encampment is to be held in this city. So we are met by this question under the particular exigencies of the government of this city. We have taken from the people of Washington the right of self-government. We have, I will not say usurped, but we have absorbed that authority and that duty. This call comes upon us with precisely the same force and is of just the same character as the call which has been made to the municipal governments of the cities and to the Legislatures of the States where this encampment has been held in other cities. The constitutional authority that we have is precisely the authority which the Legislatures of the States have, and our duty is no larger nor other than their duty.

Shall it be said that it does not belong to the municipality to exercise the function of hospitality? Have the Legislatures of the States no power to make such appropriations? If they have, certainly we have. So, Mr. President, it comes to the other question as to what the amount shall be. The committee, in the first instance, placed the amount at $75,000, the representation having been made to the committee that the citizens would raise $50,000, and $100,000 having been asked for from the Government.

The committee first recommended an amendment to the bill placing the amount of the appropriation by Congress at $75,000, of course one-half of that sum to be paid, like all others raised by taxation, from the revenues of the District and one-half from the revenues of the General Government. But that has elicited and called forth from the committee of citizens having charge of this matter, and from the public press and other representatives of public opinion and those having charge of the subject the claim that $100,000 is needed for the proper exercise of the function of hospitality in this instance.

I wish to ask if this Government is going to put a narrow limit upon the amount that will properly be appropriated for this patriotic subject? It is perfectly clear that the occasion of the meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic in this capital and historic city is going to call forth a larger number of visitors, a larger encampment than has ever before been held in the history of that organization or in the history of the Government. I shall not expect that Congress, representing the people of the United States, will stint their allowance to less than the exigencies of the occasion may require.

Neither can I see that this appropriation differs from any other as to the fund from which it should be drawn. It falls upon the municipality properly, and how are all of these obligations met? Upon the principle by and large that the Government, owning one-half of the property, shall assume one-half of the taxes, obligations, and duties that fall upon the District.

It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment suggested by the committee is just and ought to pass, and that the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri just before I rose to submit these remarks should not be adopted.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if the proposition of the Senator from Delaware be correct, then both as a matter of law and equity our wards in the city of Washington should assume the position of wards, and not undertake to bind us by extending even hospitable invitations to anybody. The fallacy of the argument is that when the people of Washington propose to exercise the functions of a municipal government they do so and then come to Congress to make good the liability they assume themselves.

The Senator says that an enormous encampment will be held here. Every soldier or ex-soldier who comes here will pay so much money to the people of Washington. Every one of them who spends a dollar here will pour it into the coffers of the people of this city. Why do the cities of the United States scramble for this encampment year by year exactly as they do for the conventions of the great political parties? It is to put money in their pockets, and for no other purpose.

When the Senator says that we occupy the position of a State Legislature relatively to this matter I would be glad for him to show me the custom that has sprung up in this country of the State Legislatures paying the expenses of these encampments invited by cities.

Mr. DAWES. The encampment was held last year in Boston. The State Legislature appropriated $50,000, the city of Boston $25,000, and the citizens raised thirty-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. VEST. Exactly, and that was the State of Massachusetts. When this encampment was held in the State of Missouri, the city of St. Louis paid the expenses, as it ought to have done and the General Assembly of Missouri paid nothing.

Mr. DAWES. The Legislature of Massachusetts paid $50,000.

Mr. VEST. I understand, and they had the right to do it; and I do not question that; and if this was the Legislature in that sense of the people of the city of Washington, if we had authorized them to extend this invitation, if we were at all responsible for it, as a matter of course it would be in the nature of a contract. The Legislature of Massachusetts represented the people of the State. The Congress of the United States represents the people of the whole Union, not of the District of Columbia alone.

I say no such custom has prevailed. It may have been done in the State of Massachusetts. It was not done in the State of Missouri, and if there are other States in which the Legislature has been called upon to do it, it furnishes no precedent for us. The whole thing rests at last upon the single question whether if the people of the city of Washington acted without consulting Congress, Congress is bound in any way to pay the expenses of the guests whom they have invited.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the argument in favor of this appropriation is based upon an assumption that Congress is under an obligation in some way to pay at least a certain amount of money to entertain the soldiers when they come here this fall. I do not agree with that assumption. I do not believe that the people of the United States are under any obligation to pay for entertaining the old soldiers when they come to Washington. If that were true, the same obligation would rest upon Congress no matter where the Grand Army should hold its national encampment.

At the outset permit me to say that I was a Federal soldier. I served in the army three of the best years of my life. I have some recollections of that great war that I shall carry with me to the bivouac at the other side. I do not believe that the old boys who wore the blue are beggars. I do not believe that they are going about the country asking for the hospitalities of the people either of a particular locality or of the country in general. But I do believe that when a city or a State, or, if it might be, the nation, invite the Grand Army to come and partake of their hospitalities the city or the State should pay the expenses. I think that the old boys will feel just that way about Washington City.

I understand that the people of the capital city have invited the soldiers to come and hold their national encampment here. I understand that they bid for their coming, and that they promised them entertainment; but they were not authorized by this body to say that the people of the whole nation would pay the expenses.

Now, another thing, Mr. President. This custom is one that is growing in the country; and it seems to me that if we are not able to stop it now, those of us who are thinking about the growing custom ought to interpose at least one mild objection to it. First the citizens of a particular town, and only a small portion of those citizens, the real estate dealers, the bankers, the hotel-keepers, and other classes who expect to profit by the coming of the people extend an invitation. They pledge their own people.

Perhaps they are authorized to do that, and it may be well enough; but when they come to pledge the money and the resources of a larger body, of a whole State or a whole nation, they go far beyond their authority. First, these pledges will be made to the Grand Army, and then as soon as the invitation is accepted and arrangements are made for the encampment, immediately a system of begging—if I am not using too harsh an expression—is indulged, asking somebody else to come in and to pay the burdens that may be imposed upon a particular people, when as a matter of fact all that is gained, in a pecuniary view, from the coming of these men goes into the coffers of the people of the particular city.

The people of the country will not be benefited by the coming of the old soldiers here. If any personal or pecuniary benefit is derived from their coming it will be to the citizens of Washington and to no other class of people.

In making these remarks I know that I am treading upon tender ground; I know that I am arousing tender feelings in the hearts of many members of this body and of others who are listening, and I want to give my reasons for my position before I conclude. It seems to me, sir, it is time that we, the old soldiers, should cry out against this practice of first inviting the boys to come and then asking other people to pay for their dinners. I do not believe in it, and I think it is time that some one at least who was connected with the Grand Army should have the courage to say so before the people.

There is another point to be considered. We have no authority even to pledge ourselves to grant this money. Whatever money we agree to pay is the people's money; it is not ours. We are here as the custodians of the people's money, to use it in their interest and not to appropriate it for private uses.

I was surprised when I heard of the amendment being proposed to this bill, that the people of the country should be asked to pay an obligation that the citizens of Washington have voluntarily assumed.

Having said this much, I will now take one night to consider. I think that we will hardly dispose of this measure finally until to-morrow. I will take one night to consider what my old soldier friends in Kansas would ask me to do in voting upon this question. There are many of them here in this city. I say I will take time to think about that; and if my vote should in the end be in favor of the appropriation, it will be under my own personal protest and in obedience to the wishes of those who stand behind me.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, it seems to me quite indifferent whether we regard the Congress of the United States as standing here as the city council or municipal government of Washington and the District of Columbia or as the State Legislature. It seems that in Massachusetts the State Legislature appropriated a part of the fund for the entertainment of the Grand Army at Boston. We are told by the Senator from Missouri that the State of Missouri did not contribute to the entertainment of the Grand Army in St. Louis, but it was done by the municipality of St. Louis alone.

However, the Congress of the United States is virtually the municipal government of the District of Columbia, and that District is not a State. Originally it was but 10 miles square. After that Alexandria was taken off of it, and virtually the city of Washington is coterminous with the District of Columbia. It therefore comes before Congress, virtually acting for this municipality, and the reason why we have to act upon it is that we have taken away from this people the power and right of municipal government. So our obligation is precisely equivalent to what it would be if we were the city council of the city of Washington.

The Senator from Missouri has said that we are called upon to pay the bill of an entertainment which we have not asked for, but which was asked for by the citizens of Washington on their own motion before they came to Congress in the first instance. I would ask if that has not been the course in every instance of the kind? I would ask whether in any city of this country where the Grand Army has held its encampment an invitation was not extended in the first place by the citizens before they had support from their city council or from their State Legislature? They go forward upon the expectation that they are speaking for all the people of the city, and that the citizens will be perfectly willing to expend their money on that behalf.

Neither can it be said in this case that we are voting the money of the people of the United States in any different sense from what we do in the payment of all our appropriations for the District of Columbia. The duty to pay one-half of this tax, like that of every other, rests upon the fact that the United States is the half owner of the property here, and therefore has to meet one-half of its obligations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know that we can dispose of this question this evening, and therefore I should like to suggest one or two amendments. I propose to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$80,000." In connection with that I propose to make it payable by the District. I want that to come in with my amendment, and I hope that it will be agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Pending that I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the chairman of the committee and to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to submit an amendment to the amendment, which I shall propose to-morrow to the paragraph under consideration. There is already an amendment to the amendment pending, so I can not offer it now, but I submit it so that it can go into the RECORD. I propose to add, after the words submitted by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia:

And the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to and disbursed by the citizens' executive committee of Washington having in charge such reception and entertainment, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

I shall offer that amendment to the amendment when it will be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I omitted to propose one amendment in behalf of the committee, which I ask may be disposed of now, and then I will yield to the motion of the Senator from Illinois for an adjournment or an executive session. On page 21, after line 12, I move to insert;

For Harewood road, widening, grading, and extending to Bates' road, $5,000: Provided, That there is dedicated to the District of Columbia enough of the abutting land on each side of said Harewood road to make said road 80 feet wide (the cost of removing and rebuilding the Soldiers' Home east gate lodge and the fencing, to be paid for out of said appropriation); and the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home is hereby authorized to dedicate its share of the abutting land and to allow the said road to be so widened, graded, and improved where it abuts on the Soldiers' Home grounds; Provided further, That the extension of the Bates' road shall be dedicated along such line as may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to that portion of the Harewood Road between the Soldiers' Home and the National Cemetery.

I desire to have the amendment acted upon now. It relates to the narrow road between the Soldiers' Home grounds and the University grounds, in the eastern part of the District.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6007) to place wool on the free list and to reduce the duties on woolen goods; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LIST OF TREASURY EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 24, 1892, a list of the employees of that office not specifically authorized or appropriated for by law, but appointed or employed according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and paid from some general or special fund subject to his control; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6007) to place wool on the free list and to reduce the duties on woolen goods was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 7, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SECTION 4415, REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of bill to amend section 4415 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEATING APPARATUS IN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting an additional appropriation to enable the Department to furnish heating apparatus in public buildings at Greenville, S. C., Los Angeles, Cal., Statesville, N. C., and Vicksburg, Miss.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THOMAS THATCHER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of the findings in the case of Thomas Thatcher; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EDWARD S. ARMSTRONG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now considered, a bill relating to the same subject having been reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,673.14 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Edward S. Armstrong, of Ralls County, Mo., it being the one-eighth part of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims on the 22d of November, 1890, against the United States, in favor of the estate of James B. Armstrong, deceased.

Mr. BURROWS. Has this bill been considered by the House committee?

Mr. NORTON. Yes, and unanimously reported.

Mr. BURROWS. How much does it carry?

Mr. NORTON. The sum of $1,663.

There being no objection to the consideration of the bill, it was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, the question being on its passage.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 6.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BAILEY and Mr. NORTON were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 167.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a quorum having voted, I withdraw the point.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

The House bill of the same purport was ordered to lie upon the table.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a question, and am not certain whether it be a question of privilege or a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. In the first session of the Fiftieth Congress a resolution of thanks, directing that a medal be prepared was voted to Joseph Francis, the inventor so prominently known in connection with the founding of the Life-Saving Service. Our rules, I believe, admit such gentlemen to the privileges of the floor; but I am not advised whether it is necessary to make a motion to that effect or not.

The SPEAKER. If the rule provides for the admission a card is issued on application to the Speaker.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I desire that Mr. Francis be admitted.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will call the attention of the Chair to the matter the Chair will cause a card to be prepared.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOAR, for two weeks from to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. NORTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COWLES, indefinitely, on and after to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LIVINGSTON, indefinitely, on account of business.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, NOYES VS. ROCKWELL.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I now submit the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Noyes vs. Rockwell.

The SPEAKER. Leave having been granted to file the minority views, they will be printed with the report of the committee and appropriately referred.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 23) relative to the improvement of the harbor of Philadelphia, Pa., and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 2056) to repeal the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 4483 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers," approved March 2, 1889, so far as they relate to steamers plying exclusively upon any of the lakes, bays, or sounds of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

UNITED STATES COURT, BINGHAMTON.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 6258, a bill (H. R. 7975) to provide for the holding of the term of the circuit court and district court of the United States at the city of Binghamton, in and for the northern district of New York; which was referred to the House Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 6258) was ordered to lie upon the table.

RECORDS OF THE VOLUNTEER ARMIES.

Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, presented the views of the minority upon the bill (H. R. 6483) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes; which were ordered to be printed.

PAY OF SOLDIERS MUSTERED AS OFFICERS AFTER MARCH 3, 1865.

By Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 3937) concerning the pay of soldiers who were mustered as officers after March 3, 1865—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

LAREDO, TEX., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

By Mr. CRAIN of Texas, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (S. 1646) making Laredo, Tex., a subport of entry—to the House Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE RIVER, BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

By Mr. CRAIN of Texas, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (S. 1644) authorizing the Continental Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River at or near Brownsville, Tex.—to the House Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4534) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 901) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allentown, in the State of Pennsylvania; in which concurrence was requested.

THE FREE-WOOL BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was reported last evening from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6007) to place wool on the free list and to reduce the duties on woolen goods.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill. The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 60, not voting 74; as follows:

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. LIND, on all political questions and wool bill. If present Mr. PIERCE would vote for the wool bill and Mr. LIND would vote against it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. OATES, March 14 to April 7.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. ATKINSON, until canceled by consent of both.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. DOAN. If present Mr. O'FERRALL would vote for the wool bill; Mr. DOAN would vote against it.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. JONES with Mr. STEPHENSON, from April 5 until the close of April 7.

Mr. MOSES with Mr. WAUGH, on wool tariff bill.

Mr. DANIELL with Mr. SANFORD, for this vote.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON]. That is correct. The pair was made about ten days ago, when he was compelled to leave the city on committee work by order of the House. I have refrained from all votes from that day until the present time, but at the time the pair was made I reserved the right to vote on the final passage of this bill. I will therefore allow my vote to stand. Mr. COMPTON, if present, would have voted for the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. Speaker, I supposed I was paired and refrained from voting, but I did not hear my pair announced with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL]. I now understand that my pair was transferred to some one else, and I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman comes within the rule the Chair will cause his name to be called. The Chair will ask the gentleman if he was in the Hall of the House and if he failed to hear his name called?

Mr. CAPEHART. I was in the Hall of the House and heard my name called on the first call and supposed I was paired and that was the reason I did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

Mr. CAPEHART. I desire to make the statement that the pair was transferred without my knowledge. If I had known it was transferred, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WHITING. If he were present I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. On motion of Mr. McMILLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FUNSTON. I send to the Clerk's desk a paragraph from the New York Voice, which I desire to have read. [Laughter.]

The paragraph was read at length; but subsequently, by order of the House, was excluded from the RECORD.

Mr. FUNSTON. From this article it will be observed that I with others am charged with drinking intoxicating liquors in the restaurant of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to find that the House of Representatives is disposed to take this as a matter of merriment; but in my opinion some one who has been lied about should notice this article.

I want to say to you that this article, in my opinion, has been gotten up in a large degree for my own benefit. It is well known that I have upon this floor advocated prohibition and voted for prohibition; and if I am in the habit of going into the saloon below and taking a drink, certainly my conduct upon this floor and my conduct upon the floor below do not correspond. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. You are exercising a Congressional privilege.

Mr. FUNSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there were nothing more than this simple charge in this paper I would not notice it, because so far as that is concerned it amounts to but little; but it must be known that the primaries of my district are to be held next Saturday [laughter], and this article, in my opinion, has been manufactured solely for that occasion, as thousands of this number of the Voice have been sent to my district. Now, I want to say here that I have never taken a drink inside of that restaurant, or anything that would intoxicate a man or a child.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in addition to this, that the name of Mr. STAHLNECKER is used. I have asked the keeper of the cloakroom when Mr. STAHLNECKER was here, and he informed me that that gentleman was at home sick, and the last time he was in this House was on the 29th of February. This article purports to have been written on the 28th of March, and the paper was published on the 1st day of April. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. Has not the day something to do with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, I want to say here that the correspondent of the Voice is a liar from awayback. [Laughter.] He is a slanderer, a lock-breaker, a destroyer of character, and loans himself for a few dollars for the purpose of defeating me at the primary elections, which he will not do. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that they be taken in alphabetical order.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I wish to say that I have seen the gentleman in the restaurant, and his name comes before mine. But, Mr. Speaker, I find my name mentioned in the article in the Voice. Now, I have no recollection of the circumstance to which the Voice alludes. I do not like to be accused of taking what I did not get. At the time specified I was sick in my room and had not been in the House for days. I patronize the restaurant and have no objection to "cold tea."

Mr. DUNGAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNGAN. Would it be proper to entertain a motion for the printing of 1,000 copies of the certificate of character for circulation in the district of the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is hardly in order.

Mr. FUNSTON. It would go further than the certificate of the gentleman would go for him in his own district. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] was correct enough to say that this statement should be made by somebody who had been lied about, but he failed to take his seat so as to allow the statement to be made. I desire, therefore, to say, Mr. Speaker, as my name appears in the list, that I have not at any time, at the bar or elsewhere, drunk intoxicating liquors in the House restaurant. The statement in the article read is wholly without foundation and utterly false.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I simply wish to say in behalf of the correspondent of the Voice that he guessed right in one instance. I am guilty. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITCH. For the purpose of declaring myself guilty with my friend Col. FELLOWS. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not usually care about anonymous communications of this kind, but I desire to say that so far as I am concerned this statement is absolutely false.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I ask unanimous consent that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole it shall pass over the bill introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska and proceed to consider House bill No. 6006, which proposes to place cotton-ties and cotton-bagging on the free list.

THE ARTICLE IN THE VOICE.

Mr. HATCH. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit to the House a privileged matter. Inasmuch as there are embodied in the article sent up by the gentleman from Kansas to be read at the Clerk's desk the names of Senators as well as the names of Members of this House who are not present at this time, I move that all of the article except that which refers to the gentleman from Kansas himself be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I object to that, Mr. Speaker, most undoubtedly.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not object. He will see the position in which the printing of the article in the RECORD places gentlemen who are not members of this body, and also members of this House who are not present.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. So far as Senators are concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, then I make it as a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make that as a privileged motion.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, why should not members have an opportunity to submit affidavits on this subject? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Missouri will please repeat his motion.

Mr. HATCH. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the names of Senators and Members of the House, other than the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON], that are contained in the article which he sent up to the Clerk's desk be expunged from the RECORD. The motion, I suppose, would not apply to gentlemen who have voluntarily addressed the Chair on the subject. I wish to include in the motion the names of Senators and of Members of the House who are not present, but not such members as have made explanations.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have made it a practice to ignore statements of this character, but the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] rather forces every person whose name is mentioned in this article to take the floor and make an explanation.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not put that construction upon my motion, for it is very far from the object I have in view.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am perhaps the only man mentioned in that article who can afford to treat it with entire contempt, because it is twelve years since I have touched liquor, either at that bar or anywhere else. It has not been my practice, and I do not want to make it my practice, to take notice of such publications, nor do I think it ought to be the practice of this House. If gentlemen who are mentioned there think it proper to dignify this matter by making it a subject of debate in this House they are welcome to do so, but I object to any motion which compels members either to appear to admit the truth of the statements by their silence or to dignify the matter by making personal explanations here. I think this publication has already received a great deal more attention than it deserves, and that it would be more conducive to the satisfaction of the members whose names are mentioned and to the character of this House to let the matter drop into the oblivion where it belongs.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to strike out the portion of the article which contains the names of Senators and Members who have not taken notice of it on the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the article having been read would, under the rules, go into the RECORD, so I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] by excluding the article entirely from the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURROWS. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I had been recognized before the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The Chair had not recognized the gentleman, although it was his intention to do so if the previous question had not been demanded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. FUNSTON. Then I make the point of order that the question of the erasure of this matter from the RECORD has not been debated, and that therefore we are entitled to debate on each side.

The SPEAKER. That question will arise after the House takes action on the motion for the previous question.

The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that in the publication of the article read at the desk the names of Senators mentioned and of the Representatives who have not risen to personal explanations upon the subject be omitted from the RECORD. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moves to amend that motion by omitting from the RECORD the entire publication; and on that he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FUNSTON. To address the Chair on this subject, if the gentleman from Michigan does not want the floor.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that there has been some debate on this question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] debated it—

Mr. FUNSTON. Not on the question of erasing this matter from the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. And the gentleman from Missouri—

Mr. FUNSTON. Their remarks related to another matter. This is a new question altogether; and under the rules, after the previous question has been ordered on any measure which has not been debated, we are entitled to thirty minutes of debate.

Mr. BURROWS. On the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri there has been considerable discussion. My proposition was simply to amend. But there has been debate upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. That is the way it seems to the Chair—that there has been debate on the question.

Mr. FUNSTON. There has not been a word of debate upon the subject now under consideration.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the rule, if there has been debate on the original proposition, the fact that an amendment has been presented which has not been debated does not affect the question of order.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] desires only five minutes, and I ask consent that he be allowed that time.

Mr. SEERLEY. I object.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then I insist on my right to fifteen minutes under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that there has been debate.

Mr. FUNSTON. Upon this question? No, sir.

The SPEAKER. There has been debate upon the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, and the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is simply an amendment to that proposition.

Mr. FUNSTON. I beg pardon of the Chair, but the gentleman from Missouri simply asked consent to offer a motion, and it has not been debated.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes, it has. The gentleman first asked unanimous consent and afterward put the proposition in the form of a motion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Kansas may have any reasonable time that he desires to make an explanation. I ask this as a matter of courtesy to him. In making my motion my object was simply to protect gentlemen who are not members of this body, and who can not speak here for themselves. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SEERLEY] will withdraw his objection, and allow the gentleman from Kansas to have five minutes to make the statement that he desires to make. I presume no one desires here to do any injustice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the request. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] be allowed to speak upon this matter for five minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. SEERLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 116, noes 26.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. What were the figures announced by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Ayes 116, noes 26.

Mr. FUNSTON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FUNSTON and Mr. BURROWS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 153, noes 15.

Mr. FUNSTON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has voted; and the ayes have it.

Mr. FUNSTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on ordering the yeas and nays). Only 20 gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call for a count of the other side.

The other side having been counted, the result was announced—ayes 20, noes 111—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative. So the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. FUNSTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion to adjourn). The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 5, noes 108.

Mr. FUNSTON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not necessary on a motion to adjourn. [Laughter.] The yeas have it, and the House refuses to adjourn. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HATCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. I now ask again that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to occupy the floor for not exceeding five minutes. He says he does not care to occupy more than two.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Kansas to speak for five minutes?

Mr. SEERLEY. I object.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FUNSTON. If the gentleman had allowed me three or five minutes to make a brief explanation I should have given way long ago and you could have gone on with business. The remarks that I desired to make related to the subject of striking out this whole article taken from the newspaper which I had read, and leaving me, if that is done, as it were, like Mohammed's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I must insist, in the interest of the progress of public business, that the gentleman is submitting no question of privilege so far.

Mr. FUNSTON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will decide what is personal to myself. That is what I am talking about now. I will show why it is personal to myself. I repeat, if you had given me two or three minutes you could have had the whole afternoon for yourselves.

Mr. HEARD. We have it now.

Mr. FUNSTON. And you could have had the floor at any time you desired it. But I was refused.

I wanted to say, sir, that in striking out this paragraph you leave me suspended with my remarks, having no possible basis on which to stand.

A MEMBER. Then withdraw them.

Mr. FUNSTON. Now, I am rising to a question of personal privilege, absolutely personal to myself, because striking out that paragraph makes me look silly, for the reason that there was no foundation on which to make them. [Laughter.] You strike out the article and make it necessary for me to take the floor again.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in all earnestness, I enjoy this fun just as much as anybody else and I have enjoyed it from the beginning. It has been a pleasure to me. [Laughter.] But looking the matter fairly and squarely in the face, I ask if this House has no rights and its members no privileges, no personal character, no honor which is to be respected by the correspondent of an obscure paper? That is the question to be decided here to-day. It is a matter affecting not only my personal rights and privileges, but the rights, privileges, and character of the whole House.

Here is a paper holding itself up as the great moralist of this whole country. It is the representative of what is called the Prohibition party, a party which has called on the members of the Democratic party who are in favor of prohibition to come out of the ranks of the Democratic party and go with them; a paper which has called upon the Republicans who are in favor of prohibition to come out and join them. It is then the great moral paper of this country, the great temperance advocate. And yet it hires an irresponsible person to come here and fictitiously represent men as having been down in the saloon in the basement of this House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I was inclined to allow the gentleman from Kansas to proceed in making what he calls his personal explanation, but I must insist that he has no right to make the records of this House the sewer through which to carry his vituperative language; and it is to that I object. I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the matter.

Mr. FUNSTON. I think that paper—the Voice—has been made to serve the purposes of the sewer to carry the filth that has been gathered by a miserable falsifier here in the capital of the nation; and it is in defense of myself, who have been chucked into the sewer, that I am making this defense. [Laughter.]

I say to you that I have not a word of reflection upon newspaper men; not a word to say against newspaper men generally. As a rule newspaper men are honorable men; and I can say that I have been treated honorably by them if any man in this body has ever been treated honorably by any class of men. It is due to the newspaper correspondents that we expose this scoundrel. They are honorable, but here is a dishonorable man, who abuses the privilege of a correspondent, who misrepresents the members of this House, and these correspondents ought to know it and kick him down the back stairs and out of the city of Washington for their own credit.

Mr. LEWIS. Do you know whether this was a woman who wrote the article or not? [Laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. A woman! I do not believe it was a woman. It makes no difference whether it is a lady or anybody else as far as that is concerned; the effect on me and other members is the same. It makes no difference who did it.

I am standing here to-day in my own defense, in the defense of my character, and the defense of my own family.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. My point of order is that this language is not proper to be used on the floor of the House.

Mr. FUNSTON. I want to say to you that I am making these remarks myself.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman ought to confine himself to proper language, and I insist on a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. FUNSTON. I have made my remarks, and you could have made your point against them long ago if you had wished to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. FUNSTON. I am confining myself to it, sir, but I want to say that this correspondent is not a woman, and the name of the man who wrote this article has been given to me. And now, with these remarks, I thank you for your kind attention, gentlemen.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I move that these improper remarks be stricken from the RECORD, and that they be not allowed to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to put his motion in form.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, for fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; which were ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROSIUS, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COVERT, for one week, on account of important business.

FREE COTTON-TIES, ETC.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins, with Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House having directed that the binding-twine bill be passed over and that the committee first take up the bill H. R. 6006, the Clerk will report that bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following articles, when imported, shall be exempt from duty, namely: Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of flax, jute, or jute butts; cards, roving frames, winding frames, softeners, and other machinery, purchased abroad and used in the manufacture of bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar materials suitable for covering cotton; cotton-gins; and also hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel, flared, splayed, or punched, with or without buckles or fastenings.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of gentlemen belonging to the minority whether by unanimous consent we can make any arrangement as to the limitation of the debate.

Mr. BURROWS. I would say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] that it would be quite impracticable to do that at this time. I think we will have no trouble about the general debate, but I can not yet tell how long we will want to occupy. I know several gentlemen who desire to speak upon our side, but we will have no difficulty about arranging general debate, which had better proceed perhaps for the time being, and by to-morrow we can arrange in regard to that.

Mr. TURNER. I know that can only be arranged at this time by unanimous consent, and I ask any gentleman who desires to be heard on this bill to indicate it now, as I am myself hardly in condition to speak to-day.

Mr. DINGLEY. We should hear from the affirmative first, to know what the reasons are in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Does the request of the gentleman extend to those upon our side who wish to be heard? If so, I should like to be heard.

Mr. BURROWS. If the gentleman from Georgia does not care to proceed now—

Mr. TURNER. I would prefer to postpone my remarks until to-morrow, but if it will inconvenience any other gentleman, as the House is proceeding somewhat to oblige me, I will nevertheless proceed to-day.

Mr. BURROWS. Personally I would be very glad to accommodate the gentleman from Georgia, and I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] would be glad to address the committee if the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. TURNER. Then I will yield the floor for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] is recognized.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I have been desirous ever since the bill last disposed of was first considered in the House to make some remarks pertinent to that bill, but I was unable to get an opportunity to do so, and now I take the earliest opportunity of saying some few words in regard to the general subject before the committee; but I shall omit those facts and statements which I had particularly cared to suggest concerning the bill that has occupied our attention for some time.

The regret has often been expressed that the tariff question was not distinct from political action, or the action of political parties. However, in this country that always has been and must be impossible. It is an important question, to which the interested attention of the people is continually drawn. And, Mr. Chairman, it is one that gives the opportunity to cry "tax," and that arrests the attention of people like a cry of fire at midnight. It is too valuable for certain people who meddle in politics to omit. For one hundred years or more this Government has continued to exist under a protective system. Every moment of its life has been under that system. Theories have been advanced against it, the quality and extent of that protection has been changed, but it has always existed.

At this time, I think, more than at any previous time, the opinion of the people has become crystallized into distinct ideas concerning the subject of protection. There have always been theoretical free traders; there have always been practical protectionists; and even to-day, while every speaker that I have heard address the committee during the discussion which has preceded, seemed to make no distinction of sentiment in the ranks of those who oppose protection, there is nevertheless one to which I wish to call the attention of the committee for a little while.

I regret, and that regret I think will be shared by every fair man, that the discussion of the tariff question has not taken and has not kept the lines of candid discussion which a matter of so much importance would suggest to be proper. It seems to me that undertaking to instruct the people in regard to this question of great complexity, no speaker should stand for a single moment before the House or the committee for the purpose of advancing his own interest or his party interest by an uncandid statement of facts or a partial statement of facts. If he has an opinion or an argument that is valuable, it should come from an honest man to honest men without party coloring and without demagoguery.

On this side of the House, so far as I know, and in the Republican party, I may say, there is no substantial division of sentiment or of opinion on this question. We are protectionists. If you call us robbers on that account, we shall remain protectionists; not because we desire to be robbers or think we are such, but because we believe that that which we call protection is better for our people than that which you call free trade.

On that side of the House there are classes, and how many I do not know. They join in the assaults on the McKinley bill and protection; but among themselves there is division, and many divisions. I know of some members there who believe that all taxation of every kind should consist in a single tax, a tax upon land. Those gentlemen join in the crusade against protection. I know gentlemen belonging to that side of the House who are in favor of abolishing our custom-houses and raising our revenue internally in some form or another. I know men on that side of the House who are in favor of a tariff for revenue only. I know some gentlemen on that side of the House who are in favor of a revenue tariff with incidental protection.

All these parties unite as one, however, when the question arises between them and us. I make no complaint of this. I am willing that it should be so. I care not how hard the blows are that are struck at protection, so that they be fair blows. I care not how many they are, nor how swiftly they fall, so that they be honest blows. But I have been indignant, Mr. Chairman, at the dodges and the fetches which have appeared in this discussion.

I question no gentleman's motives or his intention to be fair; but I do, I must say, with all deference to every gentleman who has entered the discussion upon that side of the House to any trenchant purpose, that there have been statements made and arguments urged that were unfounded and improperly presented. Improperly presented because not worthy of presentation. The gentleman [Mr. McMILLIN] who opened the discussion upon the bill preceding this made the statement that the McKinley law was more protective and carried a higher rate of taxation than any law that had ever existed before.

I am not aware as to the manner in which these gentlemen get up these percentages, which are the basis of such a statement. I am not certain whether the gentleman who made that statement understood that upon the dutiable articles the percentage was higher than ever before, or whether when he spoke of the per cent of taxation, as he is pleased to call it, he simply meant the taxation upon all importations. Allow me to suggest that you may take a single article, rice, which now bears a tariff of 100 per cent. Put every other article on the free list, and what will be the per cent of the tariff? Will it be 100 per cent, the tariff on the single article, no other tariff being imposed upon anything, or would the real percentage be found by comparing the duties paid upon rice with the entire value of importation? If the tariff rate is based alone on the dutiable articles the rate in the supposed case would be 100 per cent and would be 55 per cent higher than that of the law of 1890, rated upon all dutiable articles, and yet only a trifling revenue would be realized.

This tariff law of 1890 is not higher than the preceding one. Even in that view of the matter, and taken in connection with the long extended list of articles that are free, it is very much less. The percentage of the tariff of 1890 on imported articles is just 21½. It is not more. It is not 45; it is not 47; it is not 60; it is not as high as the Walker tariff was; it is not as high as the Mills bill.

I got at that in this way. We had imported into this country on the 30th day of September, 1891, for the year previous to that eight hundred and some odd million dollars' worth of goods. The collections of duties on those importations amounted to $193,000,000. Divide the one set of figures by the other and you get the per cent. It is not 60 per cent, but 21½ per cent. This, I submit, is the only fair way of calculating the per cent of a tariff tax, if you call it a tax.

Mr. Chairman, all the divisions of the Democracy represented here unite in the severest condemnation of this McKinley law. They will be astonished, if they do not know it now—and they do know it now, if they have ever dared to make the computation—that this abused, traduced tariff law of 1890 is less burdensome, less of a tariff "tax," imposing a less percentage of duties than the Mills bill, which is the basis of the Democratic platform of 1888 on the tariff question. You, gentlemen on the other side, take to yourselves the idea that you are advancing in behalf of freedom of trade, and you stand higher in your own estimation than we do, because you are capable, as you think, of rising to that position, and yet to-day you stand upon the foundation of the Mills bill through the declaration of your own last-assembled national convention, and the Mills bill, as I have said, is a higher tariff bill than the McKinley bill. I say this without making any mistake. I say it upon my basis of calculating the percentages. I say it upon the basis of the percentage of duties upon all the importations, and not upon one item.

If you take the importations of 1891, all of them, and compute the amount of "tariff tax" or customs duties that would have been paid upon the same goods if they had been imported under the Mills bill, you will find that the tariff upon the importations of that year would have amounted to $38,000,000 more than it amounted to under the McKinley law. Yet you claim that you are free traders and we are "tariff robbers."

Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of pretense in regard to this subject of the tariff. There is not, in my judgment, a fixedness of opinion upon that question among the people such as is supposed to exist. I believe I state the truth—I believe I am justified in the statement—that had Grover Cleveland, instead of sending in that free-trade message, declared for Samuel J. Randall's platform, the Democratic party of Ohio would be to-day shoulder to shoulder and side by side in favor of American protection. In my own little city I can not find a man of intelligence who is not as much a protectionist as I am, yet many of them vote the Democratic ticket. In fact, that seems to be the test as to whether a man is a Democrat—not what he believes or what he does in any other regard, but simply, Does he vote the Democratic ticket?

There is one class of people in this country who are very earnestly in favor of free trade, and I give them credit for the constancy with which they stand by it. I mean the Southern Democracy. They took it from John C. Calhoun. They did not take it from Jackson or from Jefferson, and if any of them think that they follow Mr. Jefferson they are mistaken. They took it from Calhoun. It was urged by him in the interest of slavery. It was connected with the right of buying and selling babies. It was connected with the right of dissolving the marriage relation when money considerations demanded it. It came down through their traditions. It became attached to the Confederate cause. It went into the Confederate constitution. They believe in it yet, and they are in earnest about it.

There is another class, a class of doctrinaires, a class of educated gentlemen, who get their views from books, and who think that 2 and 2 make 4, no matter how you place them [laughter]. They are unable to understand that conditions change theories. They can not be made to understand that if you put 2 and 2 side by side the result is 22 instead of 4. [Laughter and applause.]

There is still another class, the importers, who are largely foreigners. Many of them, it is true, are natives and citizens, but they all have large interests involved. But when you get outside of these classes there are very few men except politicians who take the subject of "free trade" to heart or are much in earnest about it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in 1890 a Republican Congress, understanding right well the probable effect upon itself and its following, passed what it believed to be a just and necessary tariff law. It intended to include within the scope of that law, directly or indirectly, all the interests of the country. That the law was perfect can not be said, but where or how its imperfections can be remedied I do not know. That Congress acted bravely. It submitted the law to the people late in the fall of that year. The measure met with misunderstanding, misrepresentation, misapprehension, and the Republican party, as they had expected would be the case, were defeated.

An immense majority of the succeeding House were "tariff reformers." They came here under a pledge to the people that they would work out a "reform" in the tariff law. They told the people that every line of the McKinley bill was vicious, and they came here to set it right. The organ of the majority, the Committee on Ways and Means, have introduced three tariff bills, one of them the bill that was disposed of this morning, which takes from the farmer the protection that has been given to him on his wool. And in connection with that measure there is a point on which I have listened to the arguments on the other side with a great deal of regret.

It will not, I trust, be taken unkindly if I say that whilst upon the other side of the House gentlemen who addressed the Committee of the Whole upon that bill argued, many of them, that the McKinley tariff upon wool tended to lessen the price of wool, or else had no effect on the price, there is not a man in this House or elsewhere who believes that statement or argument when he looks at it and reflects upon it calmly.

Why, gentlemen, what are you doing? You say to us that the tariff is a tax—that the tax is equal to the tariff imposed; yet on this question of wool you say that the tariff of 11 cents a pound upon such wool as is raised in my district has either made the price of wool less than it would otherwise have been, or has had no effect upon it at all. You do not mean to say that the tariff reduces prices at once before competition can come in. You do not mean to destroy the whole Democratic argument. You want free wool for the sake of having cheap clothing; and when that is suggested to the people you say the farmer will receive more for his wool than he does now.

Why? Because it will be mixed. Mixed with what? How is the mixture going to raise the value? Gentlemen, you know—everybody knows—that that is simply a falsehood; it is not true; there is no sense in it. Yet in that bill, while you strike down the farmer's protection, you strike down the barrier that was raised by the McKinley bill against the dirty stuff which is not wool, but is called such, and used as such. The McKinley bill put 30 cents a pound tariff on shoddy. You put 25 per cent tariff on shoddy—equivalent to 2 cents a pound. The gentleman who opened this discussion said that we had invited shoddy and mungo and rags to this country. He spoke of "the rags of the beggar, the rags of the pesthouses of Europe."

We put upon those rags a tariff of 10 cents a pound, more than they would sell for in New York—more than they are worth anywhere. You have taken that off and invited the dirty rags, the filthy beggar's rags, and the disease-laden rags of Europe to come in uncleaned, unmanufactured, and free of duty. Is the wool of the farmer to be raised in price by mingling with it mungo, shoddy, and the rags of Europe?

Mr. SHIVELY. The gentleman is aware that rags of all other kinds were put on the free list by the McKinley bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. All other kinds of what?

Mr. SHIVELY. All other kinds except woolen rags were put upon the free list.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What harm was there in that?

Mr. SHIVELY. Was it not interfering with the rag-picking industry of this country?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am speaking of wool. By your bill you leave all kinds of rags free which are left free by the bill that you denounce. Why, sir, the rags of the market are woolen rags, rags out of which shoddy is made, rags out of which the clothing of the poor is made, rags that are to be mingled with the wool of the farmer of this country. That is what we are talking about.

Now, Mr. Chairman, leaving that matter with those suggestions, allow me to take issue with the statement made by Grover Cleveland, that all tariff is a tax to the extent thereof, and the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], the other day, that all tariffs are necessarily a tax. Denying both those statements, I wish to consider this question a moment. The tariff on cut nails to-day is no tax upon anybody, because there are no importations. A tariff law may be so framed that from beginning to end there will be no tax on anybody. So when it is broadly stated that a tariff is necessarily a tax, it is a mistake. If it operates, however, it is a tax; but upon whom is it a tax? Is it always a tax on the consumer, or is it sometimes a tax on the producer of the commodity?

I know that the illustration I am going to give now will be forgotten in five minutes; it may have no effect, but still I will give it. Under the McKinley bill there was a heavy tariff put on tin plate. Tin plate continued to come into the country with the same and even increased volume. Six million dollars were paid into the Treasury from that source alone in one year. Yet the price of tin plate did not rise in the market. Who paid that tax? You gentlemen who are so much interested in the welfare of the farmer answer me that. Here on a single item $6,000,000 came into the Treasury of the United States; yet our people paid not one farthing of that. Who did? Let no man say that I make a mistake as to my figures and facts in this matter. I know whereof I speak. I am interested in this subject, and I know the price of tin.

Now who paid that tax? "A tariff is a tax." This is the parrot-like cry of the politician. But the tariff on tin plate was paid by the foreign maker and by him alone. But, Mr. Chairman, he suffered no loss except in the diminution of profits, because for years the combination of the tin-makers in Wales—a syndicate and trust such as would make you Democrats and Alliance men crazy if it existed in this country—has made from 20 to 35 per cent clear gain every year out of you; for more than half of the tin plate of the world is consumed in the United States. You had no disturbance of feeling when you were paying to the syndicate in Wales a 35 per cent profit. But when we compel that same syndicate to pay $6,000,000 of that profit into the Treasury of the United States in a year, you propose to repeal that law. Yet that $6,000,000 takes the place of necessary taxes which would otherwise fall upon the farmer and producer in this country. Everyone of you knows that these statements are true; and everyone of you insists that that provision in the law was a wrong to the people of this country.

The bill now pending before this committee is another illustration of the same fact. When the McKinley bill went into operation cotton-ties which are used in the South were made abroad and imported. For the year 1890 almost the entire consumption was imported, as had been the case previously. A tax was put upon them equal at least to the tax upon barrel hoops, a duty which you pay and which you do not propose to disturb.

This is an article that requires more labor to make than the common hoop iron, because it has a button and a slot at the respective ends. Now we used to make these ties and made them altogether in this country, but by a mistake of the tariff law of 1883 they were not protected, and as a result England made them all. In 1890 they became protected, and now look at the report of this committee and you will see that they do not claim that the cotton-ties have increased in cost. They say that it is a matter of tardy justice to the farmers of the South that this bill should pass.

But, Mr. Chairman, what do they mean? They say also that there was no importation of this article from abroad. The fact is that every cotton-tie is made at home, and in fifteen days after the President had signed the bill, the cotton-tie industry of this country was in brisk operation. The mills that make hoop iron can make cotton-ties and the mills in my district went to work at once, also in Pittsburg, in Pomeroy, in Youngstown, and in Atlanta, Ga. All of these mills proceeded to make them. Nay, they did not content themselves by making as good ties as had been imported, but they made a better tie; they made a tie out of steel and they sold it for what? Was the tariff a tax to increase the price? Why they sold it for less than before the McKinley bill went into operation.

Gentlemen, you will to-morrow insist that the tariff was a great wrong to the farmers of the South. A gentleman from Georgia, speaking with me in the cloakroom, complained of the McKinley bill as affecting the South, and said that it struck them hard. Said I, "In what respect; in what article?" He replied, "the cotton-tie." I said, "Is that so? How does the price differ from what it was before the McKinley law went into operation?" He responded, "I do not know." Said I, "I do, and I will tell you. They are 8 per cent cheaper than they were, and they were cheaper within fifteen days after the McKinley bill passed."

Mr. EVERETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. EVERETT. Did you ever pack a bale of cotton or buy any cotton-ties for any purpose? I want to state to you as a matter of fact that ties are sold at a higher rate to-day in Georgia than I have ever known them before, and the most worthless tie I ever knew.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That, I suppose, is the Atlanta tie. Mr. EVERETT. And I want to denounce the Atlanta tie, if that is where I got mine.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What price do you pay now for cotton-ties?

Mr. EVERETT. And I wish to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And I decline to yield to the gentleman further. I yielded to ask one question and he has asked three or four, but does not answer mine.

Mr. EVERETT. Are you afraid to be questioned about the very integrity of the position you occupy?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the courtesy of that remark is such that I will answer any question the gentleman sees proper to ask.

Mr. EVERETT. Then I wish to ask what excuse you can give for putting a greater tax on hoop iron when cut into lengths of 11 feet than when cut in any other lengths?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I make no excuse for any such thing, because it does not exist in this connection.

Mr. EVERETT. Then you do not know what the McKinley bill touches.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking on the subject of cotton-ties. I know where they make them; at what place they are sold. I know that they are made at Pomeroy, and I know what they make; but I do not know what they make in Atlanta, although I saw a Democratic paper from there which stated precisely what I have alleged on the floor to-day as to the value and the quality of the ties and as to the fact of their being made there, and said that it was only fair to say that we have to thank the McKinley bill for this.

Now, I do not know what the price is as far as the location the gentleman represents is concerned, but I do know—

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. What do you quote as the price?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Oh, I am not quoting this morning. I said I would not quote the price list, but state generally. I will say to the gentleman that I have the list published from month to month, the price lists showing that these ties were sold on board the railroad trains at the place of manufacture, and my statement corresponds with these lists. Now, I do not know what the middleman does, but I know that the ties will be the same price that is fixed on board the cars at the place of manufacture; and I know that it is the same at Pittsburg, Youngstown, and at Pomeroy—that the prices of cotton-ties to-day are less than they were prior to the McKinley bill, and I know that the quality of the tie is superior.

Now, I am not mistaken in that. I do not know what you gentlemen of the South have to pay. I do not know but that the middlemen of the South get your farmers by the throat and they may be selling cotton-ties there as they tried to sell tin cups in Ohio in 1890, at 25 cents apiece, because of the McKinley bill.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, merely for information?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will even sacrifice my time for such a purpose as that.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will you furnish the names of any factories where we can get cotton-ties cheaper now?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I will be glad to do so at any time. I have them in my desk and will furnish them to the gentleman after I get through with my speech. Cartwright, McCurdy & Co., of Youngstown, Ohio, is the name of one firm, and I will guarantee they will be of the kind I speak of. I will guarantee that they will be cheaper than they were before the McKinley bill passed; and I say, this being so, there is nothing under heaven in this bill but injury to our manufacturers and to the cotton-grower.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not be able, as I was intending, to pursue my remarks in the order which I had intended to do it, nor upon certain subjects to which I wished to call the attention of the committee, but I wish to suggest one or two other things.

I feel, sir, that this attack upon the wool-growers' interest that has just been completed so far as this House is concerned has been severe and injurious to them and to the interests of the country. I believe that the reason why wool was cheaper before the tariff law of 1867 than afterwards was because, first, there was little wool produced in this country and the market was made abroad. It was less years afterwards because the production in this country had so greatly increased, from 60,000,000 to 300,000,000 pounds. The market was then made here instead of abroad.

I think I know what I say when I say to this committee that the kind of wool that is raised in Ohio, the combing wool, the kind of wool that comes from my country, and which is of the same kind that comes from Western Pennsylvania, from West Virginia, and from Michigan, can not be produced if unprotected.

It is the result of labor, care, and invested capital. It is no more raw material to the farmer as it leaves his hand than cloth is when it comes to the manufacturer of clothing.

When the wool-growing interests of this country have succumbed, as succumb they will if free trade attaches to it, and no man must make any mistake in regard to this matter—the loss of the tariff in 1883 on this kind of wool amounting to a cent and a quarter a pound, sent millions of the sheep to the shambles, reduced the number of them, and it is a matter of demonstration to-day that that kind of wool can not be grown at the prices of to-day in the absence of a tariff. And when that time comes, instead of having cheaper wool to mix, or cheaper wool to use, you will have wool the price of which will be fixed in London by the syndicate that handles every pound of foreign wool that ever comes to this country. It comes through London as waters pour out through the narrowest part of a funnel. It is all owned there, and when the competition at home ceases you will pay for that as you paid for your tin plate, as you pay for everything that is made abroad without competition here.

You will go on and say from theory that the tariff is a tax and the consumer pays it. You will put your hand in your pocket and you will find the money, that ought by your theory to be in the Treasury, is still there, but that will make no difference. You will say that this tariff is a burden on everything that the poor man uses. You look at the price list and nothing has increased in value, but it will not change your opinion. The gentleman who opened this discussion said that everything that covers a poor man costs more than before, and when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] referred to the fact that everything a poor man had need for was as cheap or cheaper, he finally fell back upon the fact that tin roofs were dearer. Most of the poor people in my country do not live in mansions covered by tin roofs, and even as to that article the gentleman was hardly correct.

There is one thing else I wish to say. There has got to be a system of argumentation in this House that was applied upon the silver bill, to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. A majority of this House, so far as they could be pledged, were pledged in behalf of free coinage. They came here with that understanding, and they debated the bill that was presented. No argument against the wisdom of free coinage changed the position of a single friend of the measure.

But this argument set them thinking: "If you pass the free coinage bill you will not elect your next President." They came here for business, pledged in the interest of the people, the people that are groaning for the lack of sufficient money to do their business as they aver, and as I do not believe in their estimation; and yet, not because the proposed law was unjust, but admitting it to be just and beneficial, it was killed by their permission because of a want of that courage that seems to have died out of the Democratic party when Gen. Jackson drew his last breath. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Fox of Kinderhook seems, personally, and by his successors, to have taken possession of the party since then, and now they are looking to see when and how they can most cunningly vote on a measure and not at the merits of the measure itself.

The lack of straightforward courage on the part of the majority here is as conspicuous in its action on the tariff as it is on the currency question. Denouncing the existing law as a monster of iniquity they merely nibble at a few of its details; condemning protection as a crime they protect manufactures.

They talk about entering wedges, and boast of destroying existing law and the system of protection on the sly, as the Irishman who had taken the pledge wanted whisky put in his soda water "unbeknownst" to himself.

They are afraid to act lest they lose their places and the elections. Think of Gen. Jackson attacking the United States bank with "entering wedges," chopping corners of the building in which its vaults are located!

The old-fashioned sturdy Democracy is dead. Cunning stands for conviction, policy for conviction.

Cunning and policy, however, have made a mistake. The attack on the wool-growing interest is as fatal as an attack on Wall street would have been.

Let me give them a pointer. In 1888 the wool men of this country elected a President. In 1892 the wool men of this country will elect another. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the power of taxation is the greatest power possessed or exercised by the Government. If this power is fairly and honestly exercised the people will have liberty and happiness, but if unjustly used, then slavery and wretchedness. The causes that led to the formation of this Government grew out of the power and right of the English Government to tax the people of this country, and some reflections connected with that event I deem not out of place in a discussion of tariff reform.

Our Pilgrim Fathers, in laying the foundation of this great Republic, began this work on a broad and comprehensive principle, which has gone forth to bless the world. As the eye wanders about the extent of our country it beholds the labors of brave and good men who have lived and toiled for their country. The founders of this Government, the resolute conquerors of the lakes and forests of the New World, occupied in the first period of their social existence the depressed position of a European colony; but the spirit of liberty which had led them to these wild regions and the gifts of a magnificent and fertile nature were sufficient to prepare them for this high destiny. This degraded condition lasted for more than one hundred and fifty years before the time of deliverance came, which was on the 18th day of April, 1775, when the cannons of Lexington called a new-born nation to regenerate the world.

The farmers of the country rose in their might and beat their plowshares that tilled the soil into swords to defend it, and in that memorable struggle they finally proclaimed at Philadelphia the immortal principles of self-government which was supposed to forever drive tyranny from this land and cause every generous heart to beat with joy. At that moment a new national star took its position among the nations of the earth which was destined to outshine them all and to exercise a great moral influence on the world. The mother country at that time was overwhelmed with debt and she wished to transfer a portion of the burden to her colonies and attempted to infringe their rights by the imposition of the celebrated stamp tax in order to pay the expenses of a war that they had been engaged in, as they claimed, for the protection of the colonies, but the colonies refused to bear the expense of a war with which they had nothing to do, or to support a luxurious court, which was equally repugnant to their repose and American simplicity.

A second attempt was made, but with equal firmness the Pilgrim Fathers repelled this attempt to violate their liberties, and England became offended at this unexampled audacity and caused the port of Boston to be closed, and this kindled the flames of war. Then appeared the host of blazing meteors, among whom were Patrick Henry and Josiah Quincy, who illuminated the path of our Revolution, and who have ever since watched in their high spheres over our safety. The war broke the chains of thirteen colonies and offered to an astonished world the most perfect example of self-government ever established on earth. The Declaration of Independence found thirteen States and 3,000,000 people; now there are forty-four States and a population of 63,000,000.

The whole exterior commerce of the Republic in 1780 amounted to about $8,500,000, now our annual exports exceed $700,000,000. From this small beginning we have grown to be the greatest nation known to history or that ever occupied a place on this globe. What was the cause of this great revolution at that time? In 1774 Josiah Quincy, in an address to the people of Massachusetts, among other things, said:

Blandishments will not fascinate us, nor will the threats of a halter intimidate, for under God we are determined that whosoever, whensoever, or howsoever we shall be called to make our exit, we will die free men.

In 1775, in the Virginia convention, Patrick Henry, among other things, made that memorable statement so familiar to every school boy—

Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death!

Can it be true that these men were slaves and that we are descendants of a race of slaves?

Clearly they were not, but the slavery they referred to was the slavery of taxation. The English Government placed a tariff tax of 3 pence a pound on tea, for certain protection they claimed they rendered the colonies, and this more than any other cause produced the Revolution. Unjust taxation unsheathed the sword of Washington and inspired the pen of Jefferson.

Each year for one hundred and fifteen years we have celebrated the achievements of the fathers in Fourth of July orations, bonfires, and general rejoicing, and yet, when we consider what they accomplished, it was simply successful resistance to unjust taxation. This is what they regarded as liberty, and they were right.

For them and for us and for every people the question of taxation is the supreme question. It means either freedom or slavery. The people who formed this Government realized this great truth, that the power to tax carries with it the power to destroy, and to destroy not only property but, what is a thousand times more valuable, liberty also. And for this reason our fathers firmly and stubbornly resolved that, come what might, death or the dungeon, they would not pay an unjust tax. Their motto was, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." And now, my countrymen, in heaven's name, I will ask you, if a tax of 3 pence a pound on tea was slavery, what is a tax on all the necessities of life of 62 per cent under the McKinley bill? What consummate fools our forefathers were to engage in a seven-year war about a trifling tax of 3 pence a pound on tea. No, gentlemen, let us not deceive ourselves. Unjust taxation is the antipode of liberty, and in fact is slavery.

Without taxation armies could not be raised and maintained, and without armies the liberties of the people can not be taken from them. It is therefore true that the revenue of a state is the state, and that out of the question of taxation grows the liberties of the state. If our fathers had submitted to unwarranted taxation in their day we would be serving as slaves of England now, and if we fail in our duty in regard to taxation to-day, our children will be serving in slavery to some other nation hereafter.

The very fundamental principle of slavery is that there exists in the government the right to take the labor of one man and give it in benefits to another. The English Government thought for the so-called protection which they had rendered the colonies therefore they had a right to tax our people and transfer their labor to support royalty and a corrupt court.

The Declaration of Independence was a protest against such practices, and the Constitution under which we live was enacted to secure the rights of the people against unlawful and oppressive taxation.

But scarcely was the Constitution ratified before there appeared a difference of opinion among men as to the powers of the United States and of the several States themselves. But in regard to no provision of the Constitution was there such a contrariety of opinion among men as to the power of the Government respecting taxation. The Constitution in plain terms announces the power of Congress in regard to taxation. It declares that "Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." This is the grant of power and the limitation as well. The courts of the country, from Maine to California, have held that taxation can only be for public purposes, and the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly so held and decided.

Yet, notwithstanding that it has been so held by the highest courts in the land, our political opponents construe the Constitution to mean that they can levy a tax for private purposes also, which they see proper to call a protective tariff, and for the purpose of euphony they say it is for the protection of American labor and to secure a home market to our farmers.

Now, what is this so-called protection? It is simply a penal statute which lays a certain duty on imports so as to require those who need certain goods to purchase them at prices fixed not alone by the laws of supply and demand, but in part by the provisions of the statute itself. This simply means that the Government has a right to tax one class of persons for the benefit of another, and they justify this on the theory that thereby the community at large may be benefited and that in the end each citizen may receive individually some compensation.

But it is perfectly absurd to insist that protection benefits alike all persons residing within the jurisdiction of the statute. The tariff is higher on some articles than on others, so it must of necessity benefit some more than others. Thus those who are enriched by the statute must grow richer and those from whom something is taken must in the end grow poorer. But the constitutional objection to the whole system is that there is no authority in law or good morals for the Government to take one man's labor and give the benefit of it to another.

In a free government every man is entitled to the rewards of his own labor. Slavery once existed in the South, and that slavery was evidenced by the fact that the law gave the wages of the slave to the master. It was slavery according to law. The Government recognized the right of one man to take the fruits of the labor of another, and this was slavery. But we were informed that at the close of the rebellion in 1865 slavery was forever abolished in this country, yet if there still exists in the Government the power to take the reward of the labor of some and give to others without just compensation, then slavery still exists. If, then, under any system of taxation the Government has the right to take by legislation the entire proceeds of the labor of any class of men and give it to another class, the class from whom their wages are taken are absolute slaves, but if only one-half of their wages be taken then they are but one-half slaves, and if one-fourth then they are in slavery but one-fourth of their time.

If the principle be once admitted that the Government has the right to levy a tax solely for the purpose of protecting some particular industry or business or class, then such Government can no longer be free. The charter of our independence declares "that all men are created equal;" that is, they are not equal morally, socially, physically, or mentally, but that all men are equal before the law. If, then, a tax is laid to protect a class, then we are not equal, for no one will insist for a single moment that protection protects all alike. It never can be so, never was, and never will be. The very boast of protection is to protect infant industries, although some of these industries are hoary with age.

If a tax is levied for protection some persons must pay that tax, and some persons receive the benefits of it. It is clearly not the same person who pays the tax that receives it, for this would be simply nonsense. Our protective tariff is in the interest of manufacturers, and therefore they receive the benefits, while the farmers and laborers of the country pay it. It is in the interest of a class and against the masses. It is a violation of the Constitution, which declares that duties and imports shall be uniform throughout the United States; it is subversive of the principle of freedom. The founder of the State of Pennsylvania, a greater thinker than whom never lived, said, "That is a free country where laws rule and where the people are parties to the making of the laws." The people formed the Constitution of this country, and by virtue of that instrument we are assembled here to-day.

It is the measure of our power, and when laws are passed within its provisions the people are parties to such laws, for we were sent here to make laws within the power granted to us.

But if laws are made outside of the provision of the Constitution, then the people are not parties to the making of any such laws. Nor can it be insisted for a single moment that the people themselves, if they were here and could act as we are acting, would pass laws to tax themselves into slavery in order to build up manufactories so that some may become millionaires, and spend their time hobnobbing in Europe with the nobility there.

No, the people of this country think more of their liberties than they do of trade and commerce.

Patrick Henry voiced the sentiment of the people of this country in the Virginia convention in 1787, when he said, "You are not to inquire how your trade may be increased nor how you are to become a great and powerful nation, but how your liberties are to be secured." Taxation for any other purpose than the maintenance of the Government is, to that extent, slavery. Popular or free government must always rest on the consent of the governed and to secure the continuation of such consent it is necessary that the laws which bind such people together should be just and equitable, securing to all the greatest freedom consistent with civilization. Of all known institutions, free government has been the slowest in its growth. When we reflect on the struggles for personal liberty for three thousand years and look into the heroic conduct of the fathers of the Republic and their efforts in behalf of liberty, we must be persuaded that the attainment of perfect liberty is no easy task.

Such is not the teachings of human experience. If experience teaches any lesson more forcibly than another it is that liberty has cost oceans of blood, rivers of tears, and mountains of treasures. Liberty is vastly more important to us than blazing furnaces manned and operated by a tax ridden-race of slaves, for liberty can only exist as the result of free individual action, energy, and independence. Liberty is essential to human happiness and those who have once enjoyed its heaven-born blessings when truly aroused to its dangers they would rather part with life itself, for where liberty is there slavery can not exist, and what truly brave man would not rather die than remain in bondage? "A day, an hour of liberty is worth a whole eternity of slavery." No address on tariff reform is complete that omits from consideration the question of personal and industrial liberty.

The difference between just and unjust taxation is the difference between freedom and slavery. Our people are free to write, to speak, free to think and to worship; we have a free gospel and a free press, but our people are not free to sell their labor or the product of such labor to whom and where they please, and while these restraints remain we are a free people only in name. There is no question but the Government must have a revenue. No Government can exist without money, and the means the Government employs to get money is called taxation. Taxation is therefore necessary, and against a just tax no good citizen should complain; but in order that a tax may be just it should be uniform and should be necessary for the maintenance of the Government. Under our Government, as held by the judicial power of the States, taxes can only be levied for public purposes, and when the Government goes beyond this the Constitution of our country is violated and the taxpayer has just ground for complaint.

When the citizen feels that more money is collected of him than is necessary for the support of the Government, that extravagance and not economy characterizes public expenditures, that money is collected from him for private purposes and given to private persons who have now more than they can use, and that the taxing power is used to build up certain industries at the expense of others and at the expense of the general public and to make some millionaires and others paupers, the citizen has a right to complain. The true interpretation of our laws is equality. Laws which are unequal and impose burdens upon some in order that others may be benefited; laws which exact a tribute from the labor of others and which grant privileges to certain lines of business or to individuals engaged in certain lines of business and deny such privileges to all others, are unjust and un-American, and they should have no place in our system. Equal rights to all and special privileges to none is the true American system, and any law that violates this principle, no matter under what pretense it secured its enactment, is unjust and in violation of our Constitution and the spirit of our free institutions and the rights of the masses of the people.

As I said before, no good citizen will find any fault with a fair system of taxation. Taxes we must have, if we have government, but these taxes should be fair and just. Every fair system of taxation should look both to the manner of laying burdens and to the purpose for which they are laid. If taxes are to be laid so as to oppress some and favor others, that is not a just system of taxation. If taxes are not laid for public use, but for private benefit, then that is not a just system of taxation. In either case discriminations are made in the treatment of citizens; some are forced by law to pay tribute to others, and thereby the Government becomes a class government. Our present tariff system is gross class legislation. It puts the chief burden of supporting the Federal Government on those who work for their daily bread, and sparingly on those who own the accumulated wealth of the country.

But its greatest iniquity is that it costs those who bear its chief burden three or four times more than the great sum it carries into the Federal Treasury. That is, taxes are not laid for the purpose of getting revenue, enormous as the demands for revenue now is, but primarily for the purpose of protecting manufacturers by raising the price of what they make to sell to all the rest of the people. This is done by putting a heavy tax or fine, which nearly amounts to prohibition, on all articles brought from abroad that might compete with articles manufactured in this country. To express it in different language, while nine out of ten of our people must take all the chances and all the risks of home and foreign markets, the strongest power of the Government, its power of taxation, is put behind the great manufacturers so that their business may prosper beyond all contingencies and their dividends be piled up no matter how others lack for them. Manufacturers must have a profit, is the shibboleth of the Republican party. For many years past all legislation has been partial to large manufacturers and correspondingly oppressive on the rights of farmers and laborers. To what pernicious extent this system has been carried no language can adequately express.

It can not and will not come to good. Artificial regulations by the Government of this character has never, since the beginning of the world, had any effect but a bad one on the general condition of the society that tried them. It is true that the Republican party insists that they have changed the nature of things and have enriched the masses of the people by the simple process of robbing them of the fruits of their toil. They loudly cry out that the country is a boundless state of prosperity. They get this buncombe inserted in the their platform and then thunder it from every stump on which they speak, and state as proof of what they assert that this is the richest country in the world; that the national wealth exceeds sixty billions of dollars. This last fact is true, but that wealth is not distributed among the people.

The manufacturers are indeed superabundantly rich, and invested, as they are, by the Republican party, with the privilege of plundering their fellow-citizens, why should they not be rich? But for every millionaire they have made they have also made a thousand paupers. If we estimate the prosperity of the country only by the overgrown fortunes of individuals specially favored by law, then Ireland is prosperous as well as America, for they have the same legal machinery in perfect order which makes the rich richer, while it grinds the poor down to the deepest poverty.

There are 800,000 men engaged in railroading in this country. The track hands get $1.10 a day on an average. I ask, gentlemen, here how can any man support a wife and five children on an average compensation of $1.10 a day? Taking out rainy days it does not amount to $250 a year.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman's proposition is correct, why is it that the laboring men are coming here from Great Britain and all parts of Europe and that in very few instances do manufacturers come? Another question: Does the gentleman believe that there is a tariff tax of $10 upon any laboring man's suit of clothes?

Mr. LANE. I believe that if there is eighty per cent tariff on woolen goods it is put on for that purpose, and it must necessarily raise the price of the goods that much. The gentleman's second question is an old "chestnut" which has been answered here over and over and over again. The protectionists have tried to take away the credit from the Dicty and to say that everything good in this country is due to the protective tariff. I know it is true that people come here from the Old World to work, and I know also that your protective tariff has brought a great many of them here. That tariff has brought much of the pauper labor of Europe to this country, and if it was not for the tariff you would not have so many immigrants of that class. You put a premium on pauper labor to the injury of the labor of our own people.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the protective tariff is crushing the laboring men in the way you say it is, how does it come that, as you say also, the protective tariff is bringing workmen here from Europe?

Mr. LANE. Because you are stimulating the market here for the time being, but it must ultimately be clogged. From 1870 to 1880 we had so many industries started in this country that if they had all been run at their full capacity they would have destroyed the entire manufacturing business of the country. But those factories have been closed down, a good many of them, and wages have been cut down one-half. Now, I will ask the gentleman a question. I tell him that these laboring men of whom I have spoken are earning $1.10 a day, and I ask the gentleman whether he regards that as a fair compensation for a man with a wife and four or five children to support? Yet that is what the railroads are paying all over this country.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will state that so far as my own State is concerned, there is no good laboring man there who works for $1.10 a day, and if I had my way no good man should work in this country anywhere for $1.10 a day: I would rather give him $3 a day.

A MEMBER on the Democratic side. But your system does not permit it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. One word further. I wish to say this, and it is just as much an established fact as the gentleman's existence is, that to-day the laboring man in the United States is earning more money than he is earning anywhere else on the globe; that he is earning more here to-day than he ever did before, and that he can buy more for the proceeds of his labor than he ever could before.

Mr. LANE. Oh, that has been exploded time and again.

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; it is true.

Mr. LANE. It has been exploded time and again. There is free-trade England that pays more wages than they do in protective Germany. The purpose of a tariff is to raise the price of goods; and when you raise the price of goods you always reduce the price of wages. That is a law as universal as the law of gravitation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does my friend think that the tariff raises the price of wool?

Mr. LANE. I say that it raises the price of goods.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does it raise the price of wool?

Mr. LANE. In some cases it does and in some cases it does not; it depends upon circumstances. But the purpose of a tariff is to raise the price of goods; and when you raise the price of goods you reduce the price of wages. By means of your protected industries you take from the working people one-third of the value of their labor; and when you do that you practically put them in a condition of slavery.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will simply say to the gentleman that if the laboring men whom he speaks of as being in a condition of slavery were citizens of my district, he could not get one inch toward Congress or any other place of respectability.

Mr. LANE. I speak the truth in saying that when you take from me my wages by law against my will, I am a slave to you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman's remarks may apply to his State; they do not to mine.

Mr. LANE. They apply to yours as well as mine. You deceive your people; that is all; you do not tell them the truth. When any man has a portion of his wages taken from him by law against his will so that he gets no return for that much of his labor, he is to that extent a slave.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am willing the gentleman should go into the RECORD as saying that the laboring men of this country are "slaves."

Mr. LANE. I say that they are slaves so far as your tariff takes from them the wages of their labor; and you do take from the laboring people one-third of their earnings to give the proceeds to the great monopolies of this country to build up great castles, and whenever you build one castle you make a thousand hovels.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I hope my colleague [Mr. LANE] will yield, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] so seldom asks a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Perhaps if my friend from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked more questions he would have more wisdom.

Now, I wish to say this to my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE]: As a matter of course wealth will never be equally distributed, because the gifts of Providence are never distributed with entire equality anywhere. But is not wealth in this country to-day more equally distributed than it is in free-trade Great Britain?

Mr. LANE. That is not the question.

This nation is rich, but the masses of the people are poor. More than $1,000,000 go daily into the Federal Treasury, and because of the vicious system by which that sum is collected $4,000,000 go daily into the pockets of rich manufacturers, while millions of industrious, hard-working people find unremunerative the legitimate and proper business in which they are engaged. The wealth of the country is consolidated in the hands of a few. With a population of 62,500,000, one-half of our national wealth is owned by not over 25,000 persons, and this is largely due to unjust tariff laws. Protection builds up classes at the expense of the masses; it takes from one and gives to another.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment at this point that I may read what some of the laboring men themselves say about this matter?

Mr. LANE. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. I had published yesterday in the RECORD a petition of the Kensington Reform Club of Philadelphia, an organization embracing workers in woolen and other fabrics, asking Congress to pass the free wool bill, which we passed this morning. Among other things they say—

If, as has been asserted in Congress recently, the manufacturers do not need or want a high tariff, and that it is solely for the benefit of labor, which never gets any of them, then there is not the slightest impediment to a mutual agreement for its abolition. But since the gentlemen who make this assertion still oppose a reduction, the workmen, who do not want it either, are certainly justified in praying that these kindly souls may stop their benevolent endeavors to raise wages by law, which they can not do, and set about raising them in the mills, which they can do, and if they will only divide with their workmen that which they usually give to the party machine it will make a perceptible difference in the workers' pay rolls.

[Applause.]

That is what the laboring men say about this question; and I might read a whole page of such comments upon the protective policy which has been pursued.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, I hope my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE] will allow me to put a question to my friend from Tennessee. I would like the gentleman from Tennessee to state the name of the Democratic free-trade reformer who drew up that petition and went around to get some ignorant people to sign it.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is prepared by a club of practical workmen and comes here signed by the secretary of that organization. His name is appended to it. And as my friend from Maine does not seem to be still satisfied with the kind indulgence of my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE], I will read another paragraph.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am always glad to hear you read, for you do it so well.

Mr. McMILLIN. But this man talks better than I can read.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then he must be an exceedingly great man.

Mr. McMILLIN. He says:

The labor in the woolen mills has never been in so depressed a condition as in the past year; the carpet industry was never so demoralized. Wages have been reduced both in a direct way and by the various subterfuges called adjustments, readjustments, and fines, and yet the cost of living has been perceptibly increased until the condition of labor is well-nigh unbearable. Employment has grown more unsteady, many mills working but partial time, some closed entirely, while in others the waiting for warp and filling amounts to a loss of from one-quarter to one-half time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I know, Mr. Chairman, that it is exceedingly mean for the gentleman from Tennessee and myself to take up so much of the time of my friend from Illinois; but I would like to be permitted to ask the gentleman if he does not know that it is an absolute fact, notwithstanding the reasoning that he gives and his communications, that labor is better employed to-day than it was two years ago, that it was never better paid than it is to-day, and that the people were never buying so much for so little labor as they can buy to-day?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know anything of the kind. On the contrary, I show here facts that have not been and can not be controverted; and within less than six months after the bill went into effect—

Mr. MILLIKEN. What bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. The McKinley bill—within less than six months after that bill went into effect, a bill where all was given to the iron industry that they chose to ask, 14,000 employes were on a strike and many others had their wages reduced. I have the evidence here, if the gentleman wants it, and not only that, but the evidence in various other branches of business, showing reductions in wages all along the line, reductions everywhere, but not a single instance of increase.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But my friend knows also that two or three years ago there were many times 14,000 men on strike in this country, and within a much shorter period in free-trade Great Britain there have been strikes which will equal that in magnitude.

Mr. LANE. Well, Mr. Chairman, whether wages are nominally larger in this country than in England—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If my friend from Illinois will allow me a moment—

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have the good fortune of knowing the gentleman whose name is signed to this paper to which my friend from Tennessee has just called attention, and after having heard him speak—he is a day laborer, working with his hands in a woolen mill—but excepting the gentleman from Maine there is nobody on this floor who is more intelligent or more captivating as a speaker on this subject than this very person who signs this communication. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have had some very great compliments paid for the few good things in this life, but never so great a compliment as to have the gentleman from Kentucky make a favorable exception as between himself and me.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, this hydra-headed monster, a protective tariff, existed for nearly five centuries in England in the nature of corn laws. These corn laws restricted exports and imports by a tariff tax, and were passed, as claimed by their friends, for the purpose of procuring abundance and cheapness. In other words, the same Satanic falsehood was then uttered in regard to the passage of the corn laws that is now stated in regard to the passage of our protective tariff, namely, that it was done for the benefit of the farmers and laborers.

Experience, however, proved that this was not true, but in fact the landholders reaped the benefits of the corn laws, which resulted in a landed aristocracy, and instead of producing abundance and cheapness, as was predicted, they produced destitution and scarcity. This tariff curse was retained in England until it drove thousands of farmers and laborers to seek homes in foreign lands, and others were driven into exile. The poorhouses were crowded and thousands died of actual starvation. History informs us that the poor rates in the city of London alone in 1842 amounted to nearly $150,000,000. England had her protective tariff, but millions of her children prayed in vain for their daily bread. For ten years active and aggressive measures were used by the people for the repeal of this infamous statute, but to no avail. The Anti-Corn Law League was organized and a letter or paper sent every week to each of its 300,000 members, at a cost of $5,000 per week. That was truly a campaign of education, the most memorable the world ever beheld, and it brought deliverance to the people.

Parliament, although backed by a heartless aristocracy, could not withstand the piercing cries of the famishing for bread; the torch of the mob lit up the lurid skies and their cries shook the very walls of Parliament itself; so it became necessary to call the assistance of the army, as we are informed in history, to protect the lives of those who had so grievously wronged the people. Sir Robert Peel, some years before this, as the potential head of the English Government, was an advocate of protection, but having been convinced of his error by the arguments of his opponents he gave the English people the cheap loaf, which was the noblest act of his whole official life.

He said of the passage of this measure:

I shall leave a name execrated by every monopolist, who from less honorable motives clamors for protection because it conduces to his own individual benefit, but it may be that I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with the expressions of good will in the abode of those whose lot it is to labor and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow, when they shall recollect their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, the sweeter because it is no longer leavened by the sense of injustice.

The repeal of the corn laws was the grandest victory for the laboring classes that has occurred in any age of the world's history. It was grand because it was bloodless and the result of pure reason. The argument of starvation had a logic that could not be resisted. During the time of the corn laws Lord Macaulay, in his History of England, says that—

The price of the necessities of life, of shoes, of ale, of oatmeal rose fast. The laborer found that the bit of metal which, when he received it, was called a shilling, would hardly, when he purchased a pot of beer or a loaf of rye bread, go as far as a sixpence.

No wonder there was starvation and wretchedness among the farming and laboring classes in England at that time, for the corn laws struck directly at the daily toilers for daily bread and aggrandized the wealth of the landed proprietors in England, while protection in this country enriches the manufacturers. The repeal of the corn laws doubled the wealth of England and enlarged her borders. Liberty of trade annexed to her soil the entire world, and the people of England are to-day luxuriating in the consumption of untaxed wheat from India, untaxed corn from the Mississippi Valley, and other untaxed food products from all parts of the civilized globe, and England has in turn blessed mankind by making her markets free to the world.

The laws of God are always wiser than the laws of man. It is perfectly evident that the various human races were not created to live in isolation and to depend upon themselves for subsistence. Shall the inhabitants of Arabia, Java, and Brazil live on coffee alone, the inhabitants of China on tea, and the Cuban on sugar, while the resident of Illinois and Iowa is to live on wheat and corn, and the dweller of California and Florida are to subsist on tropical fruits? If so, what means the great oceans, seas, and rivers, the highways of nations, for what were they created? Why can the free winds of heaven be used to transport the product of one clime to that of another, to bless and enrich both the exporter and importer?

Is it true that the laws of trade are without meaning and a violation of the laws of nature? If not, then why should trade be restrained or prohibited? If one man living in one country desires to exchange the fruit of his labors with a person living in another what right has the Government to levy a fine or tax on such persons? Where is the authority? It is true that in the eighth century the Moorish pirates exacted a tariff at the mouth of the cannon from all ships passing through the Strait of Gibraltar, which was then regarded as robbery, but what authority is there that we should allow it in the enlightened last quarter of the eighteenth century? What law writer of distinction or eminence on national or international law holds that the General Government has the power to tax one of its citizens and give it in benefits to another? Can a government that will do this be called free, wise, or frugal?

Thomas Jefferson, nearly a century ago, in his inaugural address to Congress, said of this Government:

A wise and frugal government is one which restrains men from injuring one another and shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities.

This is democratic, and to it I fully and freely subscribe. I believe that no enduring progress or real civilization can be built on any other governmental foundation than that laid down by Mr. Jefferson, being the true basis of liberty and justice.

No lesson is more impressively taught by the ages of human history than that when a government intermeddles in the private business of the citizen, this leads to a subversion of liberty. I have no faith in any theory of government that prevents the citizen from pursuing the bent of his own inclinations and receiving the reward of his own labor. In the shadow of paternalism liberty has ever withered, freedom has been a fugitive, and civilization in the end a glorious failure. There is no justice in a law that takes the earnings of one man and gives it in benefits to another. Now, is there any constitutional authority for such a law under our form of government?

Justice requires that you should not place the burdens of one man on the shoulders of another, even though he is better able to bear them. If this rule be once disregarded it simply reduces politics to a universal scramble in which the most selfish will have the most success. It turns might into right, and proclaims that each man may rightfully possess whatever he can vote into his pocket. Justice is as strictly due between political parties as between individuals. A man is as much a robber when he plunders with his party in passing unjust laws to acquire the property of others as if he had acquired that property by theft, and a party that makes unjust laws to benefit themselves by taking the property of others without consideration can not be justified.

To be more explicit I will quote the very language of the Supreme Court of the United States in a late case before that tribunal where they say:

To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprise and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation, it is a decree under legislative form, nor is it taxation; beyond a cavil there can be no lawful taxation which is not laid for public purposes.

This is the true Democratic doctrine, and is in perfect harmony with the views of Gen. Jackson when he said:

Congress has no right under the Constitution to take money from the people unless it be required to execute some one of the specific powers intrusted to the Government, and if they raise more money than is necessary for such purposes it is an abuse of the power of taxation and unjust and oppressive.

Mr. Chairman, I am not attacking the protective system because the duty may be too high on one article or too low on another, but I assail the system because it is a crime against organized society and a wrong to every farmer and laborer in this country. Mr. Blaine said that the McKinley bill did not open a new market for another barrel of pork or a bushel of wheat to the farmers of this country, and what is true of the McKinley bill is equally true of all other tariff bills. That is not the object of a protective tariff. The object of all protective tariffs is to raise the price of goods, and this it always does. If this is not the purpose, there can be no other.

The fact that some goods can be purchased now cheaper than they could a few years ago is in no manner due to a protective tariff, as the Republican party would have us believe. Cheapness is rather due to competition and the use of improved machinery than to the tariff. Not many years ago it required a man two days to make a pair of boots; now with machinery he can make twenty pairs a day, and this is true of many other branches of industry. Nor does the tariff raise the price of labor. As the price of goods advances the price of labor declines, for the cost of living is thereby increased to the laborer. This law is as universal as the law of gravitation.

Nor is the prosperity of the farmer of this country due to our protective system, as claimed by the advocates of protection. To so insist is blasphemy against Heaven.

Whatever happiness our farmers possess is not due to a tariff, but rather to a virgin soil, a salubrious climate, generous rains, and their own manly exertions. There is nothing just in a protective tariff.

I attack the system as being unsound in principle, iniquitous in its operations, and subversive of personal liberty. The Democratic contention is that to lay a tariff or tax on imports except for the purpose of raising a needed revenue to defray the expense of the Government economically administered is at once unconstitutional, unwise, unjust, indefensible, and destructive of personal liberty; while on the other hand the Republican party insists on the exact reverse, insisting that the Government may not only levy a tax with reference to revenue, but may also lay a tax to protect home industries as well. The Democratic party insist that the inevitable result of a tariff levied for the purpose of protection is to exact tribute of the many for the benefit of the few, and the direct tendency of the whole system is to found and foster monopoly, to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, and that these results are the legitimate outgrowth of the system, and that, this being so, the whole system should be destroyed.

The protective system must necessarily be unjust. Why should one man in one trade be taxed to give it to another man in another trade? Why should one man be compelled to pay a bounty to his neighbor when his neighbor pays no bounty to him? And if his neighbor does pay an equal bounty to him, where is the benefit? The blacksmith gives a dollar a year to the carpenter to foster the carpenter trade, and the carpenter responds with a dollar a year to foster the blacksmith trade. Where is the gain, where is the sense? It is not obvious that a tax to be protective must be unjust; it must take from one class to give to another without return.

That is what protection means, that is what bounties signify. When the protective system was first proposed in this country it seemed an entirely simple and fair proposition that when a little assistance was asked in behalf of a new industry struggling for existence in a new country, such assistance to come from all the citizens of the Republic, it ought readily to be given, if thereby it was possible to aid that industry to establish itself and produce a new activity through the development of our material resources. But when we examine this proposition we discover that the class which receive such assistance are made up of individuals or of private corporations; that their enterprises consist of industries in the management of which the personal profit of the owner is the definite and prevailing motive not the public good; that the contribution which furthers these industries is a public contribution. The assumed object as claimed by the Republican party is the public welfare, but the motive which actuates the individual and the private corporation engaged in the fostered industry is not necessarily patriotic, whatever the pretense may be to the contrary. It is essentially a motive of self-interest, and the enterprises are enterprises which are embarked in for gain. There are none of the protected industries carried on in this country for disinterested patriotism.

The irresistible tendency of the owners of private interests which derive assistance from contributions from the general public is a tendency to lean upon the support received and, as far as possible, to perpetuate that support even to corrupting the voter by returning to him for his vote a part of the money of which he was robbed by this so-called protective system. We find, further, that the different members of the protected classes, varied as their special industrial aims are, that as recipients of Government aid they all possess a common purpose in seeking this assistance, and therefore there is an inherent tendency among them towards political consolidation, so they have grown each year more coherent, more organized, more united, and therefore more difficult to deal with by the people who are not thus held together by the cohesive power of public plunder.

The Republican party proclaims that the permanent well-being of the nation rests upon our protective system, and that this is not an expedient or a policy, but a principle. It is under this delusion or pretense that the emotional and sentimental statesmen of that party hide the question of personal liberty under the vague political generalities which deal only with the material prosperity of the country by an array of figures which shows the total of the nation's wealth and growth and which conceals the misdistribution of the wealth, a misdistribution by which the industries of a part of the citizens are depressed in order that the industries of a class may be overstimulated. This so-called protective system is the leprosy of our age, which if not staid will ultimately destroy our liberties. Our system of government should have no higher or nobler mission than to multiply the number of happy homes in this country. The strength of this nation is in the happy and well-ordered homes of our people.

The home is the best security for civilization, and upon properly appointed and becoming homes depends more than anything else the improvement of mankind; such homes are the nursery of all domestic virtues, and without becoming homes the exercise of those virtues are impossible. Many wealthy and luxuriant homes we have in this country. Some of them surpassing in their embellishments the palaces of kings; their owners toil not neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory never lived as well as our uncrowned tariff barons. But how about the homes of a great majority of the common people; go if you will to the great Northwest, the garden spot of the world, there you will find a soil more productive than the Delta of the Nile, a sun brighter than ever rose on Italy, a climate more genial than ever gladdened the Orient, and this soil with the least touch of the plow will yield a most abundant harvest, and yet in the homes in that section of the country poverty sits by the cradle, not because of idleness, intemperance, or carelessness, but because of our protective system, which takes from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned.

The iniquitous protective system should be abandoned or our industrial and personal liberties are gone. Let us hope that it will pass away while there still lingers some pretensions to patriotism, and while there is still some chance that the Constitution of our country can be preserved.

Why should this country, the proud child of liberty, forget its mission and engage itself exclusively in building private fortunes for the few, while it enslaves the masses?

The liberty for which our Pilgrim Fathers were willing to die, the liberty from unjust taxation, is what the Democratic party demands. Take the taxes from our goods and wherever there is a sea there will be our flag and wherever there is a port there will be our commerce. In such commerce there will not only be liberty and riches but also the more just distribution of wealth. Out of the destruction of the iniquitous tariff system there will come to all people a prosperity, a civilization and manhood now to us unknown, and the flag of our country will stand for the equal rights of all men, for liberty, for law, for right and justice, and freedom will be established in all this land. [Applause.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the samples of tin plate which I presented here to-day are not what the gentleman said they were, imported from some foreign country. Now, my good-looking friend from Ohio who stands in the aisle [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has a pretty fair acquaintance in Ohio, and I have no doubt that he is acquainted with the firm of Wallace, Banfield & Co., in Eastern Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, but I am acquainted with one in Piqua, Ohio, that made tin plate during the last campaign by dipping sheet iron into hot lead.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us see whether that is so or not.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That is not true in this case. This Mr. Banfield is a member of a firm that made tin plate in Demmler, Pa., away back in 1872 or 1873. I do not remember the exact date. I have talked with him since he came to Ohio and he gave me his experience in Pennsylvania. He said that the best quality of charcoal tin plate, at the time they began to build the factory at Demmler, was worth about $14 a box, and that before they entirely abandoned the industry the importers of tin plate had reduced the price to $5 per box on the very best quality of charcoal tin plate.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman permit a question right at that point?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Had not tin plate been reduced more in England at that time than it had been in this country?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Perhaps they had to reduce it there when they reduced the price here. I do not know as to that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But had it not been reduced in price by virtue of improved methods of manufacture?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I know that after they quit making tin plate in this country the price of that same kind of tin plate went up to eight or nine dollars per box.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And you also know that it went down again in the due course of the market.

Mr. BURROWS. Whenever we attempted to make it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Whenever we attempted to make tin plate the tin-plate syndicate put the price down. That is the reason and the only reason why the men who were making tin plate in Ohio and Pennsylvania quit the business. Their business was crushed out by the English manufacturers, and when the price went so low as $5 per box our people had to quit, and the fires had scarcely gone out of the American tin plate mills when the prices were put up.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Right here let me say to you that that is incorrect, and that tin plate went down no more than the constituent elements and the labor in it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Do you believe that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know it; and that iron throughout the world went down at the same time. You claim that tin plate went up again when it suited these people. It only went up as iron went up or as steel went up.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, men of character and integrity, and men who are not partisans, at Wells-ville, Ohio, and at Demmler, Pa., engaged in the manufacture of tin plate in good faith, I think in 1873. They had tin-plate mills at both places, and they made tin plate. They made as good tin plate as any that was then imported into this country, as was shown by a committee that investigated the tin plate at that time. They went along struggling against a reduction from time to time in the price of tin plate, and were also embarrassed by the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, which resulted in admitting foreign tin plate at a lower price than the law had provided as it had been understood. They went on from year to year, but the price of imported tin plate continued to fall and they were compelled to abandon the industry.

Mr. Banfield came to Ohio and with others bought one of the largest rolling-mills on the Ohio River. They have been there many years making sheet-iron; and they make the best kind of Russia iron, so called, made in this country. When the McKinley bill became a law, they began at once to prepare for the manufacturing of tin plate. They bought machinery, put up buildings, and have been making arrangements to make tin plate. Although I have not been very familiar with the progress they have been making, I have been advised from time to time that they were making every preparation to make tin plate. They are now making 120 boxes of tin plate per day.

That is what these gentlemen tell me. I had a letter from this firm last week and they stated in the letter how many boxes of tin plate they are now making and how many they are preparing to make, and they state that they will soon increase the number, that they will soon make a greater number of boxes than they are making now. There is no humbug about this matter. For years and years they have been making galvanized iron along the Ohio River, and it is nearly as difficult a matter to make galvanized iron as it is to make tin plate. It costs a great deal of money to make a single mixture, and if the mixture in which the iron is dipped is not just what it ought to be there is always a total loss.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to be sure how you get at your figures. You say they are making 120 boxes of tin plate a day.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. Two hours ago you said they were making 240 boxes a day. Now, I do not know which is right.

Mr. MILLIKEN. He said the same thing.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, he said 240 boxes, as the notes of the reporter will show.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will tell you in a minute. I was not expecting that this tin-plate matter would come up here to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You brought it up.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have a lettersomewhere giving me the facts in regard to the quantity of tin plate which they make per day, but I have left it at my hotel and can not refer to it just now. The tin-plate matter was not brought up by me. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] in his eloquent address ridiculed the making of tin plate in this country as a matter of moonshine, and I produced the samples of tin plate which had been sent me by Messrs. Wallace, Banfield & Co., and hence I have given the number of boxes from memory.

Mr. BURROWS. Do you mean 120?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I mean 120. That is my recollection of the number.

Mr. BURROWS. You said 20.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. They describe it in the letter. I may be mistaken as to the number and have spoken to the Reporter about making the correction in case I find that I am wrong. I have the letter, and I am sure that the number is not less than 120, and I have already given these figures to the Reporter, as I would rather be under than over. At the time I interrupted Mr. WILSON I did so without a moment's thought; and I now think that I then stated the number too high. My recollection now is that the number is 120 boxes.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. Does this letter which you say you have state whether these were the tin plates which you have heard were made by Maj. McKinley at Piqua during the Ohio campaign?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will answer the gentleman when he asks me a proper question. This is no joke.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Where is that factory that you are speaking about?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. At Irondale, Jefferson County, Ohio, a short distance from the city of Steubenville. It is in my district, and Wells-ville, Ohio, where they made tin plate in 1873 or 1874 is also in my district.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. What is the name of this firm guilty of the great crime of making tin plate in these United States?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Messrs. Wallace, Banfield & Co. They are men of large means, and have been engaged in manufacturing for many years, and are well known in Eastern Ohio and in many other parts of the country.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Do you not think they ought to be banished for introducing an English manufacture in this country?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have no doubt some of the gentlemen here think they ought to be. I called the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia to the firm, because I knew he must know these men by reputation. They are well known in Wheeling and Pittsburg, Cincinnati and elsewhere.

Mr. SCOTT. Are these tin plates that you speak about those that were made by Maj. McKinley at Piqua during his campaign for governor?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Do you ever use a tin pail or a bucket?

Mr. SCOTT. No; I use a gourd.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I expect you do. [Laughter.]

I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, for my life, why it is that these gentlemen insist over and over again that we are not manufacturing tin plate in this country. They really think that it is a mere electioneering dodge, something to bolster up the McKinley bill. We make almost everything else in the world. We make the best watches in the world, and watchmaking has always been regarded an intricate industry. We make a good many things in this country that are difficult, and I wish to say to these gentlemen that if they have any doubt about this matter here is the address of the firm on this envelope I hold in my hand. This is the envelope in which these specimens of tin plate were sent. I will give it to any gentleman, and he can write out there to the common pleas judge, or to the probate judge of that county, or to some Democrat.

My friend from Columbus [Mr. OUTHWAITE] can give you the names of a good many Democrats out there, and Mr. McConville, who is now in Washington, is one of the most prominent Democrats in Ohio; he lives in that county, and although he is a Democrat, he will tell you that they are making tin plate at Irondale, Jefferson County, Ohio. I refer you to Mr. McConville. He lives in this city, and is here now.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman, I understand, is very well posted upon the tin-plate question, and therefore I will ask him if he knows where the tin deposits are in this country and who owns them?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I did not say anything about tin deposits. Tin is on the free list, just where the Democrats want to put wool. They import tin into Wales and make tin plate, and I do not see any objection to our importing it into this country and making tin plate here.

Mr. SIMPSON. But I understand that the tariff is intended to protect the tin-producing and tin-manufacturing interests, the men who mine the tin as well as the manufacturers. Is not that so?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir; this duty was simply put on to protect the men that make the tin plate in this country. It is like the wool bill, it has no compensatory duty on it, and I suppose that tin plate in the McKinley bill is about in the position where the Democrats put wool in the Springer free-wool bill.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then I understand that pig tin is on the free list, put there by the McKinley bill; now, is not that against the interests of the men who mine tin in this country?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. We are not sure how much tin there is in this country. If we can make the tin plate that we use in this country, we shall build up a great industry and keep at home twenty-five or thirty million dollars a year. Does not the gentleman think that would be a good thing?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have understood that all the tin deposits of this country, so far as discovered, are owned by an English syndicate.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Oh, you do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am credibly informed that that is the fact, and the gentleman being well posted upon this tin question, I have come to him for information.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not know anything about that. I have heard such statements made in regard to almost every industry in this country, that they are controlled by syndicates or a trust or something of that kind.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know it is true as to the Harney's Peak tin mines, that the stock is owned by an English syndicate.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the tin deposits in this country are owned by an English syndicate, inasmuch as there is no duty on pig tin, it is evident that that syndicate is not protected.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. When does the duty upon tin begin under the McKinley bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. July 1, 1893.

Mr. SIMPSON. Inasmuch as the tariff is for the protection of American labor, one would think the framers of the tariff bill would protect the tin miners as well as the tin-plate makers.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If we find after awhile that the tin miners need protection we will protect them. The Republican party stands always ready to do what is right. The Republican party is not wedded to free trade or to any other hide-bound policy. The Republican party has controlled this country for a quarter of a century, and has controlled it in such a way that we have grown more in wealth and have had greater prosperity during Republican rule than ever before.

We have accumulated more wealth in the last thirty years than we did in the last three hundred years, including the period of Democratic control.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does the gentleman count the two billions and a half of mortgages on the farms and homes of the United States as evidence of that progress?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. There are not near so many mortgages on the homes and farms as there were when I was a boy. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I am afraid the census returns will not bear out that statement.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I can remember very well when I was a boy that the neighbors used to gather around my father's fireside and talk about their mortgages and debts. He did a good deal of business, and it was a very common occurrence for them to come there and talk about such matters. There was more poverty among the people, more property sold by the sheriff, more suffering and want in those days than I have ever seen since. Eggs sold at 4 cents a dozen, oats at 12½ cents a bushel, corn at 25 cents, wheat at 37½ cents, and vegetables would not sell at all.

When I was a boy we hauled wheat to the canal, a distance of 40 miles, and sold our wheat at 37½ cents a bushel, and I can remember the time when there was absolutely no market at all for wheat. I know that my father had a very large crop of wheat, several hundred bushels, and was absolutely unable to sell it at any price, and many farmers let their wheat rot in the field. It was the same with apples and potatoes; there was absolutely no market for them. We had two large orchards on my father's farm, very good ones, too, and I remember that at one time we picked one hundred barrels of splendid apples, the choicest that we could select, and put them in new, clean barrels, but we could not sell them anywhere, and those apples rotted. I think a few of them were used in making vinegar.

A MEMBER. Why didn't you eat them? [Laughter.]

Another MEMBER. Why didn't you make cider of them? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. There was no market whatever for them. Do not talk to me about mortgages and debts. In that part of the country at that time everybody was in debt. When a man went to church on Sunday he often went in his shirt sleeves. [Laughter.] He and his wife would ride the same horse and sometimes carry one or two of the children. I have no sort of patience with this talk about the depression of agriculture as compared with the times when we had a revenue tariff. The farmers are having a hard time, and I think they will have a harder time when wool is on the free list. But they are not having as hard a time as they had thirty or forty years ago when the Democratic party was in power. I remember too well the sad condition of the country under Democratic rule.

Mr. Chairman, these older men who lived in the rural districts know that I am telling the truth. The farmers know it. The farmers now have carriages, spring wagons, carpeted floors, papered walls, comfortable homes, comfortable clothing, and a thousand conveniences and comforts which they did not have then.

There was not a young man in my neighborhood who had a good overcoat before he was 21 years of age. The first one I ever had I bought when I was about that age; and I bought that on credit. At that time everything was bought on credit, and debts and wages were paid by orders to the stores.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman will allow me to make a little correction. I said that the gentleman two hours ago had stated there were 240 boxes of tin made each day, and that later he stated the number at 120. I have since examined the reporter's notes, and I find that he said 210, not 240. I can easily see that in the reading "120" he may have accidentally transposed the figures into 210, and thus fallen into the error.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR]. He certainly has been very amiable and generous in yielding to these inquiries with which gentlemen have badgered him. [Laughter.] He has shown no disposition to become irritated, although some of the questions, I think, were not pertinent. Now, I would like to ask him a question pertinent to the bill. I ask it for information; for no other purpose. Can the gentleman tell me how much revenue has been brought into the country by the tariff on cotton-ties since the McKinley bill has been in operation?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I am not discussing cotton-ties. [Laughter.] I only know that in my country we use this same kind of iron for bands or hoops on buckets, tubs, barrels, etc., and my objection to the bill is that you propose that all of this iron which is used by the planter in baling cotton shall be put on the free list, while you propose to leave the tariff upon the same kind of iron when used for baling hay and making hoops for barrels, buckets, etc. I complain of that. I do not think it fair.

Mr. McRAE. That can be corrected by an amendment. Will you vote to add to the free list the kind of iron you have just mentioned?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir. I believe it ought to be made in America.

Mr. BURROWS. And you will not vote for this bill?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir. I will not.

Mr. McRAE. What the gentleman complains of, then, is no fault of this bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I had no objection to the other bill so far as the protection of woolen goods were concerned. My objection was to putting wool on the free list. I am against free trade in any shape or form.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Is it possible that this Ways and Means Committee has reported a bill to put cotton-ties on the free list while the hoops which encircle the washerwoman's washtub must still pay duty? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Certainly; that is just what they are proposing to do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Can not the manufacturers of tubs, buckets, and other articles which my colleague has mentioned use for their purpose the same kind of iron which we propose to put on the free list? Can not the material which is used for baling cotton be used for baling hay?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No; my colleague knows it can not. He knows that cotton-ties come in certain given lengths; they are prepared in a certain way, which entitles them to the name of cotton-ties. And in the McKinley bill the tariff on cotton-ties is different from what it is on these other kinds of iron. The cotton-tie is a kind of completed iron band.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This iron is made of a certain thickness, a certain width, a certain length; and it could be used for baling hay if it can be used for baling cotton.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The fact of its being cut into given lengths adapts it to use in baling cotton and renders it unsuitable for baling hay or for making hoops for barrels, tubs, or anything else for the farmer's use, as the gentleman very well knows.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise for the purpose of indulging in this discussion. I rose for the purpose of satisfying my friend from Iowa that as a matter of fact this piece of tin which I hold in my hand was made in Ohio, in my district. There are half a dozen other samples here. I have given the name of the firm which made this tin plate; I have given references also—Democratic references; I have furnished every opportunity for inquiry; and if my Democratic friends would look into this matter it would be a most delightful inquiry. I think the result would surprise them; but I do not know whether they will be in a frame of mind to do this before the election or not.

A gentleman from the other side of the House came over to me awhile ago and took a seat by my side and in a low tone of voice inquired whether as a matter of fact this tin plate was made in this country. I will not name him, but he is a Democrat and a friend of mine. He was perfectly honest in making the inquiry. He took a seat by my side and confidentially asked me whether it was made here or whether it was imported. He says, "Do they really make the iron out there and roll it into sheets and make the tin plate out of it?" [Laughter.] He wanted to know seriously whether there was not some deception about it.

Mr. ENLOE. Do you call this tin plate? [Holding up Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR's sample.] [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Why, certainly that is tin plate. Do you not recognize it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Ohio will permit me to reinforce what he says by a citation, I will read a little article from the Baltimore American of date April 3.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Certainly; I yield to my friend from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It says:

TIN MILL'S FIRST TURN—ITS Ponderous and intricate machinery tested—a success from the very start—THE MANUFACTURE OF PLATES WILL BEGIN ON THURSDAY NEXT—AN OLD AND EXPERIENCED HAND ITS DIRECTING GENIUS—INJURED IN A FIRE—COURT PROCEEDINGS. The machinery in the new tin-plate mill of Coates & Co., Beason and Andre streets, Locust Point, was started and tested yesterday morning at five minutes past 9 o'clock, as indicated in the American, by Mr. Charles Reeder, the builder, and ran for more than an hour, proving a great success. At last Baltimore is about to manufacture her own tin plate, and demonstrate at the same time that she can give employment to a large number of people who, while the tinware manufacturers had to buy their tin plate in Wales, had nothing to do.

There were quite a number of persons present to witness the starting of the mammoth and complicated machinery, some of whom were good judges of that kind of plant, and they were emphatic in their assertions that the machinery was far better than any they had ever seen in the great tin-plate manufactories of Wales.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be permitted to print his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I yielded to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I believe I am not indebted to the courtesy of the gentleman from Kansas for the opportunity of occupying the floor. This article then goes on:

Mr. J. R. Davis, who designed all the machinery at the mill of Coates & Co., and has superintended the entire work of placing the immense plant, said yesterday that he expected to be rolling tin plate by the yard not later than next Thursday.

Mr. Davis expects to have some experts in tin-plate making under his supervision, and with that end in view will go to Virginia on Tuesday for his men, who are in that State doing temporary work and awaiting orders to come to Baltimore. Mr. Davis is one of the most experienced men in his particular line, and has seen the making of the plate in all its forms and made it a deep study.

Since the Messrs. Coates undertook their present stupendous task, and which promises such a successful culmination, Mr. Davis has been their right-hand man. His varied experience in the great mills of Wales has been of vast use to him and his employers here. For more than fifteen years Mr. Davis was connected with Maj. P. S. Phillips, of Glamorganshire, Wales, the owner of forty-two mills, that daily roll out thousands of sheets of tin plate, and for over ten years he had been with various other English and Welsh firms in the same line.

There is an item of intelligence. Of course it will not be accepted by the Democratic party because it is intelligence [laughter], but it is the current news from a neighboring city within a very few miles of the national capital.

Mr. CASTLE. Will the gentleman permit me a question? I would like to ask him where the laborers are going to come from that are to be employed in that mill?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can not give you the information.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to finish what I have to say on this question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If I can be permitted to answer the question just propounded in reference to these laborers I will say that they will come from the Caucasian race.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the gentleman from Maine has just referred reminds me that the president of the Iron and Steel Roofing Association, which has a factory in my own town and another in Chattanooga, Tenn., told me very recently that he had made an arrangement with some firm in Pennsylvania which is to furnish American tin in large sizes for roofing purposes. He said that he had made that sort of an arrangement, and that they were going to use much more tin for roofing than formerly. Heretofore they have been using iron and steel to a large extent. That looks like making tin in the United States, the dire predictions of the gentlemen on the other side to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. CASTLE. At what cost? Will the gentleman from Maine who has just referred to a newspaper article in reference to the tin-plate establishment in Baltimore have the goodness to inform us what additional amount of expense, to that already imposed on account of the McKinley bill, this tin is to prove to the people of the United States?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is to cost them no more than it costs them now. How much has the price gone up? Can the gentleman show an instance where it has been increased?

Mr. CASTLE. Yes, sir; I can give you a hundred instances.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Just give one, if you please.

Mr. CASTLE. I will give you ten or a hundred articles, if the gentleman really desires it, where the price is raised 25 per cent.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I understand that it is the desire of a number of gentlemen that the committee rise, and I will reserve the remainder of my time to be used hereafter.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill merely because of two items it contains.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from New Jersey give way for a motion that the committee rise, as it is now quite late?

Mr. ENGLISH. I will yield for that motion, as I would greatly prefer to proceed in the morning.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey desires to address the committee in opposition to the bill. It is now 5 o'clock, and I trust the gentleman from Georgia will move that the committee rise, that we may proceed to-morrow when the members are present in larger numbers than now.

Mr. TURNER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPERRY, until Thursday of next week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CAUSEY, for five days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. HARTER, for one week, on account of important business.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, before the House went into the Committee of the Whole I offered a resolution upon a subject affecting the dignity of this House. By direction of the Chair I reduced the resolution to writing, and while doing so the House went into committee. I now offer the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That for the dignity and good name of the House of Representatives the language of the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. FUNSTON, which in any way referred to a woman, or in any manner connected a woman or the word "woman" or "lady" with his remarks, be not permitted to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Alabama will withhold action upon that resolution, for I am assured by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] that in revising his remarks everything that can in any way be criticised will be eliminated, so that it will be all right.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. With that assurance—

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, there is no doubt about it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I am willing that no action should be taken upon the resolution with that understanding, but I think the dignity of the House requires that the resolution should go into the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well; let it lie over until after the remarks appear.

Mr. McMILLIN. Until the RECORD comes out.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I am willing to do that.

Mr. McMILLIN. Without seeking to take the gentleman from Alabama off the floor, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending the consideration of the resolution, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. COBB of Missouri, from the Committee on War Claims: A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 7547) for the relief of the legal representatives of Zachariah J. White, deceased. (Report No. 1011.)

By Mr. DOLLIVER, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 3394) for the relief of C. C. Taggart. (Report No. 1012.)

By Mr. ENLOE, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 3181) for the relief of Mary Barron. (Report No. 1017.)

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 1696) for the relief of loyal citizens therein named of Loudoun County, Va. (Report No. 1018.)

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H. R. 7976) to establish an educational fund to aid in the support of the public schools in the several States and Territories—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 7977) to provide for the deposit of standard dollars in the United States Treasury with the several States—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 7978) to promote the efficiency of the public service—to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. STOCKDALE: A bill (H. R. 7979) in relation to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BEEMAN: A memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, urging the Representatives of that State in Congress to secure an appropriation to extend the navigation of Pearl River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BULLOCK: A bill (H. R. 7980) to grant a pension to Mrs. Mima A. Read—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7981) amending the military record of Cornelius Maguire—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FELLOWS (by request): A bill (H. R. 7932) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert Cornell White—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HALVORSON: A bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Louisa, widow of Louis Scott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 8, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 28th ultimo, a list of the vessels of the Revenue Marine, their tonnage, stations, distance cruised for the protection of the customs revenue and other purposes, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891, the number of guns, small arms, officers, and crews of each, etc.; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION FOR MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I gave notice yesterday that I intended to ask the Senate to-day for an executive session, but I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he will not probably get through with the District appropriation bill until late in the afternoon. As we shall adjourn over until Monday, I will postpone my request for an executive session until Monday morning, after the routine morning business.

J.; a petition of the faculty and students of the Gammon Theological Seminary, of Atlanta, Ga.; a petition of the faculty and students of the Allegheny United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, of Allegheny, Pa.; and a petition of the students of the Newton Theological Institution, of Newton Center, Mass., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition may be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select.)

He also presented the petition of Margaret Solly, of Camden, N. J., formerly the widow of John Barr, who was a member of Company C, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, during the Mexican war, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PEPPER presented a petition of the Wage-workers' Political Alliance of the District of Columbia, praying that an appropriation of $75,000 be made for supplying the children in the District of Columbia with free schoolbooks; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER presented the following petitions of Rutland Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Illinois:

Petition praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented the following petitions of Owen Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Indiana:

Petition praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petition praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of 23 citizens of Goliad County, Tex., praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antiopium bills; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. Res. 47) authorizing the resubdivision of square 673 in the city of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1077) relieving the personal representatives of John Sherman, jr., late United States Marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, from the requirements of section 833 of the Revised Statutes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 484) to amend an act entitled, "An act relating to tax sales and taxes in the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1885) to amend an act entitled, "An act relating to tax sales and taxes in the District of Columbia," reported adversely thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WOLCOTT, I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1308) to prevent the building of houses along certain alleys in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, to report it adversely and move its indefinite postponement, a similar bill from the other House being on the Calendar.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2838) to regulate the practice of medicine in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1236) to regulate the practice of medicine in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDEKSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1962) granting an honorable discharge to William Pierce, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2159) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton, and appropriating $30,000, reported it without amendment.

MARTELLO TOWER, ON TYBEE ISLAND.

Mr. HAWLEY. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the joint resolution (H. Res. 69) authorizing the use of the martello tower, on Tybee Island, Georgia, for a signal station. It is a simple matter of consent to a disposition of that property which will be valuable to the commercial interests of Savannah, and I hope the Senate will immediately concur with the other House in the passage of the joint resolution. I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to permit the use of the martello tower, on Tybee Island, Georgia, by telegraph or telephone companies for a signal station, to report passing vessels, under such conditions as the Secretary of War may deem proper to protect the interest of the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I introduce a bill to provide for the reservation of certain timber lands upon the Siletz Indian Reservation for the benefit of the Indians. I wish to say that this is a bill attempting to put into practical operation upon the Siletz Indian Reservation in Oregon the suggestion made by me in discussing the Indian appropriation bill, to have the Government provide upon the reservations employment for the Indians by which they can be made to work and earn what is necessary to support them, rather than to be supported by the Treasury. The proposition is to withdraw from sale out of the lands not needed for allotment among the Indians five sections of timber land near the saw-mill, and to allow the Indians to cut the timber for their own use and to market it under regulations to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior. I ask the present and earnest attention of the committee to the proposition, and if it appears to be a practical and a good one, I suggest whether some similar measure should not be adopted for other reservations.

The bill (S. 2869) to provide for the reservation of certain timber lands upon the Siletz Indian Reservation for the benefit of the Indians was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2870) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2871) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Mason, widow of late Julius W. Mason, major Third Regiment, United States Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2872) for the relief of James Wilcox; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VILAS introduced a bill (S. 2873) for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAREY introduced a bill (S. 2874) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make leases in the Yellowstone National Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2875) for the relief of George B. Stimpson, late postmaster at South Pueblo, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2876) granting a pension to James H. Mandeville; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2877) granting an increase of pension to James T. Hood, late of Company I, Forty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2878) to enable the Ottawa Indians, the Indiana Miami Indians, and Western Miami Indians to bring suit in the Court of Claims for settlement of claims against the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2879) for the relief of Margaret Solly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2880) to provide for a medal in commemoration of the services of Haym Salomon during the war of the Revolution, and to express recognition of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BLACKBURN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2881) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2882) for the relief of John M. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That John Cowdon have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate a memorial relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River signed by him.

TARIFF COMPILATION OF 1891.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a concurrent resolution for printing the Tariff Compilation of 1891, and I hope that very early action may be had upon it. It will be remembered that the Finance Committee made a report to the Senate giving a history of tariff legislation, a tariff compilation, up to 1891; but the document has never been printed for distribution. A resolution was passed I think by the Senate ordering it to be printed, and it went to the other House and there failed of action in the last Congress; It is a document that is often called for.

The concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 15,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2130, Fifty-first Congress, second session, being Tariff Compilation of 1891, prepared by the Senate Committee on Finance under authority of the act of Congress of August 30, 1890, of which number 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. VEST. I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners for the District of Columbia be directed to inform the Senate what railroad companies operating their roads in said District have failed for the period of two years from March 2, 1889, to exercise the powers and privileges given them in regard to changing the motive power of their roads, by the provisions of the District appropriation act approved on the date aforesaid. And if the companies so failing have complied with the requirements of said act as to causing the rails and roadbeds used by them to be level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said track or roadbeds. And if the said companies have not complied with the law, whether the Commissioners have taken the steps required by them by the act aforesaid to compel the observance of the provisions hereinbefore set forth.

And if no steps have been taken by them to enforce the law, as they were directed to do, what is the cause of such failure—

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I had occasion yesterday to make the statement that an act of Congress had been disregarded entirely by certain railroad companies in the District of Columbia. I was under the impression at the time, because I had made no examination outside of what was necessitated by the line of travel that I pursue myself in coming to the Capitol and returning to my residence, that the Belt Line was the only company in the District that had failed to comply with the law. But I am informed, in fact I may say I know, that other companies on their branch lines have utterly disregarded the statute, and in order that it may be seen that I make no willful attack upon these companies (and I have no disposition to oppress them in any way) I ask the Secretary to read the law, which seems to have passed out of the memory of the public generally and especially of these corporations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The law sent up by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That any company authorized by law to run cars propelled by horses within the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to substitute for horses electric power by storage or independent electrical batteries or underground wire, or underground cables moved by steam power, on the whole or any portion of its roadway, with authority to purchase and use any terminal grounds and facilities necessary for the purpose; and any such street railway company electing to substitute such power on any part of its tracks or roadbeds on the streets of the District of Columbia shall, before doing so, cause such part of its roadbeds to be laid with a flat grooved rail and made level with the service of the streets upon each side of said tracks or roadbeds, so that no obstruction shall be presented to vehicles passing over said tracks: Provided, That in the event said companies or either of them shall fail for the period of two years from the passage of this act to exercise the powers and privileges hereinbefore given, such companies are hereby required to cause said rails and roadbeds to be relaid with the flat-grooved rail hereinbefore mentioned, so as to be level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said tracks or roadbeds and the cost of making the changes hereinbefore required shall be paid by the corporations or persons owning or operating said street railroads, and if, after being notified by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing to comply with the terms of this act, the said corporations or either of them shall not within ninety days thereafter begin the work required and complete the same within a reasonable time, not more than twelve months from the expiration of said period of ninety days, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and roadbeds to be made as soon as practicable; and shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property, real or personal, of said railway company, which certificates shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until paid, and which, until they are paid, shall remain and be a lien upon the property on or against which they are issued, together with the franchise of said company; and if the said certificates are not paid within one year the said Commissioners of this District of Columbia may proceed to sell the property against which they are issued, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due, such sale to be first duly advertised daily for one week in some newspaper published in the city of Washington, and to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder: Provided further, That after the passage of this act no other rail than herein mentioned shall be laid by any street railway company in the streets of Washington and Georgetown, and all companies granted franchises or extensions by the Fiftyth Congress shall have extension of one year's time within which to lay their tracks. So much of the charters of the street railway companies of the District of Columbia as is inconsistent with this section is hereby repealed: Provided further, That the foregoing requirements as to motive power, rails, and roadbed shall not apply to street railroads outside the city of Georgetown and the boundary limits of the city of Washington: And provided, That the authority hereinbefore granted in each and every particular shall be exercised only with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, expressed by resolution of said board.

Mr. VEST. That is a part of the District appropriation act of March 2, 1889, and although certain railroad companies in the District failed to avail themselves of the provisions of the preceding part of what has been read from the desk and have not changed their motive power, and the limitation of two years expired on March 2, 1891, no steps have been taken to enforce the law whatever. That is all I desire to say about it. I ask for the passage of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow a resolution of inquiry to pass that comes over from yesterday. It is a part of the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Iowa will withhold his motion for a moment, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what applications have been or may be presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury to reopen accounts or claims settled by said officers or paid by disbursing officers under a construction of law subsequently declared erroneous by the Supreme Court, stating briefly the grounds of any such decisions of the court, the circumstances and amount involved in each case decided, the number of all similar cases, and the amounts covered thereby, and the full history of each class of such accounts or claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN B. MEIGS.

Mr. ALLISON. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will allow the appropriation bill to be suspended for a moment, until I can have a pension bill passed for a very aged man in very destitute circumstances, who will probably live but a short time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Florida appealed to me yesterday for this aged man, and I will yield now if it takes no time.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill (S. 2351) granting a pension to John B. Meigs.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve the right to object if it takes time. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the name of John B. Meigs, a soldier of the United States volunteer forces in the Seminole Indian war in Florida in 1835, on the pension roll, at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6746) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. PADDOCK. I was not in the Senate yesterday evening when this matter was under consideration, and I should like to have the amendment read. I do not know what the proposition is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment: And the whole of said amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KYLE. Do I understand that the amendment before the Senate is the one offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment now pending is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which has just been read, to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. KYLE. I will wait until that is passed on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was simply read as an amendment intended to be offered by him, but not yet offered and not in order at the time.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it would not be in order until the pending amendment to the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Missouri offered his amendment before that, being an amendment to an amendment, and there being no door open to me I gave notice that I would offer mine as soon as there was an opportunity.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the provision stated as it will be with this amendment. I did not hear the original proposition. I was not here when it was under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan as a substitute for the amendment reported by that Senator from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

National encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic: To pay the proper and legitimate expenses attending the reception and entertainment of such honorably discharged Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, who served in the war of the rebellion, as may attend as delegates or otherwise the Twenty-sixth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the city of Washington, D. C., and attending the preparation for such reception and entertainment, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now read the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the amendment:

And the whole of said amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I am myself heartily in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment; but, in the first place, I am inclined to be opposed to the whole thing. I do not believe this proposition ought to be here. The city of Lincoln, the capital of my State, was a competitor with Washington to secure the location of the encampment for this year. A fund by individual contribution was guaranteed, as I remember, of $50,000 by that young city of 60,000 people, where one dollar in the legitimate enterprises is worth two dollars in such uses here, where the people, although prosperous and the city which they have built up by their pluck and enterprise, one of the best and strongest and most rapidly improving and developing, are not in a condition to contribute in any such degree as the citizens of Washington are. Yet they offered to make up whatever sum should be required by their own individual contributions there and in that section to defray the expenses of the encampment if it should be located there. Because of the superior financial ability of the citizens of Washington and because of the superior facilities for entertaining these ex-soldiers here their competitor—Lincoln—was beaten by a few votes.

Now, I think it is presumptuous in the highest degree for the citizens of this wealthy town, where the people are able to contribute a million dollars if necessary to entertain the ex-soldiers, to come to the Congress of the United States and ask the people of Lincoln and all the other people of the United States to contribute in order that they may make a good demonstration and provide good facilities for the entertainment of the ex-soldiers whom they ought to and can easily entertain strongly, liberally, and most hospitably by their own individual contributions, according to their agreement.

This encampment will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars in the matter of business to the city of Washington. The hotel and boarding house people of this town, considering the enormous business that will come to them alone on account of the encampment, could well afford to pay every dollar that it will cost to provide the proper means for the entertainment of our ex-soldiers.

So far as I am concerned I am strongly inclined to vote against this proposition unamended. I want to see the people here do what they understood and admitted would be their requirement to do and the expectation to do if they secured the encampment. Here are men of great wealth interested in valuable and rapidly appreciating real estate who are in a situation where they can afford and ought to contribute; who are abundantly able to and should contribute in order to entertain these old soldiers as they should be entertained, and as they deserve on all such occasions. I am for the best entertainment that can be commanded for them; but I want the citizens of Washington to go into their pockets and take their own money out and pay these expenses.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I can understand a strict constructionist of the Constitution like the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] finding difficulty about an appropriation of this kind, but I must confess I am amazed at the line of argument of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK]. The only objection which seems to be entertained by him is that a town in his State called Lincoln failed to obtain the necessary votes as the location of this encampment, and therefore he proposes to vote against any proposition allowing the city of Washington even—for that is all there is in it if the amendment is adopted—

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me; in a moment, not at present.

If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted, it is simply authorizing the city of Washington to appropriate a certain amount of money to entertain the old soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the Senator interposes the objection that Lincoln did not get it.

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir, I simply interpose this objection, that the citizens of Washington, who were there represented, proposed and agreed that they themselves would raise or had raised or were ready to raise whatever money might be required to entertain these ex-soldiers. Therefore I do not believe that they ought to come here for any appropriation. They put themselves on that plane and secured the location of the encampment, and after making such a proposition as they did, they ought to adhere to it without any demand whatever on Congress.

Mr. FRYE. There has never been an encampment of the Grand Army that was sustained and taken care of by voluntary contributions, and there never will be one. There would not have been one in Lincoln. The city council of Lincoln would have been compelled to have made an appropriation. Even in the city of Boston, where there is one hundred times more wealth than there is in the city of Washington, the city was compelled to make an appropriation, and the State—both the State and the city were compelled to make appropriations. No city will be found, in my judgment, on the face of the earth that will entertain the Grand Army of the Republic simply on voluntary contributions.

Then, there is no great private wealth in the city of Washington. They have obtained contributions now to the extent perhaps of thirty or forty thousand dollars. It may be that $50,000 has been subscribed, but, Mr. President, the city of Washington, the capital city of the country, presents an entirely different plane from any other city in the United States. This capital next September is to be the Mecca of the Grand Army of the Republic. Every surviving soldier who took part in the parade at the close of the war through the streets of this capital city of Washington expects to be here once more, and this is his time. There is not the slightest question but that at least 100,000 old soldiers will be in Washington to engage in this great encampment. Now, what will it cost? It will cost at least $1.25 for quarters for soldiers who come here. There is $125,000. The other expenses will be at least $50,000 more, making $175,000; and yet the Senator from Nebraska insists that the people of Washington shall subscribe the entire amount, and that even the city shall not be permitted to make an appropriation.

Why, Mr. President, I am surprised. I did not suppose that it would come from this side of the house. I admit I can understand objections that come elsewhere, but I can not understand such an objection as that.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the United States appropriating out of the Treasury $100,000, without charging it to the city of Washington or the District of Columbia, or $125,000 or $150,000 if in the judgment of the Senate it will take that amount to entertain the soldiers when they come here to the capital of the country, and I hope that no amendment will be made cutting down this amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] for $100,000. Not a dollar less would I consent to take, for, in my judgment, it is not enough to serve the purpose which it is intended to serve. As to whether the District of Columbia shall pay it or not it is entirely immaterial to me, and it is equally immaterial to my constituents.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine does not state my position correctly at all. I started with the declaration that I was for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COKRELL], and that I should vote for it. I am perfectly willing that that amendment shall be adopted, and I desire, if any legislation is to be had, that that shall be the legislation.

I spoke of the matter of individual contributions. I do not think the citizens here, who would be benefited enormously by this encampment, ought to come to Congress at all. I do not think this question ought to have been obtruded here considering what was understood and what is a matter of record in the newspapers as to their ability and their determination to make provision themselves as citizens of Washington.

Of course, if the city government, through such methods as it may adopt, may make this appropriation, that is all right, and I shall vote for it. That is what I want to do; but what I said, in addition to that proposition, was simply that I did not think, as a matter of taste, it was a proper thing for the citizens of Washington to come here at all about.

As to the city of Lincoln, the Senator says that if the encampment had been held there its common council would have had to appropriate; but there probably would not have been power to do this. It probably would not have been competent for the common council of the city of Lincoln under its charter to make any such appropriation. It would have been necessary to obtain individual contributions from the loyal people there, and every Democrat as well as every Republican is a loyal man when it comes to entertaining the ex-soldiers under such circumstances and at such times, in the West—and that vigorous, plucky town would have found the money.

I can not consent to be placed in the position in which the Senator from Maine undertakes to place me in respect to this thing.

Mr. FRYE. I did not wish to place the Senator in any position he did not occupy. I understood him that he would have voted against any appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I did not say that I would vote against the proposition of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FRYE. Did not the Senator say he would vote against any appropriation?

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Then I misunderstood him; and if he is going to vote for it I will take back every word I said.

Mr. PADDOCK. I said I was not in favor of any appropriation out of the Federal Treasury chargeable to the Government of the United States as such for the payment of the expenses of this encampment.

Mr. FRYE. I am glad the Senator is going to vote for it. I thought he would.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am not willing to vote for any appropriation to be charged to the Government of the United States. I am willing to vote for an appropriation to be paid by the people of the District of Columbia, as provided by this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when in the Grand Army encampments the question is discussed "Where shall we meet next," of course there are always competing cities. Those who go there to represent those cities and urge the encampment to adopt this or that place as the next place of meeting, have as a rule previously talked with some of their leading citizens, ascertained the temper of the city, and whether it will be generally acceptable to the railroads, hotels, and public-spirited people of all descriptions, and they make an estimate of what they can possibly raise for the entertainment of the soldiers, and the Grand Army chooses then, not only according to the pecuniary estimate, but upon their fancy in general as to where they would like to go.

I am very glad they chose this place. There are a great many of them at every encampment who will never attend another. The great majority of them are getting so far along in years now that they certainly will never come to Washington again. A great majority of those who will be here next September have never been here since they passed through this city during the stormy times of war, and there will be a majority of them, probably, soldiers who have been through Washington in one way or another, ten or twenty thousand of those who went through here in Sherman's great final review.

Now, Washington as a city must not be behind Detroit or Boston or any other public-spirited or patriotic city. It must even do better, for it is not only an American city, but is the American capital city, and it must not deal with this thing in any narrow spirit.

We ought not to saddle this whole expense upon the citizens of this town. It is ungenerous; it is not a broad and manly and generous treatment of the question at all. We have made mistakes enough in that direction. We have imposed upon the people here the cost of a zoological garden upon a scale that a city of 250,000 inhabitants elsewhere would never have thought of undertaking. We have ordained the park in the gratification of national pride and for national cultivation. We had no right, I say, to impose the expense on this community. I regard that action of Congress as a very great mistake and an ungenerous imposition. Now, do not let us follow it up in a case so peculiar as this with another attempt to tell them how much these people shall spend upon patriotic and hospitable intent.

It is quite wrong, in my judgment. I would rather that whatever we gave should be given out and out entirely by the United States as its share of the contribution. We are carrying on here a large number of charitable institutions, and in accordance with that understood rule of partnership between the Government and the city, we pay half the expenses of those charitable institutions. The constitutional argument against that sort of expenditure is just as strong precisely as the constitutional argument against this appropriation for this coming entertainment, and yet nobody has been troubled about what we give towards these charities.

Mr. President, this is not a wealthy city in the true sense, if you carefully think of it. There is a colored population, I do not know how large, but probably from sixty to eighty thousand here. We know that is not a wealthy population. Then, there is the great population that is dependent, directly or indirectly, upon Government employment, and the pay given Government employes. Most of them are not wealthy people. Many of them are saving some money to support families elsewhere, and to buy themselves little homes about here. The wealthy population referred to is largely a population that comes here as it goes to Saratoga and Long Branch. They are temporary residents, and many of them have homes elsewhere, where they have calls for public purposes and charitable purposes. This is not a wealthy city. I should be glad if this appropriation could be a generous sum directly from the Treasury of the United States, without asking anybody else to assist, and without imposing any share of it upon the District of Columbia.

I wish to say a word more, which I came very near omitting. For this District the Congress of the United States is the municipal government, the State government, the National Government, all in one. The people of the District have no representation here. We are absolute masters of the situation. We have put the government of this town in the hands of three receivers, being dissatisfied with the democratic experiment here. We have assumed all the duty, I say, of the city, the state, and the national relation toward these people; and where we are supreme in this way, we have the perfect power to do anything that any municipality can do, for we can create and we can destroy municipal government here. We have all these powers reposed in us; we have all the national powers reposed in us; and we can do what becomes a gentleman among gentlemen in a matter of this sort.

Now, take the city of Detroit. The citizens there raised $50,000 and the city gave $20,000. In Boston it was similar, except that the State of Massachusetts gave something, the city of Boston gave something, and the citizens gave something. We must do as well by this matter certainly as anybody else did, and we ought to do just a little better.

This is not wasted money, gentlemen. You will have here 100,000 men whom you asked to go out and save the nation in a time of trouble. You are giving a great object lesson in patriotism, and the whole country will look at this extraordinary march of the men who left here long, long, years ago, and are now near the end of their term of life.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with this appropriation and the objects it has in view. What so becoming in a great Government as to enable the soldiers who fought in her defense to meet in the shadow of this Capitol, which, owing to their courage and sacrifices, still remains the capital of a reunited, prosperous, and happy country? I am sure the people of this city, which bears the name of our first patriot, will gladly welcome the Grand Army to this city, and will be more than willing to make the necessary expenditure to receive them in the spirit and after the manner of other great cities heretofore honored by their presence. The attempt to shift the expense from the national Treasury to the city of Washington for a great national tribute to the nation's defenders is too nigardly to satisfy the people of this great country, whatever we may say of the representatives of the people.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I shall not vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], to charge this whole appropriation upon the District of Columbia. I should much rather vote for the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], that the National Government itself should do whatever is done in the way of providing for this encampment here.

The true significance of the encampment is its national character; the purpose of it is national; the origin of it is national; the benefit, if any shall arise out of it, is national in all its phases and in all its results. The fact that there is to be one is a great national fact. There is no side of it, there is no inspiration in it, there is nothing that stimulates the old soldier to come here which is not national in all its phases and all its colors and all its emotions.

It would not be fair for us, having the power here, to turn around and say we will saddle the expense upon the city of Washington. Washington has no more interest in this than the nation has, nor as much. All that there is in Washington peculiar in this matter is national itself, and it does not become us here, it seems to me, to undertake to compel the city of Washington to do that which the whole nation ought to do.

If there is anything sad about it, it is because every part of the nation and every individual in the nation can not participate in it with the same feeling. I wish all might. If anything will contribute to a unity of feeling in this respect it will be a great and generous and noble provision on the part of the United States as united States for this one celebration of the great incidents connected with the war.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him who invited this encampment to this city? Was it the Government, or was it the people of Washington City?

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, the Senator threw that out yesterday as a reason why we should shirk this whole thing. It seems a very small reason why we should. It was not the city of Washington in its corporate capacity that did this thing; it was citizens of Washington, who are citizens of the United States and not having any voice at all in the administration of public affairs here. It ill becomes us to take advantage of that fact and saddle upon them the whole expense. It was not the city of Washington that extended the invitation to the Grand Army. The city of Washington in that respect has no corporate existence, no method of speaking as a city, and can not speak except through the Congress of the United States. The Constitution has devolved upon the United States all the functions that pertain to the city of Washington, and the Congress of the United States are to-day debating the question whether it is not best for them, availing themselves of this constitutional power, to shirk participation in this one great and grand occasion.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I was quite aware of the fact that the city of Washington as a corporation had not extended any invitation, nor can it extend any except through Congress; but my question looked to the answer that the Senator has given. The invitation was extended by the people of Washington, and if the encampment is here, they are the guests of the people of Washington, and not the guests of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator suppose that the amount of money made out of this grand encampment is the object or purpose of it; that there is nothing beyond the amount of money to be put into the pockets of the population around here, hack-drivers and hotel-keepers and saloon-keepers? Is that the object of this great encampment here? If it is, we had better not have anything to do with it, and all others had better keep clear of it. If there is not something better, higher, and nobler coming out of this encampment by which all the people of the United States are to be benefited, then we had better not have anything to do with it.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, as a question of power, an appropriation from the national Treasury can as easily be justified as can be the vote of the Senate imposing the expense contemplated by this amendment upon the city of Washington. That is to say, I can as easily, with my views of the powers of Congress under the Constitution, vote to assume the whole burden that this appropriation would impose, or a part of it, as I could impose it upon the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, if this appropriation is intended merely for the benefit, or if its results are to be limited to such benefits as may be derived from the presence of a large number of persons who will spend a great deal of money in Washington, if the people here are to be alone benefited, then they ought to pay this expense; and if I believed that, I would agree with those who say that Congress ought not to interfere at all. That is to say, if I believed it was purely a grand gathering from which Washington would derive all that is beneficial, I should say make no appropriation, but let the people of Washington—if there are any people in Washington, for I confess, although there are a great many citizens here, it has not been my good fortune to meet many of them; it seems to be the habitation of strangers—but if that were so I would say to them "arrange your own matters in your own way."

But, sir, that is not the view I take of this matter. I realize what in my own person I observe in the persons of many thousands of the Union soldiers in the North and in the South, that the number is becoming less and less; time is doing its work upon these men. That they deserve well of the country is admitted. They do not possess all the spirit of patriotism that is in the country, but they have evinced their patriotism under exceedingly trying circumstances. This gathering will be a gathering of peace; it will be promotive of important national results, for I incline to believe that this grand gathering of soldiers will not be confined alone to the men who wore the blue. I have no doubt when the grand encampment takes place during the next fall that thousands of men who live across the river will be present and they will be taken by the hands as brave men shake the hands of each other.

It will be a grand assemblage of men who were soldiers in war, but who are now citizens in peace. It will be a meeting of the men who have done more to promote the peace of this country after the civil war than any others, because it is a fact that if, at the close of the war, the settlement of the terms of peace had been confided to the soldiers of the two armies there would have been very little controversy in the country after actual hostilities ceased.

It is in that view that I favor this appropriation, and I confess

I do not want the people of Washington to regard it as their occasion at all. I do not want them to understand that they are expected to pay this expense. There is a sort of partnership between the District and the Federal Government, so that appropriations for objects like this and others may be imposed upon the Federal Treasury and upon the District equally; but I desire from my standpoint that this shall be supported by an appropriation dictated by the Congress of the United States, and that it shall be controlled in the interest of the old men who will gather here at the capital of their country for the last time, who will, in passing from the West and the North and the South, see how marvellous this country has grown since the great struggle that involved the existence of the Union, men who will see what this capital has come to be, and will realize by seeing what has been accomplished that they have served the country well, and that North and South and East and West have grown and prospered as the result of the great struggle in which they were engaged.

Let them come, old men that they are; they will be here but a little time longer; time is dealing with them; their heads are gray; their limbs are palsied, and they will desire to come for the last time to visit the capital of their country, which has grown so much since the great hours of sorrow that spread over the whole land.

I will vote for charging this upon the District treasury or upon the property here, with reluctance I confess, but if it will insure the passage of the amendment I will favor it, and in one point of view it will be just, but I prefer that the appropriation shall be made from the National Treasury, and that the Congress of the United States shall say to these old tottering men, "come and share in the hospitality offered you by your country and not by this paltry city." I say "paltry," though it is a grand and beautiful city, but what is it compared with this Republic of which it is the mere capital?

I trust, therefore, that the Committee on the District of Columbia will control this appropriation. I am not disposed to enter into any terms. I shall vote for the amendment proposed by my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] if it is necessary to insure the passage of the measure; but I would rather that it should not be adopted. I would rather it had not been proposed. I should have been glad, waiving all constitutional difficulties and waiving everything else, that this appropriation of $100,000 had been passed without a single word of dissent or comment as the voluntary tribute of this country to this great carnival of peace, which will take place here during the coming fall.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, since the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] has relieved this side of the Chamber of all suspicions of disloyalty, I suppose that I may venture to let fall a few desultory observations further in this discussion.

I have not seen since my early experience at a Fourth of July barbecue in my own native State of Kentucky, when I could smell the barbecued meat, as much unalloyed patriotism as I heard from that Senator this morning. It reminds me somewhat of my early history, of a performance that I once witnessed in which the lines and words of the play were not particularly noticeable, but the act concluded with the principal performer wrapping himself in the American flag, rushing to the footlights, firing off a horse-pistol, and screaming like the American eagle. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that Senator thought proper to refer to those of us who had scruples about this appropriation as being niggardly. I resent that epithet, there is nothing in my public career which justifies it. I would not have thought of mentioning it, but the fact is that in looking back upon my career here as a Senator, I think I have been the author of more public-buildings bills, with the exception of those fathered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], now absent on account of sickness, than any other Senator of equal service here, and very many of these buildings have been constructed in the city of Washington, and have added to the beauty and to the growth and to the population of this capital.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself on this side of the Chamber oppose this appropriation on constitutional grounds. I made no such argument against this amendment. I said if the Constitution was so clear that it could be viewed at a distance and understood as having no objection to this legislation, I would not vote for this appropriation.

I understood that Senator to remark that no similar meeting of the Grand Army had ever been held in this country where there had not been other than private contributions. The Grand Army assembled in the city of St. Louis, and the expenses were defrayed by the voluntary contributions of citizens alone, and not by an appropriation on the part of the municipal assembly or by the Legislature of the State of Missouri.

The ground upon which I oppose this appropriation is simply because it is a municipal or private affair—no, not even a municipal one. It was originated by individuals, who pledged themselves to the Grand Army when it met at Detroit that they would defray these expenses and extend to them the hospitalities of the national capital; and now it is proposed that $80,000 shall be paid by the taxpayers of this city.

Mr. CULLOM. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. VEST. Eighty thousand dollars I understand to be the amendment—$80,000 to be taken out of the poor people of this capital, who have nothing to do with this matter; who were not consulted in regard to it, but whose tax money is to be coerced out of them in order to make good the promises of the gentlemen who got up this thing originally. That is just as objectionable to me as the original proposition. What right had these gentlemen to put this charge upon all the people of the District of Columbia? What is the benefit to any poor man in this city, who is barely able to support his family upon his income, and whose taxes to-day, even when he pays one-half of them, are onerous—what right have they to place upon him any portion of this burden?

Mr. President, if we are to act upon enlarged and patriotic national grounds, of which we have heard so much this morning, if this is to be an occasion in which to build up patriotism and to do away with all the acrimonious feeling of the war, why not go further and let the Congress of the United States make appropriations for the next ecumenical or ecclesiastical council that is held here in the city of Washington? Why, when the Episcopalians or the Presbyterians or the Catholics see proper to call a great ecclesiastical convention, a national convention, as they have done in the past, should not Congress step in and pay the entire expense and relieve the public of their duty? If patriotic feeling is to be the basis, the salvation of souls is a much higher object. If we are to support an organization of private gentlemen who have been soldiers upon either side, why not appropriate money for the soldiers of Christ?

Mr. President, to go a little further, why should we not, as Democrats and Republicans, pay the expenses of our national conventions if they are held here? If I had the constitutional opinions of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] I should have no scruple. He believes that under the general welfare clause Congress can do anything, and I have heard him declare in this Chamber that he was in favor of imposing any amount of tariff duties even if the Government did not need a cent of revenue. I am obliged to the Senator for his criticism upon my strict-construction opinions. He ornaments me more than I deserve. If I entertained his opinions I would have no constitutional scruple about Congress doing anything. Under the blanket clause of the Constitution they can make a two-year-old mule out of a yearling or make any appropriation in the world which they see proper. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in the discussion of this question, the Senator from Nebraska, who spoke so earnestly a moment ago, should not forget that probably five times as many old soldiers will come to Washington as would have gone to any town or city in that great State, and he ought to recognize the fact that they acted wisely in making the selection they did. They will come here not only for the reason that they desire once more to see this magnificent capital, on the streets of which that grand review was had when the war ended, but they will come for the reason that many of the battlefields of the war of the rebellion, in which some of them participated, are in the vicinity of Washington, which they will wish once more to revisit.

I feel, Mr. President, that we should be generous to the surviving soldiers of the Union armies, and that whatever money is needed to make this encampment a great success should be given by Congress with an unstinted hand.

It is argued that in addition to what may be appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia we should not take $50,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for this purpose. Do Senators stop to reflect that $50,000 will be only four-fifths of 1 mill for each man, woman, and child in this great country? I do not believe that there is a citizen of the United States who measures his patriotism by that standard. Certain I am that the people whom I have the honor in part to represent do not measure their patriotism in that way.

Mr. President, the constitutional argument which has been raised on this question has no terrors for me, nor should it be allowed to influence a single vote.

I recall to mind the fact, as the patriotic people of the nation recall to mind the fact, that there was a time when the Congress of the United States would have given all the revenues of this Government if those soldiers could have promised to save the Union and to restore the nationality which was trembling to its fall. By their valor and sacrifices they did save the Union, they did restore the nationality, they did preserve the Constitution, they did bring back that old flag without a single star erased, the flag, Mr. President, that floats over every capital of every State in this great Republic to-day.

Shall the Constitution now be invoked against them? Shall the remnants of our brave armies not be honored by a grateful people? Can the nation afford to forget or be indifferent to their claims? Surely we ought not to weigh with the apothecary's scales the appropriation that Congress may make for the encampment that is about to be held in this great city. To many of them it will be the last reunion with their comrades, and it is fitting that their eyes once more behold the flag floating over the nation's Capitol, which they helped to save in the days that tried men's souls.

Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the appropriation recommended by the District Committee as modified by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, and I trust, in view of the past, as well as in view of the future of this great country, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri may be voted down, and that the appropriation of $100,000 to aid in the proper observance of what will be a grand historic occasion may be made with practical unanimity. Any other result would be unjust to ourselves, ungrateful to the defenders of the Union cause, and a blot upon the fair name and fame of a patriotic and liberty-loving people.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak upon this question, though I warmly favor the largest appropriation to defray the expenses of this encampment, and the payment of the entire sum by the General Government. After a period of almost thirty years, the soldiers of the Republic have concluded to hold a reunion here in the city of Washington, and I would not have it under any circumstances characterized, as it has been when held in other places, as being put up to the highest bidder, or of its being supported and the expenses of it defrayed by private charity or by private contributions.

I suppose that I, for these views, will be understood as holding extremely liberal notions in the construction of the Constitution, but there are such ample precedents for a Government appropriation in this case that I am quite willing to add another.

Pass out, sir, in front of the Capitol and your eye meets the monument of Washington piercing the clouds. The monument was reared to Washington's memory, to perpetuate it. The appropriation of the money for that purpose must also have been an infraction of the Constitution, and strained it as severely as the appropriation proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Pass through the streets of this city, and everywhere your eye greets monuments to our gallant generals, many of them reared at the expense of the General Government, or which contributed in some way to them—infractions of the Constitution; but I cite them as precedents for this one that you again propose to furnish.

Look across the river and your eye greets Arlington, where sleep the immortal dead, interred at Government expense; and, except for that expenditure, those bones would be scattered upon the battlefields upon which the heroes fell—an unconstitutional appropriation of money from the Federal Treasury.

I say, Mr. President, appropriations like these and for these purposes are not for a moment to be illustrated away by the question "Why do you not appropriate money for a religious convention and to defray the expenses of political conventions?"

The appropriations may be unconstitutional, but I say to you they promote a great educational purpose. Patriotism is educated and developed by money expended in this manner, and I have no hesitation in saying that if the battlefields of the Revolution and of the war of 1812 and the grave of every hero of that heroic age had been immortalized through the North and South by a monument reared to mark the first as holy ground, and to the memory of the others, to perpetuate the glories of American patriotism and American soldiers, and of their heroic services for their country upon the field of battle, there never would have been a war to dissolve the Union.

I am willing that these veterans shall come here as the guests of the nation, and that in no sense shall they come here aided by private contributions because this petty trader or that hotel-keeper can make something from the money that they will spend. By the pensions that we have granted, by the decorations that we have bestowed, by the monuments that we have reared to the honor of those who served the country in its greatest need and necessity, we have demonstrated that it is not the object, or rather it is not the purpose, of this nation to impose upon the soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic, in their reunion at the national capital that they saved, the necessity of defraying their expenses by contributions solicited or paid as a matter of personal pecuniary interest or by a contribution from the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the larger appropriation that has been proposed here, and of its being paid from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] will not prevail. This subject was considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the question naturally suggested itself whether the District of Columbia should meet this entire expense, or whether the Government of the United States should share in this entertainment. It was the judgment of a majority of the committee that whatever was appropriated should be appropriated as other appropriations are made for the District of Columbia, and that the Government should assume its fair share of the appropriation. As has been suggested, the reason therefor was because it was looked upon as a national gathering, a national entertainment, rather than a local one.

I was at the encampment in Detroit when this invitation was extended to ex-soldiers of the Republic to meet here in this national encampment, to enjoy the hospitalities of this beautiful city and to revive again the associations which are historic, and which naturally cluster about this nation's capital, and I am very sure that no assurance was given there by the representatives of this city that no appropriation would be asked from Congress. I am very sure that no representation was made by that delegation that the entire expense would be met by the people of this city. Those who were gathered at that encampment in Detroit were assured that, if the invitation was accepted and this national encampment was held here, those who gathered here to participate in its felicities and its pleasures, would be royally entertained and hospitably received. They were assured that the doors of the city would be opened to them and that they would be received with royal hospitality; but there was no assurance given that Congress might not be called upon to contribute in some fair measure to this great national gathering.

The District of Columbia was represented at that encampment by two of the Commissioners and the city of Washington was represented by some of its most conspicuous citizens. Upon the representations made and the invitation extended, it was decided that this encampment should be held here, not only because of the associations which cluster about the city, but because of the historic fields that are so accessible to it. As has been suggested, it is the judgment of all who have had occasion to investigate it or to give it a moment's thought, that this will be the largest encampment ever held in the history of this organization. The historic fields of Virginia are so accessible, to say nothing of the points of interest in this city and the associations connected with it, that comrades will gather here in greater numbers than ever before in a national encampment.

I think with those who favor this proposition that it is too much to ask of the people of the city of Washington to bear the burden of this entire entertainment or to share its entire expense. The veterans will gather here in numbers the like of which has never been seen in other encampments. In Detroit $50,000 was appropriated from the municipal fund and $60,000 was raised by private contributions. They had exposition buildings there and other accommodations that could be used for the entertainment of the old soldiers without any considerable expense to the city or to the citizens. No such advantages exist here. Provision must be made for this entertainment; accommodations must be secured; lodging houses must be created or provided for, and so the entire expense of this entertainment must be met.

As has been suggested, in Boston it was found that the State of Massachusetts ought to make a contribution, and it did it liberally and patriotically. So the city of Boston made its municipal contribution in addition to the contributions made by private citizens. This is not a wealthy city, and yet it is urged here that the people of this city ought to meet this entire expense.

It has been suggested that if we make an appropriation for this purpose, we must make an appropriation for other gatherings, and perhaps it is but fair to suggest in this connection that during the last year fifty different conventions have been held in this city, and the people here have met the expenses very largely. The people have secured and provided accommodations generously; they are taxed almost weekly for this purpose, and they do not complain of it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Have the people here not received the benefit in every case?

Mr. PERKINS. There has been very little benefit accruing, except that it has given the delegates attending these conventions the advantages of seeing this city, its grandeur, and its beauty, and of sharing in its hospitality; but in a financial way I question whether it has been of any benefit to this city; but the people have been called upon from week to week to make these contributions, and they have done it cheerfully and uncomplainingly.

But in view of the thousands who are to gather here at this encampment they have thought it was but fair that Congress should, at least in part, assist in this great entertainment. We are appropriating each year for our monuments here, for the decoration of our public buildings, and for the beautifying of the city, and in all this the Government of the United States bears its full share of the appropriation. So it was thought by a majority of the committee having jurisdiction of this subject that the Government of the United States should share with the people of this District in meeting this expense and in making the appropriation.

I hope, and I know it is the wish of the majority at least of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri will not prevail, but that Congress will in its wisdom direct that this appropriation shall be made with such conditions accompanying it that the Government of the United States will share in the obligation and in making this encampment the most hospitable and enjoyable in the history of the country. Let the defenders of our nation's unity and power be received in the nation's capital with a royal welcome that will give evidence of a nation's gratitude and of a country's appreciation of their services as soldiers and of their worth as citizens.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything upon this subject, and will say but a word.

The appropriation proposed to be made by the Congress of the United States for the purpose of the entertainment of the soldiers when they come here to attend the encampment of the Grand Army of the United States, it seems to me, should be an appropriation from the national Treasury. I believe that for the reason that, whatever may have been done elsewhere, the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic here in Washington will be regarded in some degree, at least, as a national encampment, recognized by the National Government, and the Government of the United States can not afford not to make it a national encampment in the fullest sense of the word.

Sir, the suggestion that was at first made by some of the Senators upon this floor that the Constitution was in the way, is certainly met by hundreds of appropriations made for purposes no more within the purview of the Constitution than would be the appropriation proposed now to be made. For instance, take the action of the Congress of the United States in passing the following act, which is a very brief one, and which I will read:

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the Government and people of France and the family of Gen. La Fayette a cordial invitation to unite with the Government and people of the United States, on the 19th day of October, 1881, in a fit and appropriate observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same or so much thereof as may be necessary to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

That was an act passed by the Congress of the United States directing the President to invite these foreign gentlemen, and when they came here to entertain them, and an appropriation for that purpose was made. That was followed subsequently by another act making provision in an appropriation bill as is proposed to be done here:

For the additional amount required to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution of February 18, 1881, authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and the family of Gen. Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Va., including the expenses of the officer of the War Department detailed to take charge of the military ceremonies at Yorktown, and the liabilities incurred by the Yorktown Centennial Commission, $32,328.92, including $300 additional compensation to William S. Gilman for acting as disbursing officer of the commission, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable upon accounts specifically stated, and to be audited and paid by the Secretary of State.

So I might look through the statute books and find perhaps one hundred acts of Congress providing for appropriations on a level with the appropriation which is proposed to be made to-day, except that in this instance the proposition is to provide for the entertainment of the men who fought for the Union and for the flag and who saved the integrity of the nation. I say that if there was ever an appropriation proposed to the Congress of the United States upon the line of appropriations that may be said not to have been specifically named in the Constitution, the one before the Senate of the United States is above all of them in consequence and entitled to consideration.

Sir, there has been much talk about the District of Columbia. So far as I have observed, there are few people in Washington who have money; it is a city of boarding houses. Except, as my colleague suggested, there are a very vast number of strangers here within our gates. To impose upon the District of Columbia the necessity of raising, I have no doubt, $150,000, if not more, to entertain the soldiers who may come here—I speak of them as soldiers, although they are now citizens—would almost bankrupt the people who would have to raise the money. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that it would be fair to them; and if it were fair to them it would take away from this movement the character of nationality which it should have by the Congress of the United States making the necessary appropriations and being responsible for it?

Sir, it has been twenty-seven years, I believe, since the Army of the United States, or a great part of it, came home with their tattered flags and banners and rags, if you please, and marched through the streets of the city of Washington, and I do not know that I can contribute anything better than to read a portion of the description of that great event, in the following language:

Meanwhile the victorious armies of the Union had been congregated at Washington, where they passed in review before President Johnson and Gen. Grant, and then marched home and into history. On the 23d of May the "Army of the Potomac" and on the 24th the "Division of the Mississippi" swept through the metropolis for hours, the successive waves of humanity crested with gleaming sabers and burnished bayonets, while hundreds of bands made the air ring with patriotic music. Loyal voices cheered and loyal hands applauded as the heroic guardians of the national ark of constitutional liberty passed along. Neither did the legions of imperial Rome, returning in triumph along the Appian Way, or the conquering hosts of Napoleon the Great, when welcomed back from their Italian campaign by the Parisians, or the British guards when they returned from the Crimea, receive a more heartfelt ovation than was awarded to the laurel-crowned "boys in blue."

Great expectation concerning this review was indulged throughout the nation. The home-coming of the "boys in blue" was a matter interesting every hamlet of the North and almost every home. But more than the welcome was clustering about the scene. These grand armies and their famous leaders had become historic, and worthily so, for they had endured and achieved, and victory now was theirs. The newspapers proclaimed the grandeur of the coming event, the railroads extended their best accommodations to travelers, and the people responded in immense numbers. With the soldiery and civilians Washington was densely packed, but cheerful enthusiasm appeared on every side.

Two hundred thousand veteran troops, trained on a hundred battlefields and commanded by the leading generals of the service, were there to be reviewed by the Lieutenant-General who commanded them all, by the President of the United States, by his Cabinet, etc.

Mr. President, in my opinion the gathering together of the Grand Army of the Republic in this city this year will be a scene much like that, but instead of 100,000 there will be nearer 200,000 of those scarred veterans coming to the national capital, where many of them were mustered out, and where they then for the last time visited the capital of the United States, which they had helped to save.

I contend that this should be made, so far as Congress can do in preparing for this great event, a national affair—not for the purpose of rekindling animosities between the sections; far from it. I would not make a suggestion of that sort; but they will come here to meet their comrades, to see the capital of the nation, and to mingle again together as they do in a small way in their several localities, and if they come, as I believe they will, they will come under the old flag, singing again the Star Spangled Banner, and they will rekindle a flame of patriotism in this country which can be done in no other way as well.

The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I believe, suggested that we build monuments. So we do. When the old soldiers come here they will find a monument, a very modest one it is true, to Mr. Lincoln, a statue of Gen. Scott, one to Gen. Thomas, a modest one above the remains of Gen. Sheridan, statues to McPherson, to Rawlins, to Farragut, to Dupont, to Logan, and I do not know how many more scattered over this city, making it the most interesting of any place on the American continent in which the veteran soldiers can assemble.

Therefore, without further taking the time of the Senate, I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri may be voted down, if it is not withdrawn, and that Congress will vote an appropriation of $100,000 for the veterans of the late war.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, when I offered this amendment yesterday evening, a very simple one, merely providing that "the whole of this amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," I did not anticipate such a glorious outpouring and revival of patriotism and eloquence; I did not anticipate that I was furnishing a stage scene for all the Presidential aspirants to enter upon and show themselves before the people of the United States. [Laughter.] I did not anticipate that my good friend from Illinois would be so far carried away that he would believe in his heart that the great city of St. Louis was a State of the Union and had a United States Senator upon this floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know to whom the Senator alludes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] in his burning patriotism and eloquence referred to the "Senator from St. Louis."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will pardon me. I knew that he represented a greater area than that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. I do not even reside in the city of St. Louis. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, this has all passed away very pleasantly. It has given an occasion for patriotism and sentimentality and eloquence and all that; but it is a practical question whether half of the proposed appropriation shall come out of the Treasury of the United States and half out of the District of Columbia or whether it shall all come out of the treasury of the District of Columbia. That is the practical question.

Has the Congress of the United States invited the Grand Army of the Republic to hold an annual encampment here? No, sir; not all. How did it agree to come here? How did it happen to consent to be located here? It has not been here for years. There is an annual encampment held every year, and at the last annual encampment various cities of the United States competed for the location of the coming encampment in September next. They do that every year. St. Louis competed for it and obtained it; Chicago competed for it and obtained it; San Francisco, I believe, obtained it once, and Boston obtained it, and so it has assembled in different parts of the country, in cities offering the best accommodations and advantages, all things considered.

Now, the good people of Washington wanted this encampment. There are persons in Washington besides boarding-house keepers. There are business men here; men of wealth in Washington. There are private citizens in Washington who are developing the city and making it what it is. It is not the boarding-house mistresses nor the occupants of boarding houses that make Washington City what it is. It is true that we have some 25,000 Government employes here, and a great many of them, when their terms of service expire, remain here, become citizens, and go into business. It is the citizens of the District of Columbia who sought and obtained this encampment to arrange to come here, without any kind of authority from the United States—no more authority from it than Boston had when that great city obtained the encampment; no more authority than the citizens of St. Louis had to bind the United States when that city obtained the encampment.

Mr. President, this is not the only organization in the United States whose encampments or whose annual meetings are sought for by various cities in the United States. We have various national organizations who hold their annual sessions here and there, this city and that city competing for them. It is an advantage and an advertisement to the city; it is an advantage to all kinds of business in this city. Enterprising citizens, real-estate owners, real-estate brokers, merchants, and others, all make efforts to bring people to the city, to show them its beauties, its advantages, its future, and all that. So it is with all the cities.

Mr. President, I say that if we pay the expenses of this encampment out of the Treasury of the United States and of the District of Columbia equally, as the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia proposes, then the time is coming when every association that meets in Washington will expect Congress to treat its members as the guests of the nation and their expenses to be paid by the United States as well as by the District of Columbia.

This is only an entering wedge; it is only a stepping stone; it is the foundation for all these national organizations to hold their sessions in this city upon the invitation of the citizens of this city, and then to have the expenses paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

I warn Senators of what will be the effect of this; and I warn the citizens of the District of Columbia that the time may come when forbearance will cease to be a virtue and the people of the United States their sovereignty will say to their Senators and Representatives, "You shall no longer vote upon us one-half of the burdens of the District of Columbia." That time is rapidly coming, and we are only adding fuel to the flames that will bring it.

I am a friend of the people of the District of Columbia, and I want to see them fairly treated, but I do not want to see them do damage to themselves. There are many persons in this country who do not believe it is right that the whole people of the United States should be taxed to pay the expenses of the local government of the District of Columbia. An agitation of that question before the people of the various Congressional districts would be a popular one, and it would send many a Representative here. We are simply laying the foundation in this proceeding to make Congress acknowledge its responsibility for all invitations to national organizations which may be given by the District of Columbia to be held in this District.

It is not a question of constitutional power that is involved in this amendment; it simply proposes that the whole amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. It does not even affect the amount to be appropriated. It is true I offered another amendment proposing to reduce the amount to $80,000, but that is not now pending. This is simply that the amount, whatever it is, that is appropriated shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I can vote for this amendment to the amendment. I believe it is right; I believe it is just. It is what every other city in the United States has done and will do in the future for these encampments and for the various national organizations and societies that may be held in their midst. I can not vote to tax the people of Missouri, my constituents, to pay one-half of this expense, and if Senators insist that it shall be imposed upon both the United States and the District of Columbia, I desire now to record my vote against it and my opposition to it. It is a proper thing to be paid by the District of Columbia; it is not a proper thing to be paid by the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. SANDERS obtained the floor.

Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SANDERS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled

"An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. HIGGINS. With the consent of the Senator from Montana, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri one question, and that is whether he considers that one-half of the regular and general taxes paid out of the revenues of the United States for the uses of the District of Columbia are paid by the people of Missouri and the rest of the country or are a proper tax upon the property of the United States in this District?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; I do not. I do not think that the basis of division is equal or honest or fair or just, but as it was settled before I came into the Senate, I have acquiesced in it. I am not trying to agitate it. I think it will be a dangerous question to agitate before the people of the United States—the humbuggery that the United States owns the streets of Washington.

What are the streets of Washington for? For the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia who are living here. To undertake such a pretense, such a sham, such a fraud upon the people of the United States as to hold that they own the streets of Washington and therefore must keep them in repair and pay all the expenses of this District!

It is a mockery, Mr. President, it is an insult to the intelligence of the honest taxpayers of the United States to say that they own them. They belong to the District of Columbia just as much as the streets of St. Louis belong to the city of St. Louis, or of Baltimore to the city of Baltimore.

And our public buildings, what are they? An ornament and a glory to the city of Washington. They have helped to make it what it is. They have increased the value of the real estate here, and Washington City would not part with them for all of its worth. Any city in the Union would give millions of dollars and leave the public buildings untaxed to have the public buildings erected in their midst that have been erected in the city of Washington, and would pledge themselves for all eternity, until Gabriel's trumpet should blow, that they would never tax them.

It is nonsense to talk about such things. I do not want to agitate the question. I say the amount paid by the taxpayers of the United States is out of all proportion. It should not be 50 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to know whether it is the pleasure of the Senate that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it is, and to that end I ask that the regular business may be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. If there be no objection, the same will be considered as agreed to. The Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS] has the floor.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I believe in a strict construction of the Constitution; or, in other words, I believe that it means what it says, and I do not believe that plain English words, even if found in a constitution, are mere playthings. That being the case, I am brought face to face with the proposition whether this appropriation is within the constitutional authority of Congress or not. While I do not contemplate a legal argument upon that proposition, I find abundant authority in the precise words of the Constitution (abandoning that clause which authorizes us to promote the general welfare) to grant rewards to the soldiers who have fought in their country's wars without reference to the particular contract that was made when they enlisted. I find that from the beginning of this Government until now such an authority has been asserted by everybody who comprehended English speech and had occasion to deal with such an instance.

The cemeteries in which repose the hallowed dust of our soldiers do not tell of infractions of the Constitution. The bones of the 2,000 nameless soldiers that we gathered up between the Potomac and the Rappahannock after the war and deposited over here at Arlington, and over which we erected a monument that told their history, do not speak of an infraction of the Constitution. No act or event that intensifies in the public heart patriotism, that rewards those men who do the highest service which their country calls upon her fellow-citizens to do, is beyond the purview of the Constitution. We may not only promote the general welfare, but we may provide for the common defense. I know every Senator upon this floor, as we have have passed through the vicissitudes and excitements and exigencies of the last year when we were confronted by the possibility of foreign war, felt more secure in the patriotic impulses of the people that we had discharged every duty that we owed to those who heretofore had fought in the wars of the Republic.

Now, for myself, I am like the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] in that I live in a town or represent a State that was also a candidate for this great convention of ex-soldiers of the Republic, but because my town did not finally secure the location there I am not going to imitate the ancient spinster who said that she was prejudiced against matrimony because she had been once disappointed herself. [Laughter.] I acquit the Senator from saying or from making as the basis of his argument the proposition that because the soldiers did not conclude to meet at Lincoln therefore he would oppose this appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I only intended by that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SANDERS. I thought I was explaining his position with so much more perspicacity than he did, and I undertake to say with as much as he could, that I do not think he ought really to ask me to yield just now. I shall do so cheerfully in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana declines to yield.

Mr. PADDOCK. I agree fully with the Senator as to his perspicacity. I simply used an illustration. I used Lincoln as an illustration; that was all.

Mr. SANDERS. But I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the manifest injustice of the provision which he thinks he favors. The grounds on which it stands it is not necessary at this stage of what I have to say to examine. If the United States was not the possessor and the occupant of a large portion of the property in the District of Columbia there would be something of justice in the argument which he made and the position which he undertook to maintain.

I regret exceedingly that a question of constitutional law must arise upon a contention like the one before us now, and I regret equally that the determination of a question of fact as to what is the relative value of the properties belonging to the United States and belonging to the citizens of the District of Columbia must arise in a somewhat heated discussion of this character. I had supposed from what I had seen and heard in this Hall that it had been agreed, not over the question of an appropriation to pay the expenses of the Grand Army of the Republic, but through a long period of discussion illuminated by a great many instances, that it was about fair between this District and the United States that each of the municipalities should pay one-half of such expenses as this. I am now informed by the Senator from Missouri not only that that is not so, but that he really does not want that question raised because, forsooth, it is the foundation or source of a cyclone that is going to wipe Senators off from the footstool and the District of Columbia out of existence.

When our forefathers put into the Constitution the provision that the Congress of the United States might exercise exclusive jurisdiction over such district, not exceeding 10 miles square, as might be selected for the seat of Government, and when we accepted that seat of Government here there was imposed upon the Congress of the United States a duty which they can not abdicate. I do not myself undertake to enter into a discriminating determination of what proportion of the taxes should be paid by the people resident here and what proportion should be paid by the Government of the United States that has from twenty to twenty-five thousand employes here upon a salary, whose residence is in other places, whose personal property and the taxation consequent upon it is under the authority of law rightly collectable in the States where they reside and not here.

When we contemplate the further fact that about one-third of the population of this District is of colored people who were brought here by a civil commotion and who are not themselves as a rule large property holders, I do not know what precise proportion of the property and of the funds is rightly to be attributed to one of these municipalities and what proportion to the other. I am content so far as that matter is concerned to accept the determination of gentlemen upon this floor who have made it the subject of investigation time and time again in a multitude of instances that have passed away, when their prejudices or their preconceived opinions, if you please, were not excited by a discussion of this character.

But I protest that that question simply illustrates the injustice of this amendment. It does not touch the proposition as to where this money that we here propose to appropriate should come from.

While it was true that the town of Helena, in which I happen to live, did not secure the meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic, another patriotic organization, the sons of the men who fought in that war, did select that town as an appropriate place where they might meet at their annual session this year, and that town, without question or doubt or inquiry, and its citizens and the citizens of the surrounding country are engaged in building a large auditorium and in other ways providing for the accommodation of that vast throng of young and patriotic men, the Sons of Veterans, who will assemble there in memory of the deeds that their fathers performed during our recent civil commotion.

No question arises as to the propriety of doing that. No matter what may be the political views of gentlemen there, with a unanimity that is absolute, with one heart and one mind and one effort, they intend to make that gathering a magnificent success.

I say that when we are charged with the duty of governing this District it is as lawful for us to make this appropriation as it is to care for the insane that are across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, as it is to care for the Soldiers' Home up here, and so far as it concerns these soldiers who were discharged from the service of the United States, so far as caring for these two cemeteries that are within the sight of this Capitol.

There being no constitutional objection to this, the question arises whether anything has transpired that makes it unpatriotic, that makes it profligate that we should make an appropriation of an hundred thousand dollars.

The honorable Senator from Nebraska says that these gentlemen came down there to Detroit, where his town of Lincoln was a competitor with Washington, and promised if the Grand Army of the Republic would assemble here at Washington they would pay all the expenses consequent thereon by private contributions. I should like to inquire of him where he got that information?

Mr. PADDOCK. I got it from the statements of reliable citizens of Nebraska who were there present. There was no intimation there of any kind or nature whatever on the part of anybody who represented the city of Washington that the Congress of the United States would be called upon to make an appropriation to defray the expenses of the encampment; none whatever, as I was told.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, a philosopher who put his wisdom into forms of wit once said that it was a great deal better to know a little that was true and to know it well than to know a great deal that was not so. I am authorized to state by the gentlemen who constituted the committee who went to Detroit that they never pledged, nor promised, nor encouraged anybody to hope, first, that they would not expect the United States Congress to do that which its wisdom approved by way of an appropriation, and that they did not assume to promise in behalf of the municipality of Washington or the liberal-minded citizens of Washington that all the expenses that they would hope to expend for this meeting of the Grand Army at its twenty-sixth encampment would be paid by contributions of private citizens here.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator if he is able to state that there was any intimation whatever on the part of representatives of Washington at that competitive moment that the Congress might be expected to make an appropriation of any kind or nature? Did they not occupy exactly the same attitude in respect to this competitive performance that all of the representatives from other towns, including the great city of Helena, as well as that of Lincoln and others, occupied at the time?

Mr. SANDERS. I decline to go off in a quest of that kind or in search of other inquiries than those which the Senator by his statement made. It is enough for me to say that the statements that these gentlemen went down there and made the promises of which they are accused are not so.

I possibly outside of this Chamber might agree with the Senator from Nebraska that our respective towns were not fought fair; but so far as that proposition is concerned I will say, first, that these gentlemen did not promise that out of the private generosity of the citizens of Washington all these expenses should be paid; and, second, I say if they did, the Congress of the United States is not thereby estopped from doing that which it believes patriotism requires to be done with reference to these soldiers of the Republic.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I do not propose to say anything about the doctrine of estoppel in this matter, but nobody is able to state, as I believe at least, as was the understanding of the citizens of my State who were there that there was any intimation or expectation that the Congress of the United States would be called upon to appropriate; but the understanding was that the citizens of Washington who were to receive the enormous benefits that would necessarily flow in a business direction from the location of the encampment would take care of it by making the necessary contributions for the entertainment of the encampment.

Mr. SANDERS. I have had occasion heretofore to be deeply pained at the understandings of the people of Nebraska, or their misunderstandings in recent years, and I would not undertake to maintain and prove a tangible and palpable and probative fact by saying it was the understanding of my people. If anything was to be deduced from that argument it was that the particular contract that was entered into when the twenty-fifth encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic fixed its next meeting in Washington, such things were said there by men authorized to say them, that prohibit or forbid or make it unjust or unpatriotic for the Congress of the United States to appropriate such a sum of money as it thinks the patriotism of the country dictates to make happy in this capital of their country the 100,000 men who fought our battles and won our great victories.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we had better defer the question of appropriations to soldiers who have fought in our wars for favors or for comfort or for necessities of life or for educational purposes, or for purposes of observation, to some controversy which will not divide us upon lines which unfortunately seem to some extent to have obtruded themselves here. It is a misfortune that such a controversy as this shall arise over a question like this, for men of a mean and coarse cast of mind will attribute the views of constitutional law that are here put forth to some other purpose or to some other consideration than a mere comprehension of the plain English speech in which the Constitution of the United States is framed.

For myself, believing an hundred thousand dollars cordially, unanimously, without question appropriated as a compensation for services rendered, and for perils endured, would not only have had a wholesome effect upon public opinion and thought North and South to-day, but would have been a potential influence so long as time endured in showing that those who thus discharge the highest duties that can be rendered to a country will never be forgotten, and that fighting its battles, protecting its flag, redeeming and rescuing its Constitution, and making it a power honorable among the nations of the earth, is a service that secures to every actor in it the abiding gratitude of the Republic, and that this gratitude does not continue to diminish as the years pass away, but grows brighter and brighter, and seeks new forms and methods of expression as the events themselves go into the perspectives of history, and that such heroism thus recognized becomes a part and parcel of the treasures of the Republic, unifying it, crystallizing it, and making it a power and an authority among the nations of the earth, and excites a gratitude which exists from generation to generation. I trust the appropriation will be made. It would be a wholesome spectacle, and I do hope that the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Missouri will be voted down, and that the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be unanimously passed by this body.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say simply a word. In the first place, I want to say that so far as the city of Washington is concerned no desire nor thought of doing it an injustice was in my mind. I have never had a desire other than to do those things which are helpful in the upbuilding of this great national capital. There never has been a proposition here looking to the development, the adornment of this capital that I have not voted for. I have always voted freely and cheerfully for all propositions deemed necessary for beautifying and making Washington more attractive and prosperous.

And there is another thing. As far as the ex-soldier is concerned there is no one who has uttered a word here to-day whose record is clearer as to friendship and services for him than mine. It is true I did not share with him the fatigues and hardships of the march nor the vicissitudes and discomforts of the camp, or stand with him at the front and take the storm and stress of battle, but I have always been his friend from the beginning to the end. So far as the ex-soldiers have knowledge of my dealings towards them there is not one who will not acquit me of a desire at any time or anywhere to do anything which would operate in any possible way to their detriment or to their disparagement in any respect whatever. No patriotic expression has been uttered here to-day which has not found a ready and an earnest responsive in my heart.

But this proposition seemed to me, as it seemed to the citizens of our State, who were interested in another location, to be purely a business matter on the part of the citizens of the town who were to be benefited and improved by its location, whose business was to be helped, who were to receive vast sums of money on account of this encampment from the multitude of visitors who were sure to come, through their hotels, etc., and that it was their interest and their duty to defray whatever expense might be necessarily incurred to make the encampment a success.

It was with that view only that I have expressed the sentiments I have here, and that I have thought it my duty to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], as I have indicated, because, as I have said, I believe that it is an injustice to call upon all the people of the United States to do that which is specially and particularly for the interest and benefit of the citizens of the town where the encampment is to be located, wherever it might happen to be.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should be glad to make some observations upon this subject, but it has been debated so fully and so thoroughly that if we can have a vote now I shall waive my opportunity. I hope we may have a vote on the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. VEST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment:

And the whole of said amount shall be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I have no idea how he would vote, and I withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. Were he present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] recorded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pair of the Senator from Oregon with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has been announced by the latter's colleague.

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with him, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. McMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] is unavoidably detained away. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FELTON]. I have no knowledge as to how he would vote on this question. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea" upon this amendment to the amendment, and then vote against the amendment as amended.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Wilson.
Cockrell,	Irby,	Peffer,

Chandler,	Harris,	Ransom,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer now the amendment of which I gave notice yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment:

And the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to and disbursed by the citizens' executive committee of Washington having in charge such reception and entertainment, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to offer a further amendment to the amendment, to which I think there will be no objection. I move to strike out in the amendment of the Senator from Michigan in the third line the words, "the proper and legitimate expenses attending the reception and entertainment" and insert in lieu thereof "for the subsistence and quarters," in the fifth line, before the word "union," to insert the word "nonresident," and to strike out in the ninth line the words "and attending the preparation for such reception and entertainment," the effect of the amendment being to restrict the appropriation to the actual necessary expenses of board and lodging of the visiting delegation, leaving the ceremonial and social expenditures to be paid from the subscriptions of the citizens of the District.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 3, after the word "pay," the words "the proper and legitimate expenses attending the reception and entertainment" and insert "for subsistence and quarters;" at the beginning of line 5, to insert the word "nonresident," and in line 9, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the words "and attending the preparation for such reception and entertainment;" so that the amendment would read:

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

To pay for subsistence and quarters of such honorably discharged nonresident Union soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war of the rebellion as may attend, as delegates or otherwise, the Twenty-sixth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to and disbursed by the citizens' executive committee of Washington having in charge such reception and entertainment, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. QUAY. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Several Senators having responded to their names—

Mr. MORGAN said: What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. As there seems to be a misunderstanding as to the pending question, the Chair suggests that it should be again stated. Is there objection? If there be no objection, the amendment as proposed to be amended will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment as it would read if amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on adopting the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. The roll call will be continued, unless there is a misunderstanding as to the question. If so, it will be begun anew.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to inquire whether the amendment to the amendment affects that provision which gives to the Secretary of War the control of the fund.

Mr. FRYE. That has already been adopted as a part of the amendment.

Mr. PALMER. If it does not affect that provision, it strikes me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania is an exceedingly proper one.

Mr. PERKINS. It does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. QUAY. It does not interfere with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll call will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. FAULKNER (when Mr. KENNA's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENNA] is detained from the Senate by indisposition. He is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Allison,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Berry,	Frye,	Manderson,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Turpie,

Casey,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pasco,	White,
Daniel,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. At the request of the Department of the Potomac of the Woman's Relief Corps of this city, I move to add at the close of the amendment as amended:

Provided, That $5,000 of this sum shall be placed at the disposal of the Department of the Potomac of the Woman's Relief Corps.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. The amendment has not been made part of the bill yet. There is another amendment, is there not?

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan was an amendment to an amendment that he reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. So the question now is, I take it, on the amendment reported from the committee as amended.

Mr. BERRY. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] as amended to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the situation, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] has been inserted as a substitute for all these amendments.

Mr. CULLOM, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Senators say "no." Let us consider for a moment. That amendment having been adopted, the question is upon placing that amendment in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. PERKINS. As perfected.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly, upon agreeing to the amendment as amended. So when Senators said "no" they were mistaken, I submit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan as amended.

Mr. HAWLEY. Which is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the matter, the Senator from Michigan reported an amendment from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and then himself offered an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. A substitute for it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, an amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute, and thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] moved to strike out all that had been inserted by way of amendment.

Mr. BERRY and Mr. FRYE. No, no.

Mr. HARRIS. Only a part of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only a few words.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; when I am mistaken of course I yield gracefully. Now I ask that the amendment be read as it stands, and that the Chair state upon what we are to vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me, I will try to make the history of it a little clear.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it. I only ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

To pay for subsistence and quarters of such honorably discharged non-resident Union soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war of the rebellion as may attend, as delegates or otherwise, the Twenty-sixth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to and disbursed by the citizens' executive committee of Washington having in charge such reception and entertainment, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, which has just been read, to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan, as reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, was the pending question, but the Senator, in his character of Senator, offered a substitute for it, and the Senate, by vote, has adopted the substitute. Now the question is upon the amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is just the position of the question that the Chair intended to state.

Mr. ALLISON. And that was just the position I endeavored to state, but it seems when I stated it it was entirely wrong.

Mr. SANDERS. Is an amendment in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is in order to offer an amendment to the original text.

Mr. SANDERS. I move to strike out the last eight words, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. ALLISON. That is the usual phrase.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the common phrase.

Mr. SANDERS. I propose that we shall appropriate $100,000 and quit.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, if it is worth while to argue that question at all, that being the usual and proper phrase, I make this suggestion to the Senator, that when the Secretary of War comes to make his regulations for the disbursement of this fund he will make them in such a manner that nothing shall be wasted, and the money will be given only to those who actually come and sleep and eat here. I think there will be something saved. If there should be $10,000 saved it will go back into the Treasury. There is nobody to give it to if it is not used for subsistence and quarters.

Mr. SANDERS. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for his suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana is not in order, as the Senate has already passed upon the first amendment as amended. The roll will be called upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired upon all questions with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] upon political questions, but by the votes on the other side I observe that this is not taken to be such, and I therefore vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I desire again to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. My colleague would vote "nay" if present and at liberty to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allen,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Allison,	Gray,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Brice,	Hale,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Proctor,	Warren,
Davis,	Higgins,	Quay,	Washington,
Dubois,	Hiscock,	Sanders,	Wilson,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Sawyer,	Wolcott,
Frye,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Gallinger,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Gibson, Md.	Mitchell,	Stewart,

NAYS—10.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Vest,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Mills,
Blackburn,	Irby,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—37.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Barbour,	Dawes,	Jones, Nev.	Squire,
Blodgett,	Dixon,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Butler,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Stockbridge,
Call,	Felton,	Morgan,	Vance,
Cameron,	George,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Carrisles,	Gibson, La.	Pasco,	White,
Casey,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,
Chandler,	Harris,	Platt,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Power,

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. On page 22 of the bill, line 23, after the word "hour," I move to insert:

And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to provide for lighting, by means of incandescent lamps instead of gas and oil lamps, any of the streets, roadways, and avenues outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; Provided, That the said incandescent lamps shall be of at least 25-candle power; that the price paid per lamp per year shall not exceed the existing contract price for lighting the oil lamps; and that the lamps shall each be burned not less than three thousand hours per annum; and the sum of $1,500 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that to be a unanimous report of the Committee on the District of Columbia. If so, I do not interpose the point of order, which otherwise I think I should make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On page 37, after line 11, I am authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move the insertion of the following words:

For bathing beach: For remodeling the bathing beach in the tidal reservoir into the form of pools, also the adjacent grounds, dressing-houses, etc., in accordance with designs and specifications, to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $10,000.

The proposed amendment meets with the unanimous approval of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I present it as coming from the Committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 43, line 14, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

For St. Joseph's Asylum, maintenance, $2,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not estimated for, and that it increases an appropriation in the bill without the report of any committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALL. I move to strike out all under the head "for charities" from line 9, on page 41, to line 10, on page 45.

My purpose is to endeavor to get this question of charities into a conference with the other House. The subject of provision for the meritorious poor is one that is deserving of grave consideration; it has become a question of great importance in the industrial and social economy of the country. The most deserving of the charities in the District of Columbia are entirely left out in the appropriations contained in the bill. Under the rules of the Senate no amendment can be moved to add any of these charities to those already in the bill unless an estimate has been made or upon the recommendation of a standing committee of the Senate, and the only manner in which we can obtain any consideration of the claim of charities which have been omitted is by striking out the entire provision and leaving it to be remodeled and brought before the attention of the Senate by a conference committee. I have here a communication—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would remind the Senator from Florida that his amendment is not in order as in Committee of the Whole. It will be in order when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment to offer to the text of the bill. On page 21, after line 18, I move to insert:

And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to open by condemnation and extend Thirty-seventh street between Back street and Tenth street road, so called, so soon as the ground necessary therefor shall have been donated for that purpose or money to pay for such ground shall have been provided.

The object of this amendment is to have a straight, broad, elegant street on what is now termed Thirty-seventh street. It is believed that the owners of the property through which that street would run would donate the right of way, or if not that the citizens in the vicinity thereof would raise the amount of money necessary to make the improvement.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I have any special objection to this amendment. The Committee on Appropriations thoroughly considered the very question now proposed by the Senator from Alabama. This Thirty-seventh street extended is a diagonal street running across the lots for 600 or 700 feet, entirely destroying the plat of ground over which the street would go. It passes through valuable property, I am told, and it will not be donated, but must be condemned, and it may cost $12,000 or $15,000. So the committee concluded that it was wiser and better to provide for the proper widening of High street down to Thirty-fifth street.

Mr. MORGAN. Now let us have both. Do not let us make fish of one and flesh of the other.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I do not seriously object to the amendment, but I want—

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The Chief Clerk read Mr. MORGAN's amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That runs right through lots some two hundred odd feet in length and practically destroys them. There are some houses there, and the amendment authorizes their condemnation.

Mr. MORGAN. So soon as—

Mr. COCKRELL. It is so guarded that there is to be no condemnation and liability on the part of the Government until the parties have paid in the money?

Mr. MORGAN. That is what it says.

Mr. COCKRELL. If so, it is all right.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I want to know whether we are going to make fish out of one and flesh out of another. I want to know whether that lot is to be staked off out there when these people are willing to have a street go through, and others say that whatever the condemnation money is they will raise it and pay it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right if that is the way of it.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the way of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to hear the amendment read again to see whether that is the language. We got caught at the last session in this way to the tune of $13,000. I want to know whether the same promise is made here, and I want the language to be plain and unmistakable.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will excuse me, I am not trying to catch him. I am not a fowler to spread my net in the face of such a bird. I do not try to catch such old game in a trap, or anything of the kind. I present a fair, straight proposition here, that Thirty-seventh street shall be extended if the land is donated or if private persons go there and pay the money to buy the right of way, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, none in the world if that is the case and nobody is deceived, as in the other case. The same kind of a promise and the same request was made before.

Mr. MORGAN. What case does the Senator refer to?

Mr. COCKRELL. I refer to the extension of Sixteenth street.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read Mr. MORGAN's amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know something about that street, and I am in favor of opening it; but it seems to me that the last clause of the amendment is rather indefinite. If the money must be provided it ought to be paid into the Treasury, or it ought to be placed in some bank, if the condemnation is made, as a matter of course.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know whom that lot does belong to. Somebody has got it there who has a pretty hard pull on the Senate. I should like to know who the owner is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know who the owner is, but I know the locality.

Mr. MORGAN. Somebody does.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of the proposition, but I think the money should be paid into the Treasury or paid into some bank.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose somebody on the floor of the Senate knows whom that property belongs to, and I wish he would rise and tell who the owner is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose that no Senator on this floor knows, unless it is the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will agree to the amendment if provision is made as to where the money shall be paid.

Mr. MORGAN. There are several guardians there, ad litem or pro hac or ad hoc, or whatever you please, who are taking care of the property. It is very nicely and closely guarded and provided for. I will add to the amendment "and paid to the District Commissioners."

Mr. ALLISON. The Treasury is the proper place to pay it. All the moneys of the District go into the Treasury.

Mr. MORGAN. Here are two members of the Committee on Appropriations differing about it—the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I do not know which way is right.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the situation of the Senator as respects the Appropriations Committee, I will waive any view I have on the subject and let it be paid wherever he thinks it ought to be. I think it ought to be paid into the Treasury, where everything else is paid.

Mr. MORGAN. I think so, too. I will put it that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the amendment:

And paid into the Treasury of the United States.

So as to read:

So soon as the ground necessary therefor shall have been donated for that purpose or money to pay for such ground shall have been provided and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On page 44, in line 22, I move to strike out before the word "dollars" the words "two thousand five hundred," and insert "five thousand." In making this motion, I beg permission to say that I have a personal knowledge of the history of this institution. I have known its work and its results for many years. In the year 1887 Congress gave it $5,000, what I propose to make it now; again in 1888; again in 1889; again in 1890; and I appeal to the chairman of the committee and to the other members of the committee and to the Senate to concur in this amendment that I propose. For reasons which I need not state here, but which I could not control, I was called away from the city whilst this bill was being considered by our Committee on Appropriations. Otherwise I am sure that the bill would have been reported as I now propose to amend it in this item.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator's amendment has not yet been read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My amendment is to strike out from line 22, on page 44, the words "two thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "five thousand dollars," the former old-time appropriation for the maintenance and aid of the St. Rose Industrial School, where there are now seventy-odd inmates, and this is all the assistance that has ever been given as the years have gone by. I trust that the committee will consent to the amendment, for I feel that I am myself at fault, or if not at fault that I am responsible though without fault, having been not able to be with the committee when the bill was being prepared.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, line 22, before the word "dollars," strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

For the St. Rose Industrial School, maintenance, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. On the roll call upon the appropriation for the entertainment of the Grand Army in the District I did not observe that he was absent and had failed to vote, and I voted "nay." I make this statement to show that I ought to have announced my pair.

Mr. HOAR. I was absent from the Senate, engaged in business pertaining to the Senate on a subcommittee while the vote was taken. I should have voted for the provision for entertaining the soldiers if I had been present.

Mr. CALL. As the Senator from Kentucky has just put in an amendment, I will move, after line 22, on page 44, to insert:

For the Little Sisters of the Poor, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to listen for a moment to me before he makes any point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withhold my point of order. Of course I have a right to make the point of order at any time.

Mr. CALL. I have a paper which has been sent to me from Mr. William F. Downey and Mr. S. H. Shock in behalf of this charity, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1892.

DEAR SIR: As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee will you kindly give the following your considerate attention:

To make many needed improvements at the Home for the Aged, the Little Sisters of the Poor have humbly asked for $25,000. In support of their appeal your sub-Appropriation Committee on the District of Columbia has an itemized statement of what is necessary, the estimate for which aggregates $30,500.

Since the establishment of the Home in 1871 private charity has given the Little Sisters more than eight times the total of your public aid. Yet every man and woman in their Home, in all these twenty years, was a public pauper, and, by reason of age and infirmity, far more justly entitled to Government care than half the inmates annually clothed and fed at the Washington Almshouse.

Strip their home and their work of all suspicion of sentiment and the indisputable fact confronts you that this very day the number of persons cared for by the Little Sisters—200 destitute, infirm whites and blacks, and every one over sixty years of age—is a greater number than the daily average of paupers of all classes fed and housed in your overcrowded Washington Almshouse, for which you annually appropriate $20,000.

As almoners of your gifts and those of the generous people of the District they respectfully submit, in support of their present appeal, that since 1871 the national appropriation, if averaged, would annually have been $2,730, a total of $55,000 for construction purposes only. The Federal gift was $42,500, and the District gift only $12,500.

What have the people of the District done? They have given nearly a square of ground, costing $50,000 in cash. They have added to the Home improvements, costing not less than $70,000, and making the institution capable of housing nearly three hundred persons. The building with its furniture to-day is valued at $125,000. They have given $5,000 to defray the expense of Christian burial to three hundred persons, a total of $125,000.

The annual care of the Sisters since 1871 has aggregated three thousand persons. The Almshouse reports show that to feed, clothe, and take care of the public paupers costs the Federal and District Treasury over $100 annually for each person. This service at the Home, therefore, had a cash value of more than $300,000 to the Government even on an Almshouse basis. A fair estimate then shows the money value of the people's gift at $425,000 and that of Congress only $55,000.

If two hundred persons now overcrowd the Almshouse, then to accommodate the number in the Home for the Aged, would have compelled the building of another public institution. This simply adds to the explicit showing that the people have saved the Government a sum, compared with which all that is now asked is but the merest fraction.

Perhaps these statements and arguments are unnecessary. The Little Sisters sincerely hope they are. May they not also hope that the magnitude of their humane work, and the generous coöperation of the citizens of Washington will plead with you more eloquently than even a cash value to the Treasury of such disinterested labor and charity at the nation's capital.

The exclusion of the Little Sisters from most of the public buildings has cut off fully $3,000 in cash from their annual revenue and added to their labor in begging for necessities of life. The improvements required will be helpful to the Sisters, by enlarging their field of charity, in utilizing the labor of the inmates, and make the Home capable of caring more economically for the poor, even to the fullest capacity of the institution.

It is hardly necessary to tell your committee that the Sisters will continue to relieve the Government of an annual expense of $20,000 for many years to come, and that not one dollar is wanted for food, clothing, or even a nominal salary for a single person.

A community that has cheerfully given the Sisters money, goods, provisions, and property, amounting to nearly half a million of dollars, will not diminish their interest if Congress, once in seven years, gives $25,000, that being the period of time since your last gift of $25,000.

We have had the seal of the "Home for the Aged" attached to this statement, as evidence of its approval by the incorporators who are the Little Sisters of the Poor, and in their behalf we respectfully submit it for your generous action.

[SEAL.]

WM. F. DOWNEY.
S. H. SHOCK.

HON. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

I desire to submit to the chairman of the committee that here is an application which will save the Government a great many thousand dollars. Over two hundred persons, paupers over the age of 60 years, destitute and infirm, are cared for by this charity, by these Little Sisters of the Poor, by daily begging alms from house to house. I submit that in all points of view, as a matter of public economy and as a matter of the encouragement of a most beautiful and beneficent charity, he ought not to object to this amendment being incorporated in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, no estimate having been made for the appropriation and the item not having been reported from any standing committee. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I ask leave to reserve all the amendments under the head of charities for a vote in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendment I offered yesterday about High street.

Mr. HARRIS. That amendment was not agreed to. The Senator will have to renew it in the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Florida reserves the amendments respecting charities. I understand that there are no other amendments to be reserved. Therefore, I ask that the amendments may be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole with the exception of the amendments reserved by the Senator from Florida.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CALL. Now, I move to strike out all under the head "For charities," as stated before, the whole chapter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. From page 41, line 9, strike out all down to and including line 10, on page 45.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to this motion for the purpose of enabling this whole subject to be brought to the Senate through the conference committee. I have read a paper here which exhibits the fact that this is a charity capable of accommodating three hundred persons, which has saved the Government $300,000 within the last twenty years, estimated upon the basis of the present expenditure for alms and for paupers. They have collected, as I have been informed, over $350,000 from private charity by begging daily from house to house in this city. The paupers who are there now who have been relieved (three hundred having been buried by this charity during its existence, saving all expense to the Government) are to be cared for, and they are aged people, over 60 years of age, infirm, and destitute, of all races and of both sexes. There is no more beautiful charity in the world.

There is no class of people, no order, no society that have labored more persistently than these Little Sisters of the Poor. At this day there are two hundred aged and infirm people over 60 years of age who are comfortably cared for by these people. All that they ask is a small appropriation to extend their buildings and assist them in their good work. Every one of the two hundred persons would cost the Government $100 annually to be cared for.

As it is impossible to get this matter before the consideration of the Senate in any other way I move to strike out the whole chapter on charities in order that it may come back from the committee of conference with this provision remodeled.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a few words respecting this matter of charities before it passes from the consideration of the Senate.

I agree to every word that has been uttered by the Senator from Florida. It so happens that I have been familiar with this charity known as the Little Sisters of the Poor for more than twenty years. I know of their methods, and how well and how carefully they take care of the aged and infirm in the District. They have done so for many years without respect to race or color. There is no more deserving charity than the house of the Little Sisters of the Poor. They have never, however, been placed within the list of those appropriated for, except that the Government has from time to time aided them in the construction of their buildings, to the extent, I think, of over $50,000.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that this appropriation is asked for for that purpose only.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. They desire now to enlarge their buildings. So with the charity the appropriation for which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] proposed to increase a moment ago, and so with other charities in this District; there are a number of them, perhaps ten to twelve; and if we add to or enlarge the items here we shall be obliged to place upon this bill nearly or quite $50,000 in addition to what is already appropriated in the bill for charities. There is a larger sum in the bill now for charities in the District of Columbia than has ever been in any bill for the District of Columbia at any previous session.

These charities are being enlarged from time to time and appropriations are being increased. There are direct appropriations of $184,000 in this bill, and if you take the amount of money that comes out of the Treasury of the United States, including one-half of the $184,000, there is now more than $300,000 expended by the Government of the United States from its own Treasury in the District of Columbia for charities. With all the disposition found in these bodies to gradually increase these charities, it seems to me that we ought not in this bill to propose any further appropriation than is found in it, at least as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Therefore, I trust Senators will not press these appropriations respecting charities which have hitherto never been appropriated for in the District of Columbia appropriation bill or in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has alluded to an amendment I offered here, in regard to which I suppose I am powerless, but I want to submit a remark about it.

I have never favored extravagant appropriations, but I hope the time will never come when I shall feel myself called upon to oppose an increase of appropriation of $1,500 to a lot of foundling boys, homeless, houseless, fatherless, and motherless, whom these noble women have taken out of the streets in order that they may not be pressed into the criminal classes of the country.

Here is this St. Joseph's Asylum, the only item in the bill about which I have concerned myself at all and in which I have not the slightest interest except that of the religion of humanity. I am a Protestant by education and belief; I have no religious affinities with the Catholic Church at all; but in my visitations to the market places of the city I have noticed one of these nuns standing upon each market day with poor little boys and with her basket, literally complying with the scriptural injunction, "Give us this day our daily bread."

For thirty-six years this noble charity has been in existence in this city. It has never received one dollar from the municipal government or from the Government of the United States—never one dollar in thirty-six years. They had during the last year one hundred and thirty-one orphans. They take them out of St. Ann's Foundling Asylum and they keep them until they are 7 or 8 years old, when they put them out to learn trades. They are relieving this Government of the care of these unfortunates, who would go to the jails and penitentiaries but for their action.

Mr. President, upon a mercantile and commercial basis alone they are entitled to this appropriation. They are saving human lives and souls. Besides that, they are preventing the criminal classes of the country from being swelled by these poor creatures, who would otherwise be cast into the streets with no friends, no homes, no families.

What I object to in this bill—and I have attempted to make it as good a bill as I could—are provisions such as the one just immediately preceding the one upon which the chairman of the committee raised this point of order:

For maintenance of the National Temperance Home, $2,000.

Now, who are the people who go to this National Temperance Home? They are grown men who have broken themselves by vicious habits, who have violated all the rules that should govern sensible and intelligent human beings.

Here is another item in the bill—I do not want anybody to suspect me of any political prejudice about it, for it is not true—here is $3,000 to be given to "the board of management of the Temporary Home for Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, District of Columbia." Who are these people? They are very gallant old soldiers, but they are men; they all have pensions; they are receiving the bounty of the Government; and if I had my choice between these old, broken-down drunkards and these pensioned soldiers and seamen, and these poor unfortunate foundling boys, I would give the money to the boys. I would try to save them and make good men, industrious men, and honest men out of them.

But here all these items go through unchallenged. Why? Because the Senator says they are estimated for, and the House put in $2,500.

Mr. President, this is an era of economy. There are 65,000,000 people in the United States, two and a half million in the State of Missouri, and I do not know what infinitesimal fraction would be charged to each one of these if this increase of $2,500 a year is given to these orphan boys. If I had a constituent that objected to my action here to-day, I would thank him never to vote for me again, and I would consider myself dishonored by the support of any such man.

Mr. CALL. I hope very much the Senate will adopt this motion and strike out these charities in order that we may have this revision. The Senator from Missouri has abundantly proved the necessity for it and these two provisions, one for the boys and the other for these old people over 60 years of age, two hundred of whom are already in this home, which has the capacity to accommodate three hundred with a little assistance from the Government, having collected $350,000 by personal solicitations in the last twenty-five years as against $50,000 which the Government has paid, thus having saved to the public Treasury by the estimate of the amount of $100 now paid for each public pauper, having saved the taxpayers of this country over $300,000, it seems to me it is in the interest of economy and of the taxpayers as well as of charity that this should be done.

I ask the Senator to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether there is any provision in the bill for the Little Sisters of the Poor?

Mr. CALL. None whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the best thing to be done is to adopt the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida. I think the appropriations for this line of charities, which must appeal to every Senator, every member of the other House, and every citizen of the District, are entirely insufficient.

There are a great multitude of charities in this city, some of which are of the very highest degree of merit, which are not provided for in this bill. Indeed, I think it has been the fashion of the Government to throw the poor, the sick, the feeble, and the diseased upon the charity of the people, rather than for the Government of the United States to do its share. I do not think the Government of the United States has ever done its share. I regard it as one of the most pleasant recollections of my life that I aided in founding the Providence Hospital, which has now grown to be a great and very valuable institution. It was founded upon an appropriation to pay for forty people without distinction of color, in the old times, when the color question was very rife. That charity was founded in that way.

If this whole clause should be stricken out, that would leave all these items open and the members of the committee of conference entirely at liberty to add others which are more meritorious. If the Senator wants to avoid the point of order, all he has to do is to move to strike out the whole paragraph, and that will leave the whole to go into the committee of conference. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CALL. That is my motion.

Mr. VEST. What paragraph does the Senator allude to?

Mr. FRYE. All the charity items.

Mr. SHERMAN. Beginning in line 9, on page 41, and going down to the appropriation for the Reform School for Girls, on page 44, line 6.

I think the committees of conference of the two Houses of Congress can probably settle the details much better than we can here, because if we should attempt to put on an amendment for any particular charity, other charities will be named which are equally meritorious, and it would be very difficult to settle the details, while if the whole is stricken out, we may be very certain that these here will be preserved and perhaps some others added afterwards.

Mr. HOAR. It strikes me that that is a pretty large discretion and authority to give to a committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not much danger of its being used on the side of liberality.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is this: There being a provision for Congressional grant to two or three designated objects of charity, designated corporations or institutions in the House bill, if the Senate strike them out, the committee of conference will have authority to add any number of such objects of public appropriations that they see fit. I desire to express my dissent from that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think it is rather a dangerous precedent to strike out the entire chapter relating to charities. I should be afraid that the other House might take us at our word and agree to strike out all of them, or most of them.

The truth is that a great many of these charities, some of them designated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and others, have grown up from year to year. We have added one or two charities in nearly every District appropriation bill for the last ten years. It may be true, as the Senator from Ohio says, that we do not do our full share here as respects these charities.

The Senator alluded to one of the pleasant incidents in his Congressional career of having been instrumental in having provided for the establishment of Providence Hospital. That is certainly one of the most beneficent charities in this District. The Government has paid, and is paying, $19,000 a year to that charity, and the government of the District of Columbia pays nothing to it. The appropriation for it is found in the sundry civil bill, and no part of that charity is paid for by the taxpayers of this District.

There is another beneficent charity in another portion of this city where the Government pays a total of $60,000 per annum, no portion of which is paid by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, known as the Freedman's Hospital, which is now one of the best hospitals in this city. So you may take the Garfield Hospital, so called. The Government of the United States pays from its Treasury $15,000 per annum for that charity, and no part of it is charged to the District of Columbia. There are other charities in this District which have never received one dollar either from the government of the District of Columbia or from the Government of the United States, which are most beneficent charities. Here is the St. Joseph's Asylum, suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. There stands side by side with it St. Vincent's Asylum, which has never received a dollar, and yet it is a school for girls, and those who manage that institution insist, and I think they insist with great force, that if we provide for St. Joseph's Asylum we ought also to provide for St. Vincent's, and I can see no rule to apply to one that will not equally apply to the other.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the Washington Asylum.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] calls my attention to the Washington Asylum, an asylum in this District, which has been performing charitable work here for more than fifty years, and now has within its walls two hundred or three hundred young children, and they take all who come. They have never received from either the District of Columbia or the United States a single dollar. This institution is sustained by the beneficence of the people of this District and elsewhere.

Mr. VEST. I said nothing about the Washington Asylum.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I am only speaking of the charities. If we go into enlarging in this matter we shall be obliged in equity to take care of all.

There is another charity in this District, known as the Associated Charities, which goes about these streets and picks up young girls and young boys day by day and hour by hour, and takes care of them as best they can, either in this District by assigning them to some one or the other of these charities or by providing them transportation to other portions of our country.

There is in this District a charity known as the Children's Aid Society, like the Associated Charities composed and comprised of the best people in this city, who go about from day to day picking up the waifs of this District and those who come here.

We can not put upon this bill all these charities without swelling it and enlarging it beyond what will be deemed reasonable when the bill comes to its final conclusion and solution. Therefore, it is, Mr. President, with every disposition to appropriate money for these charities—they are all useful, they are all performing a noble and splendid and beneficent work in this District—we must stop at some point. If we put on one, what answer shall we make to all those who have made the same request of us who do not find themselves provided for in this bill? It is for that reason that the Committee on Appropriations have not very much enlarged the charities in this bill; they have enlarged them somewhat, but they have placed on this bill no new charities.

We found the St. Joseph's Asylum in this bill for $500; we found another small charity, a new one, in this bill for $250. We did not disturb either of them, but we did not think it wise to enlarge the appropriations for them. This matter was fully and thoroughly discussed in the Committee on Appropriations, and I think this was the conclusion deliberately arrived at by the committee.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee one question, and that is, if he does not think that there might be danger of losing these charities when they go into conference if we strike them all out now?

Mr. ALLISON. So I suggested to Senators, that these charities then will come again under the supervision of the House of Representatives, if I may speak of that properly. They may be quite willing to strike out these provisions if we say we are not for charities at all, because that is what a vote striking out means. It means to say that this Senate is against all charities because it strikes out all those which have been inserted by the House, and the House may say "Very well, if the Senate is opposed to these charities we quite agree with them, and we will strike them all out."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think if the amendment of the Senator from Florida shall be agreed to, that it will defeat the very object he has in view.

The limit of the jurisdiction of a committee of conference upon a legislative enactment is upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. The House of Representatives sends to the Senate a bill containing sundry provisions for charities. The Senate has added other objects of appropriation and in some instances has increased the amount; but if the motion of the Senator from Florida should be agreed to, it strikes out all the original text as it came from the House and every amendment that the Senate has incorporated in that chapter, and the bill returns to the House simply with the original text of the House bill stricken out.

Then, the only question which it is legitimate for the committee of conference to consider is as to whether these provisions shall be reinstated as they came from the House or reinstated with diminished amounts, but as there is no disagreeing vote between the two Houses involving any larger amount of appropriation, I take it for granted the committee of conference could not exceed the amount in any instance fixed by the House, because the only disagreement would be as to whether or not that appropriation or some smaller appropriation should be made.

Mr. CULLOM. We would either get nothing or get back what we have in the bill now.

Mr. HARRIS. At least you jeopardize what you have in the bill now, and the danger is that you would get nothing but a smaller amount than the House originally appropriated.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know that anything I can say will be of importance to anyone except perhaps myself. I have nothing to say in regard to the parliamentary question raised by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] as to the effect of this motion. I have great respect for the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I have listened with interest to his statement in regard to the charities of this District. I am impressed, however, with this idea. This District has no other legislature than Congress; there is no other legislative body to look after their wants. Were we at home in our several Commonwealths, and it was demonstrated that there was a pressing want for a small sum of money upon a very important question to care for the morals and training of the rising generation, we should not pause to consider how many charities we had already established.

When the Senator from Iowa stated that we were appropriating some $300,000 for charities in this District, it sounded somewhat imposing; but if more is needed, then more is right. This Government can not afford to stop because it can not spare the money to do what is right for the welfare of its people, and if a line is to be drawn anywhere in regard to establishing charities in this District, let it be drawn at some other place than upon the children. After the statement made by the Senator from Missouri I should feel vastly uncomfortable unless some provision was made for these children.

I know something of the facts besides the statement of the Senator from Missouri, and I know that noble women have been giving their time, their substance, and their care on this subject to what properly belongs to bearded men, to the governing power of this country, to care for its own. I for one am not willing to shirk this question on a mere matter of $1,500 or $2,000, and on a question of order at that. As to the question of order, sir, it is always in order to care for the helpless and the poor; it is always in order to care for the children of the rising generation, to take them in out of the streets, to take them in out of temptation, out of the storms of vice and trouble that beset them on every hand. One hundred and thirty-one of these young souls, the Senator from Missouri has told us, are cared for now by private charity, and on a question of whether this Government shall step forward and take care of these helpless ones a question of order is interposed!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no question of order pending at the present moment.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am glad to know that. I was under the impression, Mr. President, that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]—and I certainly shall not criticize him with the slightest degree of censure—but I was under the impression that his question of order coming from the committee was still pending. I am glad to know that it is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa raised the point of order on an amendment previously offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], but has not raised any point of order on the amendment to strike out.

Mr. VEST. If the Chair please, the Senator from Iowa raised the point of order on my amendment in regard to the St. Joseph Asylum, and it was sustained. I want to say now that I never should have offered that amendment if I had not been of the impression that the committee would not raise the point of order against it. I went to the chairman of the committee—I know it was a misconception, that I misunderstood him and he probably misunderstood me—but I told him I knew the amendment was subject to the point of order, and if the committee insisted upon it, I would have nothing to do with it, for I was bound, and he told me he would simply state the facts and leave the question to the Senate. That is the reason I offered the amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was to a certain extent, Mr. President, correct in speaking of the point of order, though it is not now pending, having been disposed of, and against the amendment.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is entirely correct in speaking of these Little Sisters begging for the poor. They are all around us; they go from door to door soliciting charity. They are doing their duty. Sir, it is a grave question whether we are doing ours.

I repeat, if the line is to be drawn on charity, let it be drawn on some other kind of people than these. Let it be drawn upon the inebriates or those who are better able to care for themselves, or those who have had their chance in life and have thrown it away. Let it be drawn on them if somebody has to go to wreck. Let those who are rising in the world have their chance. We are responsible for them. We are not responsible for those who have passed through their career and are closing the day of their existence.

Therefore, Mr. President, I did not feel at ease until I had said this much in behalf of what I deemed to be just and right. A point of order on the part of the committee can prevail, I am aware of that, and we are talking, as it were, in vain, as long as questions of order are raised.

The Senator from Missouri offered a little amendment, I believe, of $2,000, an increase of $1,500, and we have been talking here $1,500 worth since it was offered. We should have made money for the Government if we had adopted it at once and let the children have the money that we are talking and caviling about. I say the same in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. There is no economy in this course of procedure, none in the immediate present, none in the long run, worse than none in the long run; for, as the Senator from Missouri has well said, charity expended as his amendment proposes to expend it is for the future welfare of society, for the safety of the home, for the suppression of vice, and the establishment of order and virtue.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations when the item in the bill was reached that was proposed to be amended by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], I felt very strongly inclined to the idea that that appropriation should be raised to $3,000, and I still feel, knowing something more about that charity than almost any other charity in the city, that if anything is done to increase the appropriation in this bill, that is as meritorious as any one can possibly be. When the subject was under discussion in committee, however, we found that there was a vast number of these charities that were not yet proposed to be placed in any legislative bill, and that if we began on that line it would result in a very large number of other appropriations which were sought for getting into the bill, because they stood largely upon the same platform.

Mr. VEST. This is in the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. This is in the bill, put in by the House, a small sum of $500 it is true, and which I understand those who are interested in the institution regard as a damage to the establishment rather than a benefit, because it may make the people who have been in the habit of supporting it heretofore believe that now as a little appropriation is made, it will not be necessary for them to give anything hereafter. But, I came to the conclusion, in view of the large appropriations we were making in the bill, increasing it over $700,000 above what the House had made it, that we ought to perhaps call a halt. I therefore felt that I would give up the desire I had that the St. Joseph's Asylum should get an increased appropriation. We might as well face the question if we are going to open the subject, and make up our minds to recognize every one of these charities which has been talked about here to-day, and which has sought to secure appropriations in this bill.

My judgment is that we have got more in the bill now than we shall be able to keep there, and that we had perhaps better hesitate before opening the doors further and allowing additional appropriations to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa, in charge of this bill, must realize that this is a very familiar subject. I doubt if any appropriation bill appropriating for the District of Columbia has been considered in the Senate but what there has been an effort on the part of members of the Senate to increase appropriations for specific charities, and I think it was this course, pursued for many years, that prompted Congress in 1890 to create a new office known as the superintendent of charities. This official, I understand, a very excellent man, qualified in every way for the performance of his functions, has been on duty since some time in the year 1890. I should like to ask whether these appropriations for charities are based upon any report as to the distribution made by him, and whether his views as expressed in a report constitute any guide to the Committee on Appropriations in dividing the sum that is to be appropriated in gross for this purpose? I see and have heard nothing of any action based upon that report, and I should like some information from the Senator upon that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations had the Commissioner of Charities before them two or three times respecting these charities. The Commissioner of Charities does not recommend any new charities to be placed on the subsidized list. He believes that these charities should have more direct Government supervision as respects admission to the list and as respects control over them. There is now pending, I understand, in the Committee on the District of Columbia, a bill looking to a more careful regulation of these charities. I understand that bill has received the approval of the Commissioners of the District.

If the Senator will allow me, while I am up I will say in respect to this officer that he made a fine impression upon those who had the pleasure of hearing him, as a painstaking, conscientious, intelligent officer, and thoroughly devoted to the work in which he is engaged.

Now, I want to say one word in response to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. MANDERSON. Before the Senator departs from that subject, if he will permit me to call his attention to the peculiar wording of this law, it would seem to me on looking at it as though we had thrown upon this officer a very important and at the same time a very onerous duty.

That for the purpose of securing a more equitable and efficient expenditure of the several sums appropriated "for charities" there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, some thoroughly experienced and otherwise suitable person, not a resident of the District of Columbia, to be designated superintendent of charities for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to formulate for the purposes of the expenditures for charities in said District such a system or plan of organized charities for said District as will by means of consolidation, combination, or other direction, in his judgment, best secure the objects contemplated by the several institutions and associations for which such appropriations are made.

Has there been anything in the direction of the performance of this particular duty which if properly performed would relieve Congress from very much of this detailed investigation as to the merits of particular charities?

Mr. ALLISON. The commissioner of charities, I think, took his office in April, 1891, not quite a year ago, and I have no doubt that he has faithfully devoted himself to the duties imposed upon him by the statute. He has formulated and prepared one bill, which is now, I think, before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he has other bills in preparation in connection with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. He made a most valuable report, but that report was made of course in October of last year and before he had full time to examine into these charities. I want to say, however, that in that report the commissioner commends favorably the management and control of every charity in this city without exception; he speaks of them as all and each one of them doing a charitable and beneficent service.

The Senator from Indiana criticises me somewhat because it becomes my duty as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, having in charge this bill, to make points of order upon amendments which are offered by individual Senators, the theory of our organization being here that it is wiser and better that amendments offered should have the consideration of committees rather than that they should be adopted without much consideration on this floor.

Now, I sympathize, as the Senator sympathizes, with the waifs who are found upon these streets; but the Senator must not forget that the Government, as respects boys, has provided for all these waifs at the expense of the government of the District of Columbia. That expense is provided for in this bill. So these boys who may have been or are unfortunate are already provided for in this bill if they choose to go where this bill provides they may go, namely, to the Reform School of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon, but he certainly does not intend to use that argument. Of the 95 boys now in the St. Joseph's Asylum 35 or 36 come from the Foundling Asylum.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not saying that the boys in St. Joseph's Asylum ought to go to the Reform School.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, I thank him for having made the suggestion, because it enables me to say that next to allowing them to go upon the street and from there to the penitentiaries and jails, I would put them in the Reform School, where they would meet boys already lost and hardened and so thoroughly vicious that they would contaminate by association any boy who is brought in contact with them. The very object of the women who are at the head of such institutions as the St. Joseph's Asylum is to prevent that very state of the case and to furnish them with the influences of family, of religion, and of home until they are self-sustaining and can resist temptation. If I had, and I repeat it, my choice between a jail and the Reform School, I should hesitate.

Mr. ALLISON. I might not disagree with the Senator from Missouri. He has stated the case strongly, but perhaps properly. Here are these Sisters of Charity devoting themselves to the training of such boys and such girls who are unfortunate as they can gather into their asylum, and keeping them there until they go out into the world and are prepared for its contests and its battles. They struggle there without compensation.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is it not true before one of these boys can be sent to the Reform School he has to be arrested and put in jail?

Mr. ALLISON. That is not true.

Mr. VOORHEES. And sentenced by the police court? In other words, the Reform School is a penal institution, and the boy goes there under a sentence.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not always the case. They are sent there either by the Secretary of the Interior or by a proper officer of this District.

But the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Missouri seem to think that I am hostile to what they propose. Here is this charity which the Senator from Missouri speaks of. It was organized here as a church charity thirty-six years ago, and its managers have never until this very year and month for a single moment thought of asking the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia to contribute to them.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is misinformed in regard to that entirely. These sisters have repeatedly considered the propriety of applying to Congress, and they have always been met with exactly the argument made by the chairman of the committee now, that Congress was giving $300,000 to charities and the amount could not be increased.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not like to be making these contests with my friend from Missouri; but the very argument used to the committee by Sister Euphrasia, who presented her case, and very properly and very modestly and very truthfully, I have no doubt, stated that it was because we were giving largely to other charities that she thought, and her society thought, that they were entitled to the same consideration. I believe it, and I have no doubt that I led her to believe that I would favor her charity, because she made an impression upon me. I will say to the Senator from Missouri; but when I discovered that there were a large circle of other charities equally meritorious, not only in the church to which she belongs, but elsewhere outside of it, all claiming that they had the same right to appropriations that those charities have which are mentioned in this bill—when we found that a large addition must be made to this bill, we had some regard for the general situation respecting it, and left them all off.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If I may interrupt the Senator—

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understood him to say that provision had been made by taxation upon the District for certain charities, which included boys, but that no provision had been made for like charities for girls. Now, is it not entirely competent for the Committee on Appropriations to require that certain sums of money shall be raised by the District to cover all these charities, and not confine them to one or to a half dozen, if more be needed, for I think I understand pretty correctly that the people of the city of Washington will be very glad to have their property taxed for all these worthy charities. Therefore it is that I see no way that a tax can be levied, except it is through some action by Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is now stating what the Committee on Appropriations provided in a bill they reported here two years ago, namely, that there ought to be a coordination of these charities, and that there ought to be a board of charities here. The first step was the provision made for a commissioner of charities in order that he might see what they are and what they are doing.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will bear with me a single moment further, I will simply add a word more.

The Senator knows full well, as far as regards private subscription to these charities, if it can be understood by the public that they are on a firm and substantial basis and that the government of the city recognizes the importance of them, it would be a very great encouragement to private subscribers to these charities; whereas if they are going along from day to day half dead and half alive, there is nobody who feels much encouragement, because he has no confidence in the result.

Mr. ALLISON. The very reverse of what the Senator states is true. Wherever the Government of the United States has made appropriations—there are exceptions, I agree—but where-ever the Government of the United States has made appropriations, as a rule all private contributions cease. Last year there was expended in this District for charitable purposes by the government of the District of Columbia and by the Government of the United States more than $300,000, and yet, so far as the private subscriptions are concerned to the subsidized charities, or the charities which receive aid from the Government, they were only a little over $32,000.

What we want to do, and what I think we ought to do here, is to have a board of charities of the best and most responsible citizens of this city, consisting of men and women, give them the charge of these charities, let us devote a certain portion of the revenues to these charities, and let them be distributed here by a responsible charitable organization of this District. As it is now, it is a scramble, first with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, each seeking to get as much as possible, and then a scramble in this Chamber and in the other for precedence on the appropriation bills.

I must say that I regret that the Senator from Missouri, and especially the Senator from Indiana, undertook to put me in the position of being hostile to these charities or any of them in the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have done nothing of the sort.

Mr. VOORHEES. And I wish to disclaim any purpose of that kind to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept the disclaimer.

Mr. VOORHEES. I make it with pleasure to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VEST. I made no such intimation; but I say to the Senator from Iowa frankly that I was misled in regard to one matter. When I went to him in regard to this amendment, I received the impression that this point of order was not to be made, and I so reported to these ladies who had come to me in regard to it. It is a misconception. That is all I have said about it.

Mr. VOORHEES. A single word more. I know the Senator from Iowa is acting under the force of a rule which prevails in this body and prevails in the committee and governs him as the representative of the committee, and that he is not acting from the very good heart that is in him when he is coerced by that rule.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I want to say a word to the Senator from Missouri. I did not mean to say or to be understood by the Senator that I would not make the point of order, although I have no doubt he so understood me. Mr. President, as respects this charity and this amendment which the Senator from Missouri offers which is on this bill, so far as I am concerned I do not make the point of order on him in view of what he has said.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. And I leave to the Senate to say whether or not, as respects to this particular charity, where the Senator from Missouri says that he was misled by observations that I made and that he misled others thereby, if he states that on this floor, I withdraw the point of order I made on the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Then I ask for a vote upon that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. VEST. The amendment is to increase the appropriation for the St. Joseph's Asylum $1,500, increasing it from $500 to $2,000.

I want to make a single remark.

The Senator from Iowa stated what is actually a potent argument for this proposed increase. He stated here that whenever the Government made an appropriation private charity generally ceased. That is so; because when application is made to an individual in such a case the reply is the Government is giving you so much money; go to the Government. To give these people $500, when their report shows that they actually consume in provisions $2,700, is simply to stop private charity and then give them an inadequate sum for maintenance. It would be better for them not to have anything than to give them $500.

I ask for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I want to correct a statement of the Senator from Missouri. To the charity I have proposed to have inserted here, the Little Sisters of the Poor, the Government has given $42,000, and they have collected from private charity $350,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, on page 43, it is proposed to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

For St. Joseph's Asylum, maintenance, $2,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist upon that amendment. I will say to him that the first paragraph, namely, that appropriating $16,000 for the relief of the poor, has been amended so that there is an opportunity of getting what he desires in conference, and if there is any power to do that, I think that can be done.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have been requested to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 8, on page 42.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, line 8, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the term of office of all of the members of the board of directors, except the Commissioner of the District of Columbia, the United States Senator, and the two members of the House of Representatives, shall expire on the 1st day of January in each year, and their successors shall be chosen on the second Monday in December of each year, one-third of which number shall be nominated and appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the other two-thirds elected by a majority of the directors then in office: Provided further, That one-third of the number of said directors oldest in service as such directors shall not be reelected nor be appointed by the Commissioners as aforesaid, nor shall they be eligible for such reelection or appointment for the period of two years next after the expiration of their term of office: Provided further, That the term of office of the Senator and Representatives in said board of directors shall continue as provided in the act of Congress of June 10, 1872, and the term of office of the Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall continue so long as he shall remain such Commissioner.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have no personal knowledge in regard to this matter, and I ask that the memorandum may be read which was sent to me to accompany the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not let it be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will only take a moment to read it.

Mr. ALLISON. I may want to make the point of order on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorandum presented by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Memorandum relating to the proposed amendment of the appropriation bill relating to the Columbia Hospital.

1. Under the charter and by-laws all the members of the board of directors except the Senator and two Representatives and the Commissioner of the District of Columbia hold their office for life: while the representatives of the Government, the Senator and Representatives and the Commissioner, hold only for a limited time.

2. The board of directors is not elected by the corporation. By the charter, the first twelve of the corporations were made directors, and they elect those to fill vacancies caused by death, resignation, or by the increase in the number.

3. By reason of this situation, and the fact that the Government's representatives are in a hopeless minority (4 to 14), and that these life members elect their own successors, the Government is a mere feeder, furnishing money to a strictly private corporation in the management of whose affairs and in the election of whose officers it has practically no voice.

4. During the recess of Congress the Government has no representation at all, because of absence of members of Congress, and from March 4 to December of every two years, by reason of the expiration of Congress, according to the rule adopted by the board, Congress has no membership, because its representatives are appointed only for the life of Congress, and a member, though reelected, is not regarded as a director, because the Congress from which he is appointed has expired.

5. The corporation is really a Government institution because it is supported not by contribution of these directors, but by appropriations by Congress and the profits derived from pay patients.

6. The only way to remedy this condition and give the Government a real control is by limiting the term of office of directors to one year and having a substantial number, one-third, appointed by the Government, by its representatives, the Commissioners, leaving the entire board to elect the balance of the members and thus secure a real representation by all concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the point?

Mr. ALLISON. That it is legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I intended to offer an amendment to this bill relating to the High Street Railway, or the railway from Georgetown to Tennallytown, but after conference with several members of the committee and other Senators I have concluded that it is better to leave that matter to the conference committee, who, I think, are now prepared to consider it, and to do justice to all concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. HALE it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Several SENATORS addressed the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. What is the business now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate

the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, I desire to take the floor on that bill, but I yield to any Senator who wishes to make any motion.

REMOVAL OF GARBAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Whereas there was appropriated by the last Congress the sum of $24,000 for the removal of garbage in the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1892; and

Whereas it is stated by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia in their last annual report now before Congress that said appropriation is already "practically exhausted," and an additional appropriation is asked for: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Committee of the Senate on the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to investigate the manner and methods by which said appropriation has been expended, and to report to the Senate at an early day the result of their investigations.

Also, that said committee is directed to report what changes have been made in the official management of the health department of the District of Columbia, and for what reasons; and if any unusual or unfair means have been used to accomplish such changes.

Also, if the present contractor for the transportation of garbage and the collection and transportation of dead animals in the District of Columbia is carrying out his contract according to the specifications thereof.

Also, if said contractor is an employé of the War Department, drawing a salary from the United States; and if so, why he is allowed to occupy such a double position.

Also, if said contractor has been awarded a five years' contract for the collection of garbage and dead animals in the District of Columbia; and if so, the amount of said contract; and if said contractor has been allowed to sublet said contract; and if so, to whom, and what consideration he received for the same.

BUILDING OF WAR SHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution:

Whereas it is alleged that the iron and steel shipbuilding plants along the Great Lakes of the Northwest exceed in combined facilities, in magnitude, and in capital the interests of all other shipbuilding plants of the country combined; and

Whereas it is further alleged that these great inland shipbuilding interests have been denied an opportunity to bid for the construction of torpedo boats and the smaller class of war ships which can be taken by the water route through the St. Lawrence to the sea: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether any bids for the construction of certain types of war ships have been received from any of said shipbuilding companies, and whether such bid or bids have been refused or rejected by his Department for any reason or reasons other than such as follow from the usual rule in accepting or rejecting bids for such class of work, and if so, the reasons therefor.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that there is any objection to that resolution; but I want to examine it. Let it lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

NAVAL FORCE ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the agreement entered into between the United States and Great Britain in the year 1817, covering the question of the naval force to be maintained by the two Governments on the great lakes of the United States is now held to be in force by the Department of State, and what, if any, action has been taken by our Government to revive or put in force the terms of said agreement, and if so, under what authority or action on the part of our Government such agreement has been held to be in force since the giving of the required formal notice by the President to Great Britain in December, 1861, of a desire on the part of the United States to annul said agreement at the expiration of the six months from the date of said formal notice, and of the ratification of said notice by the act of Congress of February 9, 1865.

Mr. HALE. Let that lie over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 418) to change the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6788) to establish supports of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and at Ashland, Wis., in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 5640) to increase the pension of Cassie A. Davis.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4534) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAREY. I ask to call up for present consideration Order of Business 448, being the bill (S. 577) for the relief of W. H. Ward. It is a short bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I want to know if the general agreement to go to the Calendar for two days after we disposed of the Indian appropriation bill is not now the order of the Senate and if the Calendar is not in order under that agreement?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that was the understanding reached some days ago.

Mr. CULLOM. I think, besides the unfinished business, there are several special orders pending.

Mr. HOAR. I was not aware that the consent was now in force. I hope the Senate will be willing to take up the bill to amend the court act, the discussion of which I think will be very short indeed.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the agreement was that after the disposition of the Indian appropriation bill we should go to the Calendar for two days under Rule VIII, and the agreement was made subject to the understanding that if the Committee on Appropriations desired to take up the District appropriation bill that bill should take the place of the consideration of the Calendar. I suppose a fair construction of the agreement would be that we should now go to the Calendar for two days. However, that is a matter for the Senate to decide.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not interpose.

Mr. DOLPH. I think if we do that we shall reach in two days' time all these bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that either now or on Monday next we shall carry out that agreement. It ought to be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill called for by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 577) for the relief of William H. Ward.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think Senators should call up special bills from the Calendar at this time. If we are to proceed with business, let us go to the Calendar regularly.

Mr. CULLOM. We want two whole days for the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand we want two whole days, and this is not the time now to go to passing bills out of their order.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill (S. 455) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 11, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 8, 1892.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 8, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INVESTIGATION OF LEASES, YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table a privileged resolution heretofore reported from the Committee on Rules, authorizing an investigation of certain leases in the Yellowstone National Park.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCRAE submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed and directed to examine and report, by bill or otherwise, as to the circumstances under which certain leases for parcels of grounds in the Yellowstone National Park were made on or about March 20, 1889, by the Secretary of the Interior to the Yellowstone Park Association, and also why the privilege given to said association in said leases to transport passengers into and through said park was afterwards rescinded and forfeited, and the same granted to one S. S. Huntley, together with all the facts concerning such transaction; that the committee make full inquiry into the manner of administering the affairs of said park, touching leases and privileges therein, and the management of said park generally by the Interior Department; that the committee, or any subcommittee it may designate to prosecute the inquiry and examination have power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer; and that the expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and the chairman of said committee, or of such subcommittee, if one be designated, is authorized to draw for the same on the Clerk of the House in sums not to exceed $300 at any one time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the previous question, Mr. Speaker. That will give fifteen minutes' debate on either side, if desired.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is an amendment authorized, striking out the words "and to employ a stenographer." This is in order that the official stenographers to committees of the House may be employed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I have forgotten whether a special committee was ordered by the House to make this investigation.

Mr. McMILLIN. Not a special committee. It simply authorizes one of the standing committees of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. What committee?

Mr. McMILLIN. The Committee on Public Lands.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. BLACKFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William M. Blackford against the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALLENTOWN, PA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 109) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Allentown, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEVENS, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. CAMINETTI, for the balance of the week, on account of a death in his family.

CASSIE A. DAVIS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5640) to increase the pension of Cassie A. Davis.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Cassie A. Davis, of Morrisville, Vt., widow of James P. Davis, of Company E, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, at the rate of $2 per month in addition to the pension now allowed to her; said sum of $2 per month to be paid to her during the life of her permanently helpless daughter, Mary T. Davis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIES. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5640) to grant an increase of pension of $2 per month to Cassie A. Davis on account of a permanently helpless child, Mary T. Davis, and submit the following report:

James P. Davis served from June 1, 1861, to March 4, 1866, when discharged as a second lieutenant; his widow is in receipt of a pension of $12 per month on account of his death. It appears from evidence on file in the Pension Bureau and with this committee that the daughter of this soldier, Mary T. Davis, about 20 years of age, is wholly dependent on others, has never spoken, and suffers from general paralysis, almost complete, so that she can walk but little and that only with a tottering gait.

This is evidently such a case as was contemplated by the act of June 27, 1890, so far as it relates to permanently helpless children, but as that act is construed to apply only to such children as were under the age of 16 years at the passage of the act, relief can not be obtained through the Pension Bureau.

Your committee therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

R. A. SPALDING.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2503) for the relief of R. A. Spalding, administrator of estate of Solomon Blue.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to R. A. Spalding, administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue, deceased, the sum of $15,000 for cattle taken and used by the Army of the United States, August, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The report had better be read.

Mr. BURROWS. That had better be inquired into a little.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. H. 2503) for the relief of R. A. Spalding, administrator of Solomon Blue, deceased, submit the following report:

This measure was considered by this committee in the Fifty-first Congress, and was reported upon favorably, which report is appended as a part of this report. Your committee concur in the conclusions stated in that report and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 2864, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3707) for the relief of the heirs of Solomon Blue, respectfully submit the following favorable report:

The evidence shows that Solomon Blue lived in Union County, Ky., during the war of the rebellion, and at all times was entirely loyal to the Government; that in August, 1864, Brig. Gen. E. A. Paine, of the Union Army, then commander of the Western District of Kentucky, seized and took from the possession of Solomon Blue, from his home in said Union County, 10 head of horses and 90 head of beef cattle, took them to Paducah, Ky., and turned them over to the proper departments of the Government, and that said property was taken and used for the benefit of the Government; that said claim has been examined by the Quartermaster-General and the horses have been paid for, but the claim for cattle was refused on the ground that it was not a proper charge against the Quartermaster's Department. The horses and cattle were taken at the same time, and the proof as to both is the same. The cattle have never been paid for.

Upon consideration of all the evidence in the case your committee believe that the sum of $6,050 is a fair compensation for them. One R. A. Spalding is administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: First, Amend the title so as to read "A bill for the relief of R. A. Spalding, administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue, deceased." Second, Strike out from and including the word "heirs" in line 4 of the bill to and including the words "horses and" in line 7 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof "R. A. Spalding, administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue, deceased, the sum of $6,050 for."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be some further explanation of the bill. The report is not very full, and I could not understand from the reading why it was this claim was not paid years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill has been reported favorably to the House several times. The property taken, as shown by the affidavits on file, including that of the Union general who took the property, was taken for the use of the Army, and that the claimant was loyal. There were 10 head of horses and 90 head of cattle taken at the same time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Taken for the use of the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Taken for the use of the Government. An application was made to the Quartermaster-General for pay for the property. The Quartermaster-General, on the proof, paid for the horses, but decided that the charge for the cattle was not a proper one against his department, and he refused to pay for them on that account. The evidence shows that the property was all taken at the same time. The claim as filed was for $15,000; but it has been amended, and reduced to $6,050. Of course at the time the cattle were taken that class of property was a great deal more valuable than it is now.

Mr. HOLMAN. What reason did the Quartermaster-General give for not allowing for the cattle while he allowed for the horses?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The reason he gave was that it belonged to a different Department, and was not a proper charge against his Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. It involves a charge against the Commissary Department, if taken for the use of the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That was the ground on which he decided. The property was all taken at the same time and all turned over at the same time to the Union Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was done with the cattle?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The evidence shows that the cattle were taken and used by the Union forces. They were beef cattle.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Was any application made to the proper Department for payment for the cattle?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I do not know that any application was made to any other Department than the Quartermaster-General's Department.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Why?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I do not know why. I only know that the claim was made to the Quartermaster-General's Department.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but I really think it should be considered in committee. I think, therefore, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Subsequently

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois said: Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan withdraws his objection to the bill I called up.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the cattle mentioned in this bill were taken at the same time that the horses were taken, and under the same circumstances, and that there is no question about the merit of the claim. I therefore withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the amendment reducing the amount to $6,050 has not been submitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I ask that the two amendments be considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out from and including the word "heirs" in line 4 of the bill to and including the word "horses and" in line 7 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof "R. A. Spalding, administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue, deceased, the sum of $6,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended, so as to read: "A bill for the relief of R. A. Spalding, administrator of the estate of Solomon Blue, deceased."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 69) authorizing the use of the martello tower on Tybee Island, Georgia, for a signal tower.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 114) making an appropriation for the benefit of the estate of William Moss, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2351) granting a pension to John B. Meigs.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 418) to change the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1892, the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri shall begin and be held as follows:

At Kansas City, on the fourth Monday in April and the first Monday in November annually.

At St. Joseph, on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September annually.

At Springfield, on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in October annually.

At Jefferson City, on the third Monday in March and the third Monday in October annually.

Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TARSNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PORTS OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY, SUPERIOR AND ASHLAND, WIS.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6788) to establish supports of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and at Ashland, Wis., in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and are hereby, established two supports of entry and delivery in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin, namely, one at Superior, Wis., and one at Ashland, Wis., and that the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act approved June 10, 1889, governing the transportation of merchandise without appraisement, be, and are hereby, extended to each of said supports of Superior and Ashland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this measure is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HAUGEN. It has been, and the amendments are made on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know whether the bill increases either the salaries or the number of officers?

Mr. HAUGEN. It does not. The officers are already provided for these new places.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no additional expense attached to it?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is not.

Mr. McMILLIN. None for rents for buildings to be used by officers, etc.?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not that I know of. There are officers now at these places, and there is necessarily now some expense to the Government for those purposes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this make any increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are certain sections referred to the provisions of which are not stated, and I do not know what they are, but from the statement of the gentleman I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out after the word "entry" the words "and delivery."

In line 6 strike out all after the word "Wisconsin" to the end of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair recognizes the gentleman for that purpose, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] desires to make a correction in reference to a pair.

CORRECTION.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the House when the vote on the free-wool bill was taken. I was paired with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEPHENSON], but I find, upon examining the RECORD, that he is recorded as voting against the bill, and stating that he had been paired with me, but understood that the pair had expired the night before, and therefore voted.

I have had a conversation with the gentleman from Michigan this morning, and he has said to me very frankly that he was mistaken about the matter, and that what he had intended to say was that if he had not been paired with me he would have voted no. He evidently could not have been aware that he had been recorded as voting, and he so states now. I was in fact paired with the gentleman from Michigan, as he has acknowledged this morning, and if I had been present and not paired I should have voted for the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONG. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NATIONAL-BANK NOTES LOST OR STOLEN.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6183) to amend the national-bank act in providing for the redemption of national-bank notes stolen from or lost by banks of issue; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILITARY RESERVATION, OKLAHOMA CITY.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill 523, a bill (H. R. 8004) donating the military reservation at Oklahoma City, in Oklahoma Territory, to said city for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes; which was read twice, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 523) was laid on the table.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, LITTLE ROCK.

Mr. MITCHELL also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. 3738) to construct a road from Little Rock, Ark., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE CANALS.

Mr. BERGEN, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 5175) for sharing with the several States the expense of State canals, providing free transportation to interstate and foreign commerce, a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to the House, on or before January 1, 1893, the length of canal mileage in the several States respectively owning canals upon which interstate commerce is borne free of tolls, the annual cost of maintaining the same, and the amount of foreign and interstate freights, and of the local or State freights transported upon each thereof; and also like information in regard to all other canals within the United States.

The resolution was referred to the House Calendar, and the original bill (H. R. 5175) was laid on the table.

SHIP CANAL FROM THE LAKES TO THE HUDSON.

Mr. BENTLEY, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 283) for ascertaining the feasibility and probable cost of constructing a ship canal from the Great Lakes to the navigable waters of the Hudson River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. BENTLEY, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that 2,500 copies of the report upon the above bill (H. R. 283) be printed, 500 copies for the use of the committee and 2,000 for the use of the House.

MADISON AND Y STREETS, BURLEITH.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. 6658) to vacate Madison street and extend Y street, in Burleigh, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill with the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4534) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, before making the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar, I wish to submit a proposition with reference to the Sibley bill, as I think we can probably get it disposed of by agreement. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief, etc., of the heirs and personal representatives of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley, that the previous question be ordered on the amendments proposed in the Committee of the Whole, and on the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and that a yea-and-nay vote be had in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. ATKINSON. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that that is the result of an agreement. I should like to know who are the parties to the agreement.

Mr. ENLOE. I did not say that. I said I thought that this proposition might result in an agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRETZ. I object.

Mr. BYNUM. I trust that my friend will withhold his objection until I can make a short statement.

Mr. BRETZ. I withdraw the objection temporarily, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that while, of course, I can make no agreement for anybody, my opposition to the bill in its present shape being simply that of an individual member of the House, not even a member of the committee, yet so far as I am personally concerned I would be willing that the amendment should be considered as adopted by the committee, that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that a final vote be taken on the amendment in the House. Of course I speak for myself, and not for anybody else.

Mr. TUCKER. Is that the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BYNUM. No. His proposition is that the amendment be recommended to the House by the committee, and that the previous question be ordered on the amendment as on the bill. I would not like to agree to that, because that would give the friends of the bill the right to fight the amendment in the House.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BRETZ. I renew my objection, Mr. Speaker.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TURNER. And I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that if that motion should not prevail, I shall ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to consider the tariff bill in relation to cotton-ties.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that we might substitute a day next week for to-day, giving the same privileges that the Private Calendar has now—

Mr. BURROWS. Is this debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be, recently, that there is no proposition in order pending this motion.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects, of course that ends the matter.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman does not object, but is amazed that the Chair does not call the gentleman from Tennessee to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will manage its own business in that regard. If the gentleman objects—

Mr. BURROWS. If the Chair does not see fit to conform to its own ruling the other day the gentleman from Michigan will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan can have no controversy with the Chair. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, which the Chair understands to be equivalent to an objection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 78.

Mr. ENLOE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I think it will save time perhaps to have the yeas and nays at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 104, not voting 132: as follows:

 Mr. GANTZ with Mr. WRIGHT, on this vote.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. AMERMAN, is confined to his room by illness, and I ask that he have leave of absence.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I am paired, Mr. Speaker, with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] on political questions only. This not being a political question, I have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. ANDREW, is ill, and I ask that he be excused for this day.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

FREE COTTON TIES AND BAGGING.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pending revenue bill; and pending that motion I desire to give notice that we expect to finish the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole this afternoon.

The motion of Mr. TURNER was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH] had the floor when the committee rose on yesterday and is now recognized.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, the currents of air in this Hall yesterday have, I find, very much impaired my voice, and I shall ask the kind indulgence and attention of my colleagues to supply any deficiency in my utterances.

I oppose this bill, and I am somewhat in the position of the gentleman from Ohio who spoke yesterday [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], a gentleman somewhat younger than myself, he being by the record eleven years my junior, who said, that he was not talking much on cotton-ties. I am not going to talk on cotton-ties at all. The objection I have to the bill lies in the fact that it places jute bagging upon the free list; and I intend to show, if possible, that such a measure is in violation of those principles of adjusting a tariff upon which I was elected, which have been for years part of the policy of the Democratic party—against the tariff plank in the platform of 1888—unwise, unjust, and calculated to do injury both to the cotton-planters of the South and the millers of the Northwest, who are interested in this question.

In order to prevent any gentleman from making a rash statement which he might be obliged to retract, I will state that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in any jute-bagging manufactory or in anything in which bagging machinery is involved; that in my district we do not make a yard of jute bagging; and if we have ever made any jute-bagging machinery I am entirely ignorant of the fact. My opposition to this measure lies on the points I have already given, and because as an independent member of this House I take what action I think best for the public good.

If gentlemen will give me their ear I will state very briefly my views upon the adjustment of duties on imports, commonly called the tariff. There is no government that does not require money. A private corporation has its capital, and if that fails it falls to assessments upon stockholders. In a public corporation, a sovereign political community, whether it be a state or an aggregation, league, or union of states, its capital is the wealth of the people, and upon that they draw in the shape of assessments called taxes.

If we governed people according to perfect and just rules—that is, if the people were capable of such government—it would unquestionably be best to adopt the view of the philosophers who tell us that the perfect way is to open the whole channels of trade, to abolish custom-houses, and to rely for public revenue upon a direct tax assessed upon the individual, according to the protection which he or his property receives from the Government. But while I admire the writings of Bastiat and others on this subject, while I look upon their works as something pleasant to read, yet I know, and every member of this House in his heart knows, that free trade between the peoples and a direct tax in this country are impracticable.

The statesman, if he be in truth a statesman, governs men by their habits and prejudices, and even takes into account their passions and frailties. We can not make impracticable laws for an impossible community. There is no government in the world that has free trade. I heard gentlemen yesterday on the other side of the House talk of "free-trade England." I fancy the British lion when he hears one of his whelps calling England a "free-trade country," must curl his lip, twinkle his eye, and tap the floor with his tail in silent enjoyment. [Laughter.]

England raised last year, as you will find by referring to the Almanach de Gotha, which you will find in the Library, a slight fraction less than $100,000,000 by a tariff upon leading articles—a revenue tariff strictly. That was one-eighth of her entire receipts; one-fifth of her ordinary expenses. France, which calls herself a protective country, raised by tariff taxation 378,000,000 francs out of total receipts of three milliard one hundred and sixty-six million francs. One-eighth again. Mark it, the free-trade country and the tariff country raised the same proportion of their revenue out of duties on imports.

You can not have in this country such a thing as free trade and direct tax. Our municipal and State governments impose direct taxes. You gentlemen all know, especially those of you who are now looking after your "fences," you know very well that the sovereign people will not stand much addition to the direct tax. When a municipality is imposing $2 on the hundred upon property, if the party in power raise the tax 5 cents it is apt to go out at the next election. The people would rather see—well, that respectable gentleman whom we name with reverence, because we do not know what may happen to us—than they would the taxgatherer. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not care how economical you may be, you may have a "billion-dollar Congress" or a skinflint Congress, but you will have to collect about $450,000,000 a year. Now, recollect that the great mass of the taxpayers who pay this money in their sweat and toil—the masses—do not handle the money to pay the taxes. There are other men who disburse the bills and recoup themselves from the toll of the people. If you will calculate carefully you will find that there are not more than three millions of people in the United States who foot the tax bills. Now, if you should add to your direct taxation an average of $150 a year to each of those gentlemen's tax bills, what a howl you would have! And you can not collect such Federal taxation at the point of the bayonet; and you know it, gentlemen on both sides.

We have then to resort to that indirect taxation which the people bear quietly, because every government endeavors to get that mode of taxation which will make the people least discontented and by which it can collect the money with least trouble. We resort therefore to indirect and costly taxation, and we have to fall back upon an excise or upon duties upon imports. Now, the excise tax we submitted to during the war; but no one likes it, and it has to go down sooner or later. We have to fall back, then, for a revenue, upon our importations and the taxes we impose upon them, a tax which falls on the man who pays the last dollar and not the first.

Now, there are two or three modes of grading this tariff or scale of duties. One is the protective system, as it is called, in which they tell you that taxes are imposed to protect American industry; that is, to subsidize certain favored interests. Because it is a notorious fact that no matter how high your duties are, no matter how costly you make the product thereby, the mass of the people, those who work, do not receive any better wages after the imposition of high duties than they did before; and you will notice in the history of this country that after the enactment of every high tariff you find strikes continually around you because wages have been lowered.

It is a protection, then, to certain interests, and there is a certain ground in its favor, because they tell you, and they tell you truly, that following high duties very frequently you have a reduction in the cost of manufactured articles, and from that they insist that this reduction was caused by the high duties; but there is the mistake. The deduction does not follow from the premises. I recollect in 1846, when the tariff act of Mr. Walker was passed, I met an iron manufacturer in Pennsylvania, a man who had several furnaces and forges, and I said to him:

"Well, you are ruined now, I suppose, by this change in the duties on iron?"

He said, "Oh, no; we can stand it. We trim our sails accordingly."

I said, "Don't you want high duties on iron?"

He said, "No."

"Why not? Don't you make money?"

"Well, there are two or three reasons, sir, why I do not like an excessive duty upon iron. In the first place, iron enters into all industries, and if we have very high duties we have a combination against us of all other industries; and after we have graded our business according to those duties and employed our capital they may remove the duties and we go down in ruin. But there is another reason and a stronger one why I do not like a high duty, and that is this: That when any interest is thoroughly protected, as they say, by a high duty, everyone supposes the parties engaged in it are making money very fast. Unemployed capital rushes in. Then you have competition, overproduction, and reduction of prices and the ruin of the manufacturer, which involves the ruin of thousands of operatives."

"That is the reason," he said, "why I do not want an excessive duty. Give me a duty that will stand for some time and I can make money; I can meet it."

Now you will find frequently competition does lower prices, and a protective tariff has that amount of good in its favor, but this does not compensate for its injustice. Sometimes an industry fostered in that way will lower prices, as in this very industry about which I speak to-day. I have in my hand a list which I prepared with great care, and which I would ask the Clerk to read. One is the prices of jute bagging, and I take it now without looking at the other points, because I want to show you what competition does. I will show you the prices of jute bagging from 1866 to 1870, and the prices from then to 1890 and 1891, and I hope gentlemen will pay attention to it. It is short.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following are prices of bagging from 1866 to 1892:
GUNNY CLOTH.

September 15—	Grade.	Per yard.
IMPORTED.
1866	Standard weight	33 to 36
1867	do	24 to 24
1868	do	21 to 22
1869	do	23 to 23
1870	do	31 to 31

Mr. ENGLISH. Now, Mr. Speaker, you will see how competition among the manufacturers on jute-bagging reduced the price. The price has now risen. I will attend to that presently.

The next mode of raising revenue by a tariff was what was known as a tariff for revenue only. That is the English tariff. They select the fewest articles possible on which they lay taxes—leading articles as they are called—among the rest coffee. These gentlemen from the South and West who are supporting this bill, and who talk continually of a revenue tariff, and a tariff for revenue only, I want to ask them what chance they would have of gracing this Hall again with their presence if they voted for a tax on coffee here. They know that a revenue tariff solely is impracticable in this country for any length of time.

We had it during the war, coupled with subsidies to favored interests, a sort of amalgamation of protective and revenue tariff; but that was a necessity which made them tax everything, even a tax on raw materials, and yet we have gentlemen who want a tariff for revenue only, taxing articles that are not manufactured in this country, that are the materials of our own industries. They do it probably under the delusive idea that is felt on the other side in regard to tin plate, that there will be begotten in time an infant industry to nurse. There are two articles in my district that pay a heavy duty of which we do not make one yard in this country. You gentlemen who adorn yourselves with plug hats remember the fine feeling of the silk outside. That is called hatters' silk plush. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], I think it was, spoke of the fine plushes we make in this country.

Why we do make some fine furniture plushes, but we do not make a yard of hatters' silk plush, nor have we been able to make it, because we have not been able to secure the dye, and the American hatters' plush when on the hat has the disagreeable habit of getting brown; and brown hats are not so fashionable as black hats. There was in the Mills bill a duty of 30 or 35 per cent on hatters' plush, and about the same now; and yet we have twenty or thirty years been trying to nurse the infant industries, but it has never been born. You know the lining of your hat is apparently satin, but it is an article called cotton-black satin.

Our manufacturers will not make it. It does not pay them. Every bit of it is imported here, and therefore by the present tariff there is a tax on that of 60 per cent. So that you pay a dollar to a dollar and a half more for your hat in order to benefit some industry, not even born, not conceived, not begotten. [Applause.]

Now, a revenue tariff, a tax on raw materials of goods, when there is another mode of adjusting a tariff, and that is the true Democratic doctrine, that was put forth by James K. Polk; and I remember it well, for I fought for that tariff, and was a tariff reformer at that time, as I have been ever since; and that resulted in the famous tariff of Mr. Walker, that of 1846, which was adjusted upon right principles; and while some of the details would not suit us now, the principles are as sound as ever.

That tariff lasted until 1857, when they began tinkering with the tariff just at a time of financial disaster. There comes upon this country in the course of every twenty years financial disaster and disturbances; the same as that which came in 1815, a period of expansion, and then in 1817; that came in 1835, followed by the wildcat enterprises of 1836, then the depression of 1837; the same thing in 1855, terminating in that of 1857; and in 1875 and in 1877 we had a pretty hard pinch of it. At that time they had this tariff, and then the necessities of the war made them have the Morrill tariff. It was not protective, except where some favored interests came in and got their subsidy.

The true mode, then, in my judgment, of creating a tariff of duties upon imports is, first, with a view to revenue, but in doing that to afford as much incidental protection to any struggling industry as you can give without heavy subsidies that unduly tax the consumer. There are two modes of that incidental protection, and the main one is free raw material from all duty; and when I say raw material I mean not only that which is not produced in this country, but that which is produced here in insufficient quantities, as in the case of wool, or which is produced here at a disadvantage. But note, in your wool bill you have incidentally protected the woolen manufacturers, and thus indorsed my position.

That is one of the heaviest protections, incidentally, that any industry can get. I will give you an object lesson from my own district. The patent leather and enameled leather industry first came there through the genius of Seth Boyden. It has remained there, and to-day we make more of that product than all the rest of the United States combined. In the McKinley tariff, for the benefit of some old gentlewoman who had lost her cow, they proposed putting a tax upon hides. Down here came Mr. George Halsey and Mr. Sullivan, and other gentlemen engaged in the leather trade, gentlemen of the Republican persuasion [laughter]; they came down here and raised a howl and the duty was taken off. It was a very good thing for Newark and for the people of the country.

What has been and what is the result? Instead of being confined to the home market, obliged to hedge in our labor and confine our product to the demand of this country, the employers there keep their men busy all the time because they know that any surplus product which they may have they can sell abroad. We export those products to the amount of five or six millions annually. The patent and enameled leather of Newark not only competes with the foreign product in the neutral market, but we have orders from France, Germany, and England. [Applause.] That is an object lesson which I think gentlemen should heed.

There is another point, too, in the adjustment of the tariff. We have got to look somewhat to the cost of labor.

When gentlemen tell me that the labor of England, Belgium, and France can interfere with us, I laugh. We can compete with those countries at any time if we have free raw materials. The difference in wages does not amount to so much. The workman there is paid very nearly as much in proportion to his cost of living and his habits as our workman is. Our workmen not only have as much skill, to put it mildly, as those of other countries, but they are notorious for being faithful workers; they never scant their work; they do not idle.

One American workman is worth in that respect nearly two of the ordinary workmen abroad, and the foreign workman coming here gets in a little while the shop habit and works like the American. That is why we are not afraid of foreign labor when it is near our price. But in regard to this product now under consideration, jute bagging, the case is different. In Calcutta, where there are thirty-two jute mills located almost in the jute fields, with the best British machinery, the maximum cost of the cooly labor which is trained to work that machinery is 14 cents a day, while the minimum wages in our mills is $1.25 a day.

That is a competition which we can not possibly stand. Now, here is the platform of the Democratic party in 1888 in relation to this matter of labor. I ask the Clerk to read the extract from it which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Our established domestic industries and enterprises should not and need not be endangered by the reduction and correction of the burdens of taxation. On the contrary, a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurances of an extended market and steady and continuous operation.

Mr. STOCKDALE. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. ENGLISH. Yes, sir.

Mr. STOCKDALE. How many people are engaged in the jute-bagging manufacture in this country?

Mr. ENGLISH. It is impossible for me to say. There are sixteen manufactories in the United States, nine in the South and seven in the North. They employ a capital of over $27,000,000. I can not tell you how many people are employed in the industry. I have never inquired about that because, as I have said, I am not interested in any bagging factory. I am opposing the removal of this duty on general principles. I have not thought it necessary to inquire how many individuals are employed in the industry here, nor do I care whether it is one or a hundred or a thousand, for I am looking at the principle and not at the number of men or the amount of money involved.

Mr. RAINES. In this one item, then, the gentleman does not believe in buying where you can buy cheapest?

Mr. ENGLISH. You can buy this cheapest here. In 1866 you had an inferior article of jute cloth, called gunny cloth, and you paid for it 35 cents a yard. That was the foreign cloth imported. It was not until 1870, when they began to manufacture, or threatened to manufacture here, that it fell to 12 cents, and it never fell to 6 cents a yard, the price at which it was put in the market in St. Louis last year, until the manufacture was established here. But that was a handicap, not a subsidy. When you go to a horse race—I have never been to one, but I presume some of the gentlemen present have attended them [laughter]—when you go to a horse race you find that they sometimes have what is called a handicap race. As I understand it, certain new colts that have not raced before are brought out, and the judges decide to put weight on them so as to equalize the chances, but they never put enough on the back of any one to break it. [Laughter and applause.] They handicap them to equalize the chances, and so we should do under a revenue tariff.

Mr. STOCKDALE. There are not over 10,000 people engaged in the manufacture of jute bagging, are there?

Mr. ENGLISH. I do not know, and therefore I do not attempt to answer the gentleman on that point.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And there are 6,000,000 engaged in the cotton industry.

Mr. ENGLISH. Very good, wait awhile—

Mr. STOCKDALE. And you would tax the 6,000,000 in the interest of the 10,000?

Mr. ENGLISH. Wait, sir; I am talking in the interest of the cotton-planter.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I think we had better have some one else do that.

Mr. ENGLISH. That may be your opinion, sir, but I am a member of this House and I have a right to exercise my privilege as such.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I am not attempting to curtail the gentleman's privilege at all.

Mr. ENGLISH. You are endeavoring to interrupt me, which is not a very mannerly proceeding. I will not discuss anything with you. Any proper question which you may choose to put I will try to answer, but I will not enter into a discussion with you.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, I ask you is it fair to tax the 6,000,000 for the benefit of the 10,000?

Mr. ENGLISH. I don't propose to do it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, let us see why you don't.

Mr. ENGLISH. If you will allow me to get to it, sir; but you have a very bad habit of interrupting. [Laughter.] I never interrupt any gentleman in this House, because there are certain rules of conduct which bind me and which I never infringe.

Mr. STOCKDALE. They ought to be observed in speeches as well as in asking questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH] yield for an interruption?

Mr. ENGLISH. I would have no objection; but is this interruption to be taken out of my time? Is that the design?

Now, I wish to say this: You will find it was only at the very last moment, when the manufacture was begun in this country, that the price of this foreign and inferior cloth lowered; and now you have it down as low as 6½ cents a yard.

Now, there are two points in the report of the committee to which I wish to call attention: One is that the price has risen recently, and that this is the result of a combination. A gentleman goes to his tailor and says, "Make me a coat of $6 broadcloth." If the tailor be not one of the "importing tailors"—if he be a man who just wants to make an honest dollar—he will say, "Well, it is worth $36." The man gets his coat for $36. Again he goes to his tailor, and meanwhile that same broadcloth has risen to $10 a yard. The tailor charges him $45 because of the $9 difference in the material. That does not imply any combination among the tailors. It is a matter of business for the tailor to recoup himself.

Now, the McKinley bill did this: It took the duty off raw jute and lowered the duty upon the manufactured article, just what we have done, and properly, in the wool bill, which is a revenue tariff with incidental protection varying from 25 to 40 per cent. There was that much of sense in the McKinley bill. Now, when you take these raw materials and free them, you sometimes have to meet two contingencies, or one of the two. If the article be produced in one country only, any combination there may raise the price; if it be produced in several, that can not so well be done; but the Government, as in the case of coffee, may impose an export duty and thus defeat your benevolent intentions.

Now, if you will look at the report of the Bureau of Statistics you will find that there were imported into the port of New York in the month of January last 1,834 tons of jute butts, at a declared home value of 79,787. The value the year before was about thirty-six thousand and some odd dollars. The jute trust at Calcutta—one of the most powerful combinations in the world—had raised the price, and instead of having the jute laid down in New York at 2 cents a pound it was laid down, taking the long journey, the home price, the handling, and the commission, at 3½ cents a pound. As a matter of course the maker of jute bagging can not put two pounds of that to the yard at a cost of 7 cents and then sell it for 6½. It required nothing more than the laws of trade to account for that—not a phantom of a combination, which seems to have entered the mind of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], or whoever drew up this report.

Then there is another thing which is extremely misleading and which is stated in the report; and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], who made a very clever campaign speech the other day, to which I listened with great delight, spoke also, as does the report, of the "simple machinery" of the jute mill. Why, sir, the jute mill is in appearance something between a silk mill and a cotton mill; but it requires much stronger machinery to tear the jute to pieces and render it textile than it does for silk or cotton. "Simple machinery!" Well, I recollect once I heard a little poem; and I do not want to invade the province of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] by quoting Shakespeare. I will take a bard much less known to give you an idea how this notion of simplicity arises in the minds of men in regard to machinery. Fifty years ago there was a poet and improvisator by the name of Rice, who sang a song, and jumped it, called Jim Crow. He improvised his verses; and on one occasion he was asked in public to give a description of the simple machinery of a steamboat. I shall never forget his sublime lines, that were imprinted on my memory and have never passed away. He said:

Fus you see a big ting that's gwine up and down,
Den you see another ting gwine round and round,
Den you see a long ting jes like a pair of tongs,
And it shoves agin de other tings and shoves the boat along.

That is the idea that these gentlemen apparently have of the "simple machinery" of jute manufacture. Possibly they think the hand loom and ordinary spinning-wheel will turn out, scattered among the plantations, the 55,000,000 yards that are consumed every year in this country. Now, I asked an expert to draw up an accurate estimate of the cost of a very small mill. I said I wanted him to give me an estimate of something very simple; and he gave me the cost of the least mill that could profitably be maintained. I do not know whether my eyes will enable me to read it—oh, yes; I can read it. Here it is:

I will give you the items of machinery required for such a mill, with their weight and cost:

Machines.	Cost.	Weight.
		Pounds.
One opener.....	$750	5,000
One softener.....	750	7,500
One breaker card.....	1,750	10,000
One second breaker card.....	1,750	10,000
One finisher.....	1,750	10,000
Four spinners, $1,750 each.....	6,880	56,000
One cop-winder.....	600	3,000
Five looms, $350 each.....	1,750	7,500
Total.....	15,080	108,500

*Fourteen thousand pounds each.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you are compelled to have a building which is capable of holding that "simple" machinery, a building that is substantial, and inasmuch as a jute mill is almost as inflammable as a malt house, in order to get a fair rate of insurance you must have your elevated tanks, your automatic sprinklers, your fire engines, your lines of hose, and all of the appliances that are supposed to be a protection against fire. Then you want your bobbins, your shuttles, your pulleys, and your shafting, and all of the other materials and requirements necessary for the operation of breaking up the fabric and spinning it, to say nothing of your steam engine for power.

Mr. BURROWS. If it will not interrupt my friend from New Jersey, I should like to ask him a question just there.

Mr. ENGLISH. Very well.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to ask whether any portion of the machinery to which the gentleman has referred is manufactured in the United States?

Mr. ENGLISH. I do not know of any. Possibly at Paterson they may make some, but I have no information. None is made in my district.

Mr. COOMBS. Some is made at Paterson, I think.

Mr. ENGLISH. Possibly; but, Mr. Chairman, it is a complicated machinery. Now, it strikes me in rather a peculiar way; a sort of vision came on my ravished eyes when I considered this question. I thought I could see the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Nebraska, having obtained a portion of that simple machinery for a jute mill, determined to carry it around to the plantations of the South and to the mills of the Northwest, to go as missionaries to show the results of this beneficent and merciful work to the people there.

I thought I saw a glorious vision in fancy, headed by a small negro boy ringing a bell and calling out, "Bagging to weave," and then the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Nebraska with 25 short tons each of this "simple machinery" on their backs followed the boy, and behind them a long row of wagons filled with jute butts and drawn by horses with bells on them, and then closing up the procession was a wagon containing the bobbins and the shuttles, the pulleys and the shaftings of the factory, and drawn by four ex-army mules. I saw that magnificent vision passing through the land, and the colts in the pastures that had their necks in the fences, alarmed at the strange sight, turned around, kicked up their heels and scampered across the field, while the little dogs barked and the little boys in troops followed shouting, "The circus is coming," and the women and children ran to the windows to see the sight, and the grand procession passed finally out into the dim distance, leaving—and I beg pardon of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for quoting Shakespeare—

Like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Not a rack behind.

Mr. Chairman, we can not with any justice pass this bill. What would be the result?

I told this House the other day, in speaking of another and kindred matter, of that old maxim in the Gesta Romanorum,

"At the beginning consider well the end." You have that jute trust in Calcutta, powerful, holding millions upon millions of capital, absolutely controlling the output of the raw material throughout the world. The moment you withdraw that protection of less than 2 cents a yard that day you will crush out the manufacturers here, and then you will get exactly what you are after, gentlemen; you will get your bagging at 6 cents a yard, and they will furnish it at that price until they have entirely driven out the manufacturing industries in this country engaged in that line, and you will get back to the 35-cent gunny-cloth system. That is what will happen if you succeed in doing that. And as some gentleman has said, you can not expect that manufacturers in the future will be induced to embark in this business again. Capital is not a shuttlecock to be knocked up and down, and if you crush this out do you think you can ever induce capital to go into the business again?

Mr. GRADY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ENGLISH. Certainly.

Mr. GRADY. Did not the quinine manufacturers make that same threat, when the proposition was made to take the tariff off quinine, that German and French quinine would come in here and ruin their business; and did they do it?

Mr. ENGLISH. Yes; I have no doubt they did.

Mr. GRADY. Why, they have six or eight factories now, and they only had three then.

Mr. ENGLISH. Yes; so they have. That is not a parallel case in any way.

Mr. GRADY. It seems to me parallel.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] stood right by his seat over there in the Forty-seventh Congress, and said if we took the duty off quinine and put it on the free list, that the Europeans would raise the price, and we would have to pay double; whereas we are now paying only about one-fourth as much as before.

Mr. ENGLISH. But the difference is this: In the quinine manufacture there was a colossal profit, by reason of the high duty, and here in this case the margin of profit is very slight. That is the difference, and you know it, and it is an unfair illustration, and you know that.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] stood there and said in his speech in the Forty-seventh Congress that they made hardly any profit at all.

Mr. GRADY. The plea was that they made no profit. I received their circulars, plenty of them.

Mr. ENGLISH. I have not heard distinctly what has been said, and I do not know whether it is pertinent to the matter or not; but my answer is that quinine, as you call it, the salt of the bark, had a very high duty—

Mr. GRADY. It had only 20 per cent. That is all the duty there was.

Mr. ATKINSON. But does not the gentleman from Alabama know that the price of quinine was reduced because the bark is now cultivated, and has been reduced very much in price because of that cultivation?

Mr. ENGLISH. Cultivated in Ceylon and elsewhere.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The price is only about one-fourth what it was before the duty was taken off.

Mr. ENGLISH. I want to be fair, and that would not be fair to the quinine manufacturers at all to consider the cases as parallel. In Ceylon and other places they are cultivating the bark, and the price of the raw material is vastly cheaper.

Mr. GRADY. The duty on quinine was only 20 per cent.

Mr. ENGLISH. Two dollars and fifty cents per ounce is my recollection. But I do not propose to occupy the time of this House much longer; but before I give way to any other gentleman I have this to say, something that has no connection directly with the bill. During the time that we were debating the silver bill here I was not very much impressed by the arguments on either side, and as I was not feeling very well I took a walk around this building. In the corridor I overheard one gentleman saying: "These fellows are on the brink of breaking up. They are fighting each other, a regular cat fight, and they have no leader." It impressed me very much; but I want to say that if any gentleman in a remote corner of this House has an idea that because Democrats differ on this or any other subject, free coinage or what not, that there is any danger of disruption of the Democratic party thereby, he had better get out of his rosy dreams or he will be rudely awakened.

A cat fight in the Democratic party is not to be deplored by Democrats. I remember distinctly on one occasion when a gentleman spoke of a similar fight in a convention, and a third man standing by him said it was no matter, that after a cat fight a great many more cats appeared in the neighborhood. [Laughter.] You may tell them this, that we at the present time are simply practicing thrust and parry among ourselves in order to get better ready to confront the common enemy, and whenever the bugle blast blows you will find these discordant ranks standing together, shoulder to shoulder, in defense of those principles and that policy which alone can prevent the tide of centralism that overwhelmed the olden republics, and that threatens ours; and as to the want of a leader—well I admit that we have not as yet had our Moses. I have not seen him. We are somewhat like sheep without a shepherd; and the opposite side are well supplied in that way. In fact, I think they have three leaders, as far as my observation goes.

Mr. MCRAE. They are all leaders.

Mr. ENGLISH. They have a sort of triple-headed Kerberos to guard them in that region to which the wrath of the American people consigned them. Yes, they have three leaders, and each of them able. There is the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who drew such a ravishing picture of Dotheboys Hall at the beginning of the session, that I never look at him that I do not see Mrs. Squeers with her mobcap, her lanky petticoat, and her long spoon.

And there is another gentleman whom I have observed, who is also a leader. He comes, I think, from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], and he is ready to stand up with courage and decision in behalf of his party, ever ready to raise his melodious and pleasant voice to the delight and instruction of this House, that sits at his feet as at those of a second Gamaliel; and last of all, facile princeps, standing head and shoulders, Saul-like, among his fellows, is the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who at one time held the scepter there [pointing to the Chair], a ruler of his subjects on the floor, but now deposed, and with his imperial robes around him sits over there again, and, magnificent in his intellect and generalship, he reminds me very much of Marius brooding over the ruins of Carthage. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, we have no leader, but when the time comes the leader will be here. The hour will bring the man. Now, whom? It may be the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], who conducted the debate on the wool bill so splendidly, and who made a good bid for leadership, or it may be some other; but whoever he is, he will be a man of long experience in this Congress, and with the experience, courage, and capacity, who takes care first to consult the wishes of his colleagues before he acts. Such a man will find the majority of this House around him like a phalanx, and no one will follow him more loyally than I. He will consult and confer with the members of the House, and will act as they think best in the interest of the whole people. Meanwhile the Democratic members will act as they think best, and be responsible only to their consciences and their constituents.

Mr. GRADY. Would he not be following in that way, anyhow?

Mr. ENGLISH. Yes; because I know my leader will consult me and other members of the House, and will not act on his sweet will, and not come to grief as other gentlemen have already.

Now, sir, I have said that I was a tariff reformer; that in the days of the Walker tariff I was a tariff reformer, and that I am a tariff reformer now. But I am not a tariff destroyer, and therein, Mr. Chairman, lies a distinction and a difference.

I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time is there remaining to the gentleman from New Jersey?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to have twenty-five minutes. I have put myself down upon the list, and if I can get twenty-five minutes I will not consume any more than that.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Chair will recognize me as a member of the committee I will yield fifteen minutes to my friend from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] yields to me five minutes; he will give that much of his time as was reserved on yesterday. If that will be satisfactory to the House, I would be perfectly willing to yield him ten minutes now, and he will yield me that much time out of his time reserved yesterday.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That is right.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If that is satisfactory to the House, I will agree to that, to follow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. BURROWS. Do you want any more time from me?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, I thank you.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, there were some inquiries made yesterday in regard to a letter which I had received from the firm of Wallace, Banfield & Co., who live at Irondale, Ohio, in my district, and who are engaged in the manufacture of tin plate. I have the letter now, and wish to have it read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

IRONDALE, OHIO, March 28, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Your favor by wire to hand. We send you by this mail samples of our bright tin plate. We have at present two stacks working on this grade of plates and one stack working onterne plates; the product of each of these stacks is forty boxes per day, making our product of bright plates eighty boxes per day and that of terne plates forty boxes per day. We will have two more stacks in operation in a short time, which will make our product in total 240 boxes per day. Our branch of the tin-plate industry is quite domestic, as we roll the plates for tinning on our own mills and roll them from steel, which is made in our own county, viz, Jefferson County, Ohio.

Bidding you Godspeed in the interest of the tin-plate industry.

We are, most respectfully yours,

WALLACE, BANFIELD & CO., LIMITED.
Per T. A. WHITE.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, when this question was up yesterday, some gentleman inquired whether I called that which I now hold in my hand tin plate. This morning, when in the room of the Committee on the Census, I met Mr. J. D. Weeks, of Pittsburg, Pa., a gentleman who is well known in this country for his scientific knowledge in regard to these subjects. He is quite an experienced expert in this direction, and is now employed by the Government in making inquiries of various kinds. For ten years he was the editor of the Iron Age. That of itself would indicate his ability to give an opinion. He said to me that there is no better tin plate made in the world to-day than is made by Wallace, Banfield & Co., at Irondale, Ohio.

Now, Mr. Weeks is here in the city attending to certain business in connection with the Census Bureau, and was before the Committee on the Eleventh Census this morning. This letter indicates that these men are in the business. They have an office at Irondale and a branch office at Pittsburg. I spoke yesterday of the character of the men. Now, I hope these gentlemen will be satisfied of two things. First, that this is a specimen of genuine tin plate which I hold in my hand of the very best quality; and, secondly, that it was made at Irondale, Ohio. Now, to show the good faith of these people on the Ohio River, I desire to send up another letter and have it read. This is an industry which was started for the purpose of making steel bars, and those steel bars are made with a view to the manufacture of tin plate, and are made for tin-plate manufacturers.

BRIDGEPORT, OHIO, April 6, 1892

DEAR SIR: We desire to direct your attention to the inclosed letter received from the Tinned Plate Manufacturers' Association, of which we are members. The letter is self-explanatory.

In this connection we desire to urge upon you the necessity of increased vigilance in looking after the interests of the manufacturers of this valley who are engaged in the manufacture of sheet steel, particularly that part of the business relating to tin plate industry.

This company does not make tin plate, but we have expended $10,000 to $50,000 in a plant necessary for the production of steel bars from which the plates are rolled, and for which we expect to find a market from the producers of tin plate.

We are therefore thoroughly interested in seeing the infant industry protected until fairly on its feet, and we trust that your efforts will be untiring towards thwarting the purpose of the so-called Tin Plate Consumers' Association, who are busying themselves to have the present tariff repealed on taggers iron and terne plate.

Respectfully,

ÆTNA IRON AND STEEL COMPANY,
By JNO. A. TOPPING, Sec. and Treas.

Col. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. These steel bars are made for the purpose of being first rolled into sheets and then tinned. It will be seen from the letter I have had read that these manufacturers will in a few days make 240 boxes per day, the greater part of it being bright tin plate and the residue terne plate. I suppose gentlemen know what terne plate is. This tin plate is about 95 or 96 per cent steel, the finest steel plate that can be rolled, and then it is tinned with pure tin. The terne plate, as the name indicates, is made of three ingredients; first, steel, then a mixture of tin and lead. The liquid in which the sheet is dipped in the process of manufacture is a mixture of tin and lead, so that the completed product is composed of three things, steel, tin, and lead, and therefore is called terne plate.

Mr. BUNTING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this tin plate is made of steel which is made in this country?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUNTING. Where was the steel made which forms a part of this product?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If the gentleman had listened to the letter which I had read a few minutes ago he would have learned that it was made by Wallace, Banfield & Co. They first made the sheet and then the tin.

Mr. BUNTING. How many establishments are there in the United States that make these plates?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will refer the gentleman to the census reports for that information. A bulletin has just been issued, in which he will find an immense amount of information about these matters. I have not seen it, but I am so informed.

Mr. BUNTING. The gentleman has stated that a factory is making fifty boxes a week.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have not stated that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUNTING. I want to ask the gentleman how much labor is included in that amount of production. I say that two men will turn out 70 boxes a day with a Welsh tin-pot. Does not the gentleman know, further, that Mr. Swank, who is the most reliable man on this continent in matters of computation in connection with these subjects, has recently exposed about three-fourths of the entire lists of these phantom tin-plate manufacturing in this country, showing them to be mere pretenses?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not yield for a speech at my back, but I will yield sufficient time to the gentleman on my right [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] to answer the question that has been asked him.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand exactly what the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNTING] wishes to know. The amount of labor involved is not the question I was discussing. I was trying to show that tin plate was made in this country and that this tin plate was made at Irondale, Ohio, in my district. I do, however, remember a fact which may be of interest in connection with the gentleman's question. Between the time when Congress attempted several years ago to put a tariff of 2½ cents a pound upon tin plate and the time when the Mills bill was pending in this House, in 1888, I found upon an examination of the figures that we had sent abroad $225,000,000 in payment for tin plate, and that the tin-plate industry had paid out in wages in Great Britain during the same period $80,000,000. That was the labor element in the tin plate which was imported into this country during that period. It took sixty-six tin-plate mills to make the amount of tin plate that was consumed annually in this country at that time.

Mr. BUNTING. I would like to ask the gentleman how many boxes of tin plate are made—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] has expired. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is recognized.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the committee to turn away from the consideration of the interest of the manufacturers, who seem to be so popular on one side of this House, to consider briefly the interests of the great agricultural community that I in part represent. This bill providing for taking the taxes off cotton-bagging and cotton-ties is not one so general in its scope as to warrant a very long speech.

But the question is of such interest to the Southern planters that I think something ought to be said in behalf of this bill and that it ought to be passed if possible. The tax on cotton-ties as fixed by the McKinley bill is 100 per cent. The tax on cotton-bagging, according to the minority report, is 1.6 and 1.7 cents per square yard—equivalent to about 1 cent per pound. The cotton-ties of this country annually bought by the farmers to bind their cotton cost them upon an average about $2,000,000. If the cotton crop is 8,000,000 bales the cotton-ties cost at least $2,000,000.

A tax of 100 per cent upon these cotton-ties will run up, it is very easily calculated, to $1,000,000. On cotton-bagging the duty is about 1 cent per pound, or between 1.6 cents and 1.8 cents per square yard, making the tax about 10 cents per bale. If the cotton crop of this country is 8,000,000 bales, and the tax upon cotton-bagging is 10 cents a bale, the total tax to the farmers of this country every year for the materials for wrapping up their cotton is $800,000. So that a law which levies upon one set of people of this country an annual tribute of $1,800,000 is a matter worthy of our consideration.

I have looked around a good deal for some reason why we should not reduce the taxes upon cotton-bagging and cotton-ties. So far as I have been able to discover, no good reason has been assigned by the gentlemen on the other side and none has been set out in the minority report, so far as I am able to see.

It should be remembered that the value of the cotton crop of this country has been reduced since the McKinley bill was passed at least $125,000,000. Eight million bales, at $40 per bale, which it was worth when the McKinley bill was passed in 1890, would amount to $320,000,000. It is well known that cotton is to-day well sold at $25 a bale. A reduction of $15 per bale upon the total crop of this country amounts to $120,000,000 or $125,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, if there be no other reason why this tax should be no longer gathered the immense loss that has come upon one great body of the American people is sufficient. The minority in their report do not go into this matter of the reduction of the price of cotton at all; but they state that there is now invested in this country in the cotton-bagging industry at least $8,000,000.

The tax of 1 cent per pound on the cotton-bagging consumed in this country amounts to $800,000. So that the cotton planters of the Southern States are taxed 10 per cent upon every dollar invested in the cotton-bagging industry of the country which must be paid over and above the ordinary profits that manufacturers receive.

The minority further state that the cotton-tie industry in the country has been giving partial employment to about eleven thousand men. The tax of 100 per cent upon cotton-ties means a million dollars, and if the total amount of this is collected, the result would be that the Southern cotton-growers would be paying more than $90 for each one of these eleven thousand men over and above the usual wages he would be entitled to in a free and open market. The question then growing out of this bill is not one that affects the country at large so much as it does a limited number of manufacturers on the one side and the cotton-growers of the Southern country as a whole on the other, and each member of this House who casts his ballot upon this bill must decide for himself whether or no he will vote in favor of a few manufacturers who are taxing the people upon cotton-bagging at the rate of 10 per cent on all the money invested, and upon cotton-ties at the rate of more than $90 per head for every man who is partially employed in the business; or give his vote to those interested in and dependent upon the cotton crop of the Southern country which by reason of the low price of the product, is the most depressed of all the industries of this country.

The minority of the committee state that there are sixteen mills in the United States conducting business independently of each other and in full competition. There is no combination say these gentlemen, to dominate the product or fix prices, or for any other purpose. Sir, it does not require a very long memory to go back to the time when there was such a combination in this country. And all this talk about the combinations of Calcutta, thousands and thousands of miles away, seems to me to be entirely impertinent to this subject when we remember that right in our own midst, in this favored land, the manufacturers of cotton-bagging formed a combination in 1889 and 1890 by which they ran the price of cotton-bagging from 6 and 7 cents up to 13 and 14 cents a yard.

If they make a profit at the present figures their profits must have been enormous when the price was 100 per cent more than this article is now selling for.

But we do not owe it to the McKinley bill or any law of Congress that this combine was broken up. It is well known that the alliance among the agricultural people of this land, in the Southern States especially, by a degree of pecuniary and personal sacrifice probably never surpassed by any people in time of peace, broke the back of this combination and brought these manufacturers to their senses. And, sir, it comes with ill grace from gentlemen who are endeavoring to continue this tax upon the farmers of the Southern country to say that there is no combination between these sixteen mills, when they are fresh from this very operation by which they laid an enormous additional burden upon a portion of the taxpayers of this country. And I want to know whether the mills of this country and those who own them are such favorites with the legislators of this land that they can not be disturbed, although they have willingly and in violation both of the laws of God and man formed a combination by which they undertook ruthlessly to oppress the people.

Some of the members of this combination of the bagging-mill owners of this country were examined before a committee of the United States Senate. In the coolest and most insolent manner they declared that their purpose was to form a combination to make money out of the farmers, stating that they had examined the mills of all other countries and had ascertained that it was impossible for them to supply bagging to our farmers for the crop then about to be gathered; that the farmers would be obliged to have bagging in order to put their crop upon the market at all, and that there would be no escape for them but to buy the bagging of this combination at whatever price they saw fit to put it at. They thought that they had the farmers of the country absolutely at their mercy, and but for the spirit, independence, and the love of liberty which inspired the agriculturists of the country, it would have been impossible to break the power of this combination. It will never be known what sacrifice the farmers underwent in order to relieve themselves of this burden, and they are entitled to the thanks of the whole American people for demonstrating clearly that when wrong is attempted by any body of men, there still remains in this country enough independence and courage and love of fair dealing to unite the people in opposition to it.

Mr. Chairman, criminals are punished, first, to restrain them from doing evil, and second, to teach other people that under like circumstances they may expect the same severe treatment. It seems to me that this law should pass this Congress and receive the approval of the President, if for no other reason, to teach these cool and impudent manufacturers and all others who under like circumstances would be tempted to imitate their example, that the representatives of the American people will not see the honest, hard-working citizens of this country imposed upon, without visiting upon the perpetrators of the wrong a just and merited punishment. When it comes to a question of preserving the interests of a class of people such as these as distinguished from that of the good, hard-working, taxpaying citizens of this country, no man ought to hesitate for a moment.

There is another statement in this minority report:

If the policy of protection heretofore pursued, and under which the cotton-bagging industry has been naturalized in our midst, is to be destroyed, as it will be if this bill becomes a law, some very cogent reason ought to be advanced to justify such destruction.

Sir, from the time when the tariff was first laid upon any citizen of any country on earth the friends of taxation as against the people have held up this great specter of the industries of the country being destroyed. When they go into a discussion of the tariff they speak of representatives of the people who depict the impoverished condition of their constituents as "calamity screamers."

I would like to know who is a worse "calamity screamer" than the man who signs this report, stating that those who favor this bill are proposing to destroy this American industry.

What industry have we destroyed? Why should we destroy any industry? These gentlemen know perfectly well that we do not intend to destroy any industry. They are going about as "calamity screamers" themselves, always pointing out things that are going to happen, and drawing dire predictions of the results of legislation. They are not only calamity screamers, but they are calamity-screamer prophets. And, Mr. Chairman, of all the men that were ever put on this earth, it seems to me that the most useless is the "calamity-screamer prophet," the man who does nothing except hold up to the people some imaginary wrong, some terrible prediction, some misfortune that is to come to them and to this country, with its teeming millions, provided the people who work in the cotton fields of the South and other laboring men have the poor privilege of buying their goods without paying a tax for them.

The minority of the committee give the prices of cotton-bagging from 1872 to 1878, each year separately. When they come to 1880, however, they do not give the price of that year separately, but they skip over to 1890, and make a kind of conglomerated average of the ten years. This is a bad omission, for you remember about that time the great combination was made by which the manufacturers were enabled to run the price of cotton-bagging up something like a hundred per cent. But they state that in 1891 cotton-bagging was sold at 6½ cents per pound.

Now, if cotton-bagging can be sold at 6½ cents per yard it certainly must have been an enormously profitable business when they were selling it at 9½, 12, and 13 cents. And if, under the tariff law which Mr. McKinley framed, which reduced the tariff from 1½ and 2 cents to 1 cent a pound, the market price of this article goes from 11 cents down to 6½ cents, it shows that if you reduce the tariff on the article you reduce the price of the article to the consumer; whereas, our friends on the other side of the House contend that if you increase the tariff you reduce the price. That is the old-time, well-worn argument of our friends, and it is set forth right here in their report in plain language. They say:

To encourage home manufacturers is to encourage competition, as experience shows, and thus to reduce prices to a minimum.

It is a very strange thing that the farmers of this country, who are fairly intelligent people, have not in these gentlemen's opinion sense enough to know what they need or what is good for them in reference to this question of cotton-bagging and cotton-ties. If the high tariff is to reduce the price of their ties and bagging, why is it that the only men who come here asking for the tariff on these commodities should be the manufacturers themselves?

It is the manufacturers who are clamorous for it. The farmers are not asking for it. If the argument be true as embodied in this report, then you place the manufacturers in the peculiar position of coming here, as has been shown by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] in his argument on yesterday, and writing into the tariff laws exactly what they want by way of protection on their manufactures, and they do this when, according to your argument, they know in advance that it will have the effect of reducing the prices to the minimum cost to the consumer. Where then is the advantage to the manufacturer?

Mr. Chairman, we all know that the manufacturers of this country have not piled up great fortunes by reducing prices to a minimum, and when the time comes to reduce the tariff in any way they are always the first to oppose it. If the increase of the tariff reduces prices, certainly the contrary doctrine should also prevail, and the diminution of the tariff ought to increase the prices. Therefore the manufacturers, in place of being clamorous for an increase of the tariff, should in their own interest, according to your argument, be the very ones who favor a reduction. But the manufacturers are the people who are continually asking an advance of rates.

Will any of our friends on the other side have the temerity to get up here and say in the presence of this country that they do it only for the purpose of reducing the prices of the articles that they manufacture? If that be true what is to become of the wage-earner who is employed by the manufacturer, the man whom you gentlemen are so anxious to protect in everything that you do? How is he to get his daily wages when the price of the commodity that his employer is making is coming down all the time? And what justice or propriety is there in the representatives of the people passing a law which is to diminish the value of the factories and the other methods of making money in this country?

The argument, Mr. Chairman, is an absurdity on its face. If prices are reduced by the tariff, why does the manufacturer ask for it? Where does the higher wages of American workmen come from? If the manufacturer can not make a profit under your system of laws he can not pay his wage-earners for their labor; and if he can not make a profit he will not operate his factory. If our friends on the other side are really in earnest about wanting to care for the manufacturer and the laborer in this country, they ought to quit passing laws to reduce their profits. They must shift, turn around, and walk in the other direction, and then we can all go together, and the real interest of the people will be subserved by both parties.

The whole number of articles taxed under the McKinley bill is 2,500. Considering the fact that the products of the Southern farmers are not mentioned in the McKinley bill, it certainly seems to me that it is not asking too much that they should be relieved at least of the burden imposed upon cotton bagging and ties. If the farmers were given anything under the law it would not be unjust to pay something. But the only position they occupy in relation to these 2,500 articles on our tax list under the McKinley bill is as consumers and taxpayers.

The truth of it is that the farmers consume the articles and the tax consumes the farmers. The outcome is that the agricultural interests of the Southern people to-day are probably in a more depressed and less lucrative condition than they have been at any time since the foundation of the Government. There has not been a day in fifty years when the chief product of the Southern country has brought as low a price as it brings to-day. There has not been a time during our years of peace when the people of that land were in as great distress and as great need as they are to-day; and to say that no relief can be given to them simply and only because these eight millions of money are invested in this enterprise is to deny to the great body of these people, who are suffering to-day beyond those of any other part of our country, the simplest measure of justice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Do you not think it would benefit the farmers of your section if they would diversify their industries?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes, sir; it would help them very much indeed. There is no doubt about that. But, on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the farmers of the Southern country must rely for many years upon cotton. It has been the staple there and it must be the staple there during the lifetime of the gentleman from Illinois and myself at least; and therefore we appeal to these gentlemen to-day, in behalf of that great body of people, to give us this relief.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman understands that the theory and principle of protection is that it diversifies industries and interests, and thus relieves the people from the very burdens that the gentleman speaks of, that exist there to-day.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, I know that is the theory of protection, and no doubt my friend believes in it honestly, as he does in some other erroneous principles of political economy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It is not an error.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The trouble is that we have been taxed in every way for over one hundred years, and yet the diversity which has been promised to us has not been reached. Take the matter of the cotton crop. We export more than three out of every five bales of cotton that are raised. We have been paying taxes to the manufacturers of this country, year in and year out, for more than an hundred years, and yet all they do is to buy about one-third of our crop at the price that is fixed in Liverpool, so that if we are to wait until diversity comes we will long have survived the time when adversity comes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me, I can remember the time, in the State of Illinois, where I live, when we raised nothing but wheat; but we found as the Western Territories developed, they could raise wheat cheaper than we could, and that drove us into a diversity of interests there, and the result is that Illinois to-day is the third State in the Union as a manufacturing State, and this has not only enhanced the value of the State from its State standpoint, but it has enhanced the value of the interest of the farmer, of the manufacturer, and the laborer.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is all right—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Why can you not do that in the South?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The answer is very simple. It is not the province of government to force people to stop growing wheat or to stop growing cotton. Let them grow what will grow naturally in this country. That is what they ought to do; and if we are to have industries created by taxation which we would not have without it, it simply means that the business that we would have, that would pay naturally, is to be surrendered in order to establish a business that will not pay. Now, my friend, so far as manufacturing is concerned, we do manufacture in the Southern country. The State that I represent in part manufactured more cotton a year ago than any other Southern State, and the manufacturers are making money, some of them from 25 to 30 per cent, but the large body of the Southern people have been and must for years be agriculturists and nothing else. And it does not follow that because they must be agriculturists that therefore they are to be taxed in order to be run into some other occupation.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will allow me, what effect would it have upon the rice industry in your State if rice were placed upon the free list?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I doubt very much if it would have any effect whatever, for the simple reason that the rice that is grown on the coast of South Carolina and Georgia is the best rice known to the civilized world, and therefore there is no competition with it.

For that reason I say that so far as that is concerned, I do not believe it would affect it at all. But it is very poor compensation for us to get a little tariff on rice, even if it is 100 per cent, for that is a very small crop, when we are taxed on all the other articles, in order to keep the tariff upon that. And if the gentleman will go with me and vote for a reduction on all articles mentioned in the McKinley bill, I will move to take rice in with them, and will let it take its chance with the others.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Do the rice-planters agree with you in that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If they do not, they can vote against me when they get an opportunity.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Now I want to say a rice-planter—

Mr. HEMPHILL. If all the implements they use for farming, with all they eat and wear is to be taxed, they naturally want the duty on rice, but when you give them a chance by taking the tax off other things, they will go with you upon the question of rice; and if they do not, then they will have to submit, like the balance of us.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. A rice-planter in your State told me—

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] yielded to me twenty minutes of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman has five minutes more.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] yielded me fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman was recognized for twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And then I had ten minutes from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH].

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair was that the gentleman had twenty-five minutes. He yielded a portion of his time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think I had thirty-five minutes from these two gentlemen, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and then I had ten minutes from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], making in all forty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already consumed twenty-five minutes. That was the limitation of his time, as the Chair understood.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I have twenty minutes remaining, which I will not take in full.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. A large rice-planter in your

State who had, with his brother, 1,200 acres in rice told me that three-fourths of a cent reduction on clean rice and one-fourth of a cent on uncleaned rice would drive them into bankruptcy; and he was a Democrat, too.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no doubt that when a man has the Government helping to hold him up, he thinks that if the Government were to withdraw from his support he will be ruined. A great many people have thought that, and have found that it was not so, as is well illustrated by the tariff on raw hides, and the leather industries, which has been so often stated in this House. But to come back to the cotton business. Last year, up to December 31, the value of our cotton exported was $277,000,000. The average export of cotton from this country is from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year.

If there is any importance whatever to be attached to the question of the balance of trade in this country, then I say that the cotton industry, above everything else, ought to be encouraged. If the imports which we receive in this country were not paid for by the exports of cotton, breadstuffs, etc., they would have to be paid for either in securities or in cash. We are therefore interested in exporting as much as we possibly can, so as to meet the balance of trade for imports between the United States and foreign countries.

To see a great industry reduced from $325,000,000 down to $200,000,000 in value, and then hear it said that nothing can be done for its relief because a change may effect eleven thousand men who partly earn a livelihood from the manufacture of cotton-ties, and the $8,000,000 that is invested in sixteen manufacturing establishments sounds very strangely coming from a party that professes to be the special friends of the industrial interests of the country. The farmers of the South pay on every single thing that they buy. They pay a tax upon their wagons, their plows, their trace chains, and on the implements of every kind with which they farm.

All that we ask is that these things which are essential to the marketing of our crops may be bought by us free from the additional cost that the manufacturers have induced the Government to lay upon them.

Something has been said about jute bagging machinery by our friend from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], who accidentally made an argument here for the friends of protection by mistake. [Laughter.] He figures up an immense amount as the cost of that machinery.

Why, sir, we might know that the gentleman is a literary man and a poet from his making such a statement as that. Everybody who knows anything about the subject knows that the machinery by which this article is manufactured is not costly. You can not figure up any very large amount of expense for that kind of machinery, and the very fact that a Democrat should use such an argument shows that he has a very weak case.

Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I make any special appeal here for the workingman, because I believe that every citizen of this country is as good as any other citizen if he is honest, and that if he makes his living by the labor of his hands he is not on that account any better or entitled to any more consideration or privileges than the man who makes his living by the labor of his brains or by both combined. In this country all should be treated alike. Therefore, I say that I am not here to appeal for the workingman over everybody else; but I do say that if anything is due to any particular class of laborers in this country the men who work in the cotton fields of the Southern country during the storms of winter and the heat of summer, from the time the sun rises until it sets in the heavens, are entitled to as much consideration as these people who sit in the shade and turn out these cotton-ties and cotton-bagging. And I appeal to my Republican friends to aid us to relieve the agricultural people of the Southern country from this additional burden in order that the cotton industry may be once more revived, that some hope and strength may be put into the people, so that they may go to work to build up that Southern land with new life and new inspiration. Give them this relief, and I believe they will get more benefit from the encouragement and the good spirits it will bring them than even from the actual money it will save to them. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question I presume it is right and proper that one who represents farmers and who is a farmer himself, and a laborer, should have something to say about it. I have been identified with the laboring class all my life. For the last fourteen years I have been a farmer, and have tried as hard and as honestly as any man to make a living at that business. Therefore, I think I can speak with some authority in regard to the benefits of this protective tariff system to the agricultural class of the American people. I have sat here patiently listening to the arguments on both sides, the Republican and the Democratic side, and I have been instructed and sometimes amused.

I have listened attentively to the speeches from the Republican side, and I am free to say that I have been surprised to find the Republican party represented here by men having such indistinct ideas in regard to the system of trade and the laws which govern it. I listened to the apostle of the protective tariff on the Republican side; I listened to the silver-tongued orator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and to his grand appeal to the people, as represented here, to support and foster the special privileges of which he is the champion, but I am free to say that I did not get much information out of his appeal. [Laughter.] He started out with the proposition that a system of protection increased the price of everything, and that it yielded a great benefit to labor because the manufacturers, getting high prices for their goods, would be enabled to pay high wages to their laborers.

Then he turned around and told us that to put wool on the free list would be to strike a deadly blow at the wool interest of this country by cheapening wool. And yet, when he concluded his speech he concluded it with the statement that the intention of the McKinley bill and the intention of a protective tariff generally was to cheapen everything. His speech was a contradiction from the beginning to the end. Now, if the McKinley bill and the protective tariff system have the effect of cheapening everything, where are these grand and good manufacturers going to get the surplus money to pay high wages to labor? That is the question, gentlemen. If the tariff has the effect to cheapen everything, and make prices low, then I ask any gentleman on the Republican side to tell me where the employers, the manufacturers, are going to get the money to pay high wages?

Mr. WALKER rose.

Mr. SIMPSON. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, because I shall have something to say about his State later on.

Mr. WALKER. I want to say to the gentleman that in any series of ten years in the last thirty not a dollar has been made by manufacturers of this country as a class in any staple industry that has not been gotten out of nature by invention. Not a cent of profit has been made by increased prices; it has all come from nature by means of the inventions of manufacturers and mechanics—every dollar of it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, then, we ought to pay them for it, not you.

Mr. SIMPSON. I understood it was the McKinley bill which was going to enrich everybody, and produce wealth in this country; and now the gentleman from Massachusetts says there is no increase of wealth except that coming from the inventive genius of the American people applied to manufacturing machinery, and thereby increasing the productive power of the country. Then it is not the protective tariff at all that has helped the manufacturers. [At this point Mr. WALKER started to leave the Hall.] I hope the gentleman will not go away; I propose to have something to say about Massachusetts later on. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am a free trader—absolute. I am not one of those men who are ready to compromise with wrong. Either a thing is right or it is wrong. I learned my Republicanism when the Republican party meant something—when it stood for a principle—when old William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips said they would have no compromise with wrong; that slavery was “an agreement with death and a covenant with hell.” They refused to compromise with wrong. That is the time when I was a Republican. But when the Republican party became the champion of special interests, when the money power and the manufacturing class got control of it to use it as a vehicle through which to foster their special interests I left the Republican party, and to-day I stand for absolute free trade in every sense of the word.

Now, gentlemen, what is free trade? Is it a natural or an unnatural condition? Are not human beings so constituted that they must trade? No matter how primitive the state of society, men must trade. With the developments of human progress the inventions of machinery and the division of labor, different classes and different countries producing separate and distinct articles, we must have a system of trade. In olden times this cropped out because the settlements were along public highways or water courses, by means of which the people could communicate with one another. Trade is a natural condition. What do these protectionist gentlemen propose? To protect against trading, to prevent people from trading with one another? Is it not obvious to every man that a protective tariff law has for its object to prevent some one from trading with some one else? It is evident that there must be men in this country who wish to trade with those in some other country or you would not pass a law to prevent this trading. Here, then, is a country where men are prevented by law from trading.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that trade is natural. If left to take care of themselves men will trade with other men who will give them good bargains. When I produce anything on my farm—grain or hogs or cattle—I produce a larger quantity than I can use myself, because I hope to trade the surplus with other men who have articles that I want; and I want to trade with the man or the people or the nation who will give me the best bargains. I want to trade where I can get rich instead of getting poor. But the law steps in to prevent this. The protective-tariff law confines me to a particular section of country. It assumes that the people, if left at liberty to trade, will make bad bargains. Is that the history of the American people? Is not the Yankee particularly noted all over the world for making smart trades and good bargains?

The protective tariff goes on the theory that a nation gets rich by keeping out wealth, by sending out its products and bringing nothing in. It assumes that the more wealth you send out and the less you bring in the richer the country becomes; and gentlemen quote here statistics showing that the “balance of trade” is in our favor; that we sent out last year $120,000,000 worth of products more than we brought in; and it is argued that for this reason we are getting rich.

Sir, when I was down in Florida a little over a year ago, as I stood on the deck of a steamer passing out through the magnificent harbor of Pensacola I saw sixty-five ships in that harbor, all except two flying a foreign flag. I inquired of the collector of the port, “How many of these vessels come into this port laden?” He said, “Not a single one enters this port with a cargo; they bring only ballast.” Those vessels were loading up with the productions of the great State of Florida; they were preparing to carry out the wealth of the United States; but not a single one brought anything in but old ballast and dirt gathered from foreign countries and unloaded over at Quarantine Island. Now, how does such a business benefit this nation? Every ship taking out a cargo was forced to charge double freight because she brought no cargo in. How did that benefit the country? Why should we be sending out our wealth and bringing nothing in?

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], in one of the eloquent passages of his magnificent speech in favor of the tariff, referred to the great nation of Holland that built a dike around the country in order to keep out her enemy, the ocean. As the ocean, roaring in front of that dike and trying to reclaim the realm that man had won from her, is regarded as an enemy to mankind, so the gentleman assumed that the goods the people of the foreign nations of the world would flood us with would be a great injury to us. I tell you, gentlemen, that if foreign nations want to flood us with goods—if they want to give us good things and to let my part of the people have good things, I am perfectly willing to tear down the dikes and everything else that stands in the way.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If they carry out our cotton have not they something to bring back in return? Now, if they do not bring goods, must they not bring gold; and is not that just as good for us as anything else? That is brought back in return for the cotton.

Mr. SIMPSON. Ah, that is just a very part of the protective-tariff scheme. It is the old theory. They first get a protective tariff and prevent you from trading for goods of any kind by fining you 50 cents on the dollar if you undertake to bring them in, the object being to compel you to trade for their gold, on which there is no tariff, and bring the country to the single standard. That is one of the efforts of the great gold monopoly of the country. You will be compelled, under this law, to trade for this commodity which the monopoly controls, gold, and that is a part of the hard-money scheme which has been worked in this country for so many years, my friend from Ohio, Mr. TAYLOR. Has the gentleman another question? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. Very well; what is it?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Why you have not answered the question I asked you yet, I say if they carry a cargo of cotton aboard, is it not true that they must bring back some equivalent?

Mr. SIMPSON. If they carry out a load of cotton and trade it off for a lot of silk, that some of our people here use occasionally, and of which we produce but little but which some of our people do want, they will fine the man 50 cents on every dollar's worth of silk he brings back in return for his cotton. Is he making a good trade under such circumstances? What can he trade his load of wheat or his load of cotton or his load of corn off for upon which he will not be fined as he brings it into the country?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. But if you can raise the goods here out of our own lands and make them by our own labor, are we not in a better condition than to purchase them from abroad?

Mr. SIMPSON. But it so happens that this is an agricultural country. It so happens that we have a very large agricultural surplus here that must seek a market somewhere because of the inability of consumers in our own manufacturing districts to purchase what they need. The Secretary of Agriculture in his report a year or so ago said that if the consumers of wheat bread had eaten but an ounce and three-quarters each more of wheat bread we would have had no wheat for export. We have no market here. The farmers must of necessity seek a foreign market. Seeking that foreign market, they must trade for goods in that country, and as soon as they make that trade you set your custom-house officers upon them and levy a tribute of 52 cents on every dollar's worth that they trade for. How does that benefit agriculture? How does it benefit the agricultural laborer of the country?

Why, Mr. Chairman, we are driven from the markets of the whole world. It is a well-known fact that there was a great failure of the crops on the other side of the Atlantic, nearly all over Europe recently. Millions of people are dying—starving or about to die of starvation—at least they told us so when they wanted to get a hundred thousand dollars or so for the purpose of hiring some good Republican's ship to carry over a cargo of flour to relieve them [laughter], and yet, sir, because we can not trade the products of our farms for the products of labor in foreign countries, we are restricted to the markets of this country by the tariff monopoly, and although there is a demand for these products abroad they are sinking lower and lower in price every day, until to-day they are away below the cost of production. How does this benefit the farmers of America?

Why, the Western and the Southern farmers have been driven into the cities and the towns of manufacturing States for their market where you promised the farmers you would build them an exclusive market. We are obliged to go there; there is no help for it, and to-day Kansas corn is selling in Massachusetts and Ohio, and driving out the very farmers whom you promised protection and a home market, because you have confined us to this local market, and because of the inability of the laboring classes to employ themselves in the production of wealth which they could and would exchange for the products of the farm—for these reasons we find the products of our farms thrown upon an ever-cheapening market for want of consumption. Mr. Chairman, I want to read an extract here from a great man, the governor of a Republican State, and himself a Republican, to show you the effect of this policy upon the farmers of a great agricultural State, and I know that my Republican friend from Ohio will take this extract as good evidence.

I will read an extract from the speech of the governor of the State of Illinois, Governor Fifer. In a speech delivered to the farmers of the Eighth Congressional district, he gave utterance to sentiments which I think are worthy of consideration.

Speaking of this, the Chicago Evening Post says:

GOVERNOR FIFER AND THE FARMERS.

In a speech delivered to the farmers of the Eighth Congressional district, Governor Fifer gave utterance to some sentiments which sound oddly enough, coming from the lips of the governor of a great commonwealth, who, if report be true, aspires to continue in that important office for at least one more term. We extract the following from the reports of the governor's speech:

"We have some very serious problems to face. Our country is filled up. There is no west to go to. We are full, and we will have to acquire Canada, British America, and Mexico, or overflow."

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Do you not know that the governor repudiated that publication the very next day after it was made? Has not your attention been called to that?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have the speech here as it was published; and I know it is becoming a common practice in this country when gentlemen find they have told the truth, and people are startled by hearing it from them, to spend the next two or three months in denying that they have told the truth. [Laughter.] We had an exhibition of that here in this House last evening. One gentleman went so far as to deny that he ever took a drink of whisky, which everybody knew was not true. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is that what purports to be a report of a speech that was made by Governor Fifer, at Joliet, Ill.?

Mr. SIMPSON [referring to the clipping]. This was made by Governor Fifer to the farmers of the Eighth Congressional district.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That was at Joliet, Ill.?

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not know.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is where it was, and Governor Fifer not only repudiated that, but Mr. Chairman, I can state that there were farmers there who were worth $250,000. In that convention there were ten farmers from my district as delegates. One of them was worth $250,000, and the poorest man there was a Democrat, who to-day owns more than 400 acres of land in my county and is worth easily $75,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. Those farmers are of the sort who earn their bread in the sweat of some other fellow's brow; they were not farmers at all. They were speculators. They were landlords. I am speaking of the working farmer when I say "farmer."

I will read the balance of Governor Fifer's speech:

The farmers are always poor and always will be poor. They can not concentrate wealth as in the corporate industries. There is no danger from the farmers. We never hear of election frauds among them. They are easily governed; but in large cities the republican form of government is a practical failure and so admitted by the framers of the State constitution of 1870, who gave powers to the governor to hold them in check.

If we ever lose our liberties it will come through the evils of municipal misrule. I ask you to go to Chicago to see where we are drifting. There you will see the climax. Look across the ocean, study the institutions of the Europeans who have been civilized for centuries. What is the spectacle? We are of the same blood. Are things not being driven along the same line here? Will we lose our republican form of government and take on a stronger one? Just so certainly as I stand here this Government will fall. All things tend to wealth, wealth to luxury, luxury to weakness, and weakness to lapse.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment to me?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to say that what the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. HOPKINS] say about the retraction of Governor Fifer's speech related to the latter part of the speech, the part the gentleman has just read, referring to corruption in the Republican city of Chicago. This was done in order to square himself with Chicago, and it did not relate to the part in reference to the condition of the farmers.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Oh, no; that is not my understanding of the fact at all.

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT] states that Governor Fifer took back the part that related to the city of Chicago; but the condition of the city of Chicago to-day demonstrates that he spoke the truth, for to-day they have hauled up their aldermen before the court, and are trying to convict them of swindling the city out of money, and of boodling. So, Mr. Speaker, there is every evidence that the governor understood the question and stated it plainly; and probably being afraid of the vote in the city of Chicago, to secure his election in the next campaign he, like a prudent politician, withdrew it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SCOTT. That is about right.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me to say it—I do not wish to interrupt him—I wish to say that Governor Fifer retracted the whole speech as being misreported.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to say in reply to that that Governor Oglesby, a Republican ex-United States Senator and three times elected governor by the Republicans of Illinois, said that the speech was correct as first reported.

Mr. LANE. And he heard it?

Mr. SCOTT. And he heard it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be further interrupted upon a question of veracity between two gentlemen from Illinois. When my time has expired they can settle that between themselves. I shall address myself to the tariff question now—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow another interruption right there?

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not wish to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I am in favor of this bill, because it will place certain articles on the free list, because it will help the Southern farmers. Every bill that takes a tax off from their energies, off from the products of their labor, is in the interest of every other man in the United States, whether he lives in the North or in the South. I want to say to the Southern cotton-planter that I want to see him relieved from every tax upon his industry, simply from a selfish interest, if from no other cause. For cotton we trade corn and wheat; and the Southern planter is a large buyer of Kansas corn, and the less he is robbed, the less money is taken from him by a robber tariff, the more he will have left to buy Kansas corn with. So, from a selfish point of view, if for no other reason, I am in favor of this bill.

I want to say further that I am in favor of this bill, because it takes a step toward putting everything else on the free list finally. I want to say to you that every time you take protection off from any favored industry you place the man interested in that industry in the ranks of those who are fighting against protection. I want to say to you that this is the way protection was built up. As one man got protection on his article, the man that had to consume his article saw that the only way to balance himself and to even himself up with the other fellow was to have protection put on the product of his labor; and thus we went to logrolling, and put a tariff on different things, until we got them all into the ring. My friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], one of the most brilliant men in the House, in his speech the other day let the cat out of the bag and showed how protective tariffs are built up by grants of special privileges; how, whenever you get them, when any community is benefited by this system, they at once fall into the ranks of those who battle for protective tariffs to help the other fellows out.

I will read you an extract from his speech which may explain the whole matter:

No people in the United States see more clearly the relation of the farm to its customers than the people of Iowa and Nebraska. Last summer the contract of building a little torpedo cruiser was awarded to the Dubuque Iron Works. We were agreeably surprised to find a shipyard in Iowa equipped for such a contract. The Dubuque newspapers were filled with rejoicing over the building of that one little cruiser costing $112,000. The Democratic newspaper opened its account with the headline in flaming capitals: "Hallelujah!"—the first time that old Hebrew expression ever found its way in a Democratic newspaper in that section of the country. [Laughter.] It pointed out how every citizen of the town and the whole adjacent community would share in the bounty of that expenditure of money.

Turning over to the editorial page the reader found an argument very like that delivered a week ago by my friend from Nebraska, in effect advising us, whenever we wanted anything else, to go to England for it, and I said to myself that if the Democracy of the West would only take into their politics a little of the common sense that they apply to their business, instead of winning new victories on the free-trade platform, as predicted by my friend from Nebraska, there would not be enough of them left to call the caucus to order [laughter]; for the principle to which I refer is recognized by the wise and simple alike.

They were going to have $112,000 distributed among the people of the city of Dubuque; and this will explain how you can make even a Democrat a defender of the "robber tariff." Every Democrat and Republican of that town saw that they had gotten their hands into the public pocket to the extent of $112,000, which the people of the United States were paying in taxes, and that there was that much money to be distributed in that little town. They were to get part of the boodle. I can readily conceive what rejoicing there was in the camp, just as I can imagine what a rejoicing there was in the home of the feudal baron who built his castle on a hill and made his forays down upon the plain to rob the husbandmen who tilled the soil or grazed his herd in the valley.

Under this modern system of robbing the people, you can readily conceive how Democrats and Republicans would rejoice in their robbery of the citizens of the United States, inasmuch as they were getting $112,000 to be distributed among them.

Let us follow that out a little, Mr. Chairman. Here is a manufacture built up at the expense of the people. The people are taxed for the benefit of Dubuque. At once it becomes a good city to live in. Labor finds a new field of employment and receives better wages. Idle labor seeks the city of Dubuque. Others say at once "it is a good place to keep a store." Business begins to revive in that city. Storekeepers go in there, and then there is another gentleman comes along who makes the discovery that it is a good place to buy land. Land values are advancing all the time in Dubuque; and so the town boomer and the land grabber get there and buy up all the vacant land.

Then what happens? Prices begin to go up. Men hold the land out of use. The rents begin to increase and the laborer who was getting a fair profit out of his labor finds that what he gets in extra wages he is forced to pay out in extra rent. The merchant finds his rent going up and is obliged to raise the price of his goods, and the burden of extra rents and extra taxes is shifted from shoulder to shoulder until at last it rests upon the farmer, and when you figure it all up at last, the lion's share of the profits growing out of this special privilege goes to the land speculator and to the protected monopolist, and not to the farmer or the laborer.

And what is true of Dubuque in this case is true of every city in the United States whose industries are built up by a legalized spoliation, by special privileges secured from Government by their paid attorneys in Congress.

Then an era of speculation sets in. We continually have these speculative periods. Prices go up beyond their normal condition, then reaction ensues, and panics follow. I have listened to men in this Hall who told us how prosperous we were under a low tariff; I have heard men say how prosperous we were under a high tariff, but I have failed to hear a single member satisfactorily explain the cause of the panic of 1873 under one of the highest tariffs we have ever had in this country. The protective tariff stimulates certain businesses beyond their normal condition and the requirements of trade, there results apparent overproduction, and in order to maintain prices combinations and trusts are organized, the output is cut down, labor is locked out to become a criminal or a tramp, and all grows out of what I believe to be an unnatural system of trade which in the last analysis is the distribution of the products of labor.

How does it come, Mr. Chairman, that labor needs protection? How does it come that some men in this country are in a position to grant to labor protection? What is labor? Is not labor the factor that produces all the wealth of the world? Whether it be on the farm or in the factory, is not labor the force that produces the wealth? How is it, then, that some gentlemen are in a position to grant privileges to labor? How does it come that labor needs protection in this country?

Did you ever think of that? In this country, that has but nineteen people to the square mile, this new and undeveloped country, not a State in the Union that has yet half its land occupied; with all its inventive genius and machinery, with all its great means of transportation for effecting the exchange of the products of the labor, with its untold and unmeasured resources in every form, how comes it that labor is insulted by having those who live upon it offer a tariff law to "protect" it. Does it not follow, gentlemen, that somebody has deprived labor of its natural rights?

Does it not follow, gentlemen, that labor, the king, labor, the sovereign, has been pushed from his throne where capital now reigns, a bastard monarch, in his stead? Does it not follow that the people have been deprived of their natural rights? We all know that in the first settlement of this country it was settled by men who came here to escape the protection of a ruling class, people made criminals by a bad state of society, not so bad probably as we have to-day, but still bad enough to produce criminals by law; but, coming here and finding a new continent undeveloped, with land free to all, developed into a higher state of society than that of any nation in the world, developed men of such genius that they produced apparently without effort a government which will yet lead to the highest state of individual liberty.

Again, take the history of Australia, which was originally largely settled by a criminal class. These people going there and having free access to the natural opportunities—the mines and forests and streams—for the production of wealth, finding no monopolies there, being left free to develop the resources of the country, to have their own homes and enjoy the rewards of their own industry, they gradually developed into the most advanced community on the face of the earth, and to-day that nation which originated out of a criminal class is furnishing you a ballot law with which to fight against the same kind of legislation that made criminals of them in the past.

How does it happen, then, that we, after this long period, are gradually falling back into the same old conditions of society, and that we to-day are filling the whole land with criminals? Why, in the city of New York alone last year there were eighty-one thousand arrests of criminals, many of them made criminals by law. Why? Simply because they were deprived of their natural and inalienable right of access to the great storehouse of wealth, the earth: because of the monopolies built up under this iniquitous system of protection. My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] "let the cat out of the bag" in regard to this system. Speaking in favor of the protective tariff, and showing how disastrous it would be to put certain articles on the free list, he read a dispatch dated at Ottawa, Ontario, March 10, as follows:

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, March 10.

Anticipating a removal of duties from coal imported into the United States, a syndicate of American capitalists have bonded several valuable coal areas in Cape Breton and Pictou, Nova Scotia, to enable them to compete with the Pennsylvania mines in the New England market, if coal is put on the free list.

That shows you what grows out of this protective-tariff system. Under that system these monopolies have grown up and capitalists have bought up the mineral deposits of this country everywhere that they could discover them. Over in the neighboring Commonwealth of Virginia there are 200,000 acres of the best iron deposits in the United States, but those deposits are not developed, they are not used, because they would come into competition with the iron mines of Lake Superior and Pennsylvania. And that land is assessed at the low valuation of $2.50 an acre. That is the system of monopoly which the protective tariff tends to foster.

Under the system of protection competition from abroad is shut out. The capitalists buy up the coal deposits, the iron deposits, all the mineral deposits of the land, and hold them out of use, and thereby labor is denied access to those resources of nature, and so a surplus of labor arises; a fierce struggle for existence among laborers sets in and then it is proposed to cure that evil by a protective-tariff system, which so far from opening up new avenues of production really enables the few to still further monopolize the natural resources of wealth.

I speak in the interest of the laborer. I can properly speak for him, because I have been a laborer all my life; having come in contact with laboring people I think I know their views and wishes as well as any lawyer or manufacturer. It appears to me that when the laborer exchanges his labor, although directly he may exchange it for money, he in fact exchanges his labor for the product of the farm or the factory. He wants something to live on; he wants something to eat, something to drink, something to wear. Now, when you put a protective tariff on those articles what do you do but increase their cost to him? And how do you benefit the laborer by increasing the cost of the products of the factory or the farm or anything else for which he must exchange his labor? Some good Republican will please tell me how the wages of the laborer are increased by increasing the cost of the articles for which he exchanges his labor? [Mr. SIMPSON paused for a reply. No one venturing to speak, he proceeded.]

Furthermore, we hear a good deal said on this [the Republican] side of the House about protecting American labor against the "pauper labor of Europe." Now, will some Republican tell me what nation do you want protection against? Do not all speak at once. There is surely some Republican who can tell me what nation in Europe he wants to protect our laborers against.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], in referring an hour or two ago to Calcutta, indicated one country against which our labor should be protected.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman tell me what nation he wishes to protect our laborers from?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have called the attention of my friend to the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SIMPSON. After all this gush over the laborer, can not any of you tell me what nation in Europe you want to protect the American laborer against? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Well, gentlemen, if you were frank you would say Great Britain. Is not that right? Great Britain is the nation that you fear. But, gentlemen, the facts are against you. The cheap labor of Europe is not in Great Britain. The highest wages paid in Europe to-day are paid in Great Britain, the nation that comes nearest to free trade. Oh, no; if you were not conscienceless hypocrites, trying to impose on the laborers of the country, you would say that you want protection from China.

China that has had a protective tariff for thousands of years—China that built a wall around her country cutting off all intercourse with the outside world—China under a protective tariff such as you are building up, pays the lowest wages in the world. You can not get away from the facts. Yet you passed a law here the other day that would be a disgrace to any civilized nation—to protect this country against the laborers of that high protective tariff country. Why did you do that? It was in the interest of the laborers of the State of California—California, one of the grandest States in this Union, although her resources are nowhere near development, a State with the grandest climate and most productive soil—in the interest of the people of such a State you come here asking protection against the Chinese laborer.

Why, because under this policy of protection you have allowed monopolies to buy up, to close in and hold out of use the larger portion of that grand State, denying labor access to that storehouse of wealth, so that in self-defense we are compelled to pass laws restricting immigration from other countries; and I, in defense of the laboring people, was compelled to vote for that bill. Oh, you protect labor! In Kansas we protect cattle and hogs—we feed and fatten them that we may eat them. That is the way you protect labor. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he voted for a law which was a "disgrace to civilization?"

Mr. SIMPSON. I did say that I was compelled to vote for that bill in view of the conditions which the Republican party has forced upon the country, and in defense of the laboring classes. Because there has been adopted in that State under our system of government a land monopoly which, in connection with a protective tariff, denies to labor access to the sources of wealth production, I was compelled, in defense of labor, to vote for that law which I know in principle is bad in every way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regard agricultural labor as the great ocean, in accordance with which every other form of labor must seek its level. If agriculture, more ancient than all other forms of labor, is not profitable, so that men seek the cities in order that things may reach a level, you may dam up the rivers, you may back up the creeks, you may undertake to hold back the flood, but finally there will be an overflow, and labor, like water, will seek its level in this great ocean. All other trades and professions are the bays and rivers. To raise their level it is only necessary to raise the level of the ocean.

You have placed a great burden upon agriculture. Why? Simply because under the existing system of indirect taxation the manufacturer, when you undertake to tax him shifts his burden to the middleman; in many cases the middleman can shift his burden to the consumer, but at last the shifting process must stop, and when it does, the burden rests upon the back of the agriculturists of this country. The statistics of the census report will bear me out in what I say. I quote from the Eleventh Census of the United States on farms, homes, and mortgages:

In ten Kansas counties out of nine farms two are owned free of debt; three are worked by tenants, and four are occupied by owners, subject to an incumbrance of 38 per cent of their value. In the Kansas counties out of ten homes three are owned free of debt; five are hired, and two are occupied by owners subject to an increase of 39 per cent of their value. This is not only true of Kansas, but taking ten Ohio counties—Ohio, which is the great manufacturing State, and the farmers ought to be prosperous if they are prosperous anywhere—in ten Ohio counties out of eight farms four are owned free of debt; three are worked by tenants, and one is occupied by owners subject to an incumbrance of 37 per cent of its value. In the Ohio counties out of fifteen homes four are owned free of debt; ten are hired, and one is occupied by owners subject to an incumbrance of 43 per cent of its value. In the Ohio counties outside of Cincinnati, out of twelve homes five are owned free of debt, and six are hired, and one is occupied by owners subject to an incumbrance.

And now I appeal to you gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber if these are not alarming conditions? I appeal to you if it is not time that we should address ourselves to these conditions, and see if there is not a road out of the difficulty. I appeal to you to cease your bickerings and quarrelings about party success. See if there is not some way to help the people of this country. We have seen the example of Ireland. We know what that means. When a nation becomes a nation of tenants and landlords, let us while it is time apply the remedy. You may call us calamity howlers. It is time that we had calamity howlers in this country. You can not afford to pass by and disregard the cry of the people.

I have here some facts that are startling, showing that we are a nation of borrowers; that this system intended to enrich the people, as its advocates claimed, has succeeded in impoverishing them.

And now, Mr. Chairman, to show you how protection protects the laborer, how it protects the farmer, I will quote some facts from the twenty-first annual report of the Massachusetts bureau of statistics and labor, page 177 to 258. This is in the manufacturing district; it is from the State where my friend Mr. WALKER is from, the gallant protector of the protective tariff. I will quote some facts and figures there to show how this has helped agriculture in the great State of Massachusetts, in the cradle of liberty, where the first gun that was fired in the defense of liberty that was heard all around the world, that first gun in defense of liberty fired by the farmers' sons; to show you how this protective tariff has helped the farmer I will quote the amount of abandoned farms in the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The extent of the abandonment is indicated in part in the recapitulation on pages 192 and 193, showing the total number of abandoned farms of the State by counties. From it we learn that there are 1,461 such farms, 689 of which are without buildings, while 772 are supplied with buildings. The aggregate acreage is 126,509½ acres, the assessed valuation being $1,076,328. Farms with buildings aggregate 66,650 acres, the total value of property being $690,000, while the farms without buildings aggregate 59,859½ acres.

Mr. WALKER. Does the gentleman care for the exact facts?

Mr. SIMPSON. The facts are what the people want, no matter what the gentleman from Massachusetts wants. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WALKER. Are you anxious for a statement of the facts? Do you want me to state it?

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman does not take too long.

Mr. WALKER. The persons employed in agriculture in Massachusetts have increased one-sixth in twenty years. The acres in cultivation have increased one-sixth. The value of agricultural lands have increased about one-half, and the agricultural products have doubled within that period. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is true that the old farms on the tops of the hills are abandoned, many of them—

Mr. SIMPSON. I am quoting from the bureau of labor statistics. I knew the gentleman from Massachusetts could answer better than anybody else. [Laughter.] But I think that this report will have a little more weight than the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER. Both statements are entirely reconcilable with each other. Certain lands have been abandoned.

Mr. SIMPSON. This report to which I have referred, and to which the gentleman can refer, for it is accessible to him, shows that these people have abandoned their lands because it was not profitable to live upon them any longer.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman allow a word?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly, on this subject.

Mr. WALKER. There is not a Western man who would take a New England farm as a gift if he knew the difficulties that beset farming in that climate.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is not a man with any sense in this country who would take a farm as a gift to-day either in New England or anywhere else while this iniquitous tariff is in existence, because he could not make a living upon it. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I have given the statistics in this table to which reference is made from the State of Massachusetts. But I understand that in New Hampshire the condition is still worse. This report, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts, shows that many of the abandoned farms are the best in his State.

These figures are from Massachusetts. I can assure gentlemen if they will look over the reports of other States they will find all the New England States in much the same condition and some of them much worse. These conditions have grown up right under the shadow of the factory, within the sound of the whistle and the bell, and while the manufacturing interests have grown, while the men who have had the benefits of protective tariff have grown rich and built mansions and live in grand style, the farmer has been driven from his farm, the sturdy agriculturist has been forced to become a tramp or a machine who works in those factories and surrenders the products of his labor to the protective-tariff baron. There are some 1,600 abandoned farms in the State of New Hampshire, and I understand that in the State of New Jersey the report of the commissioner of labor shows the same condition of affairs; that the abandoned farms are so numerous that the governor, looking over the figures of the statistician, would not allow the report to go out to the country; it was so damaging.

Mr. DOCKERY, in his speech in the House, quoted from the July report of the Superintendent of the Census, giving the amount of mortgage debt of the farms and homes of the country at $2,555,000,000. It is well understood that these figures have been kept as low as possible, because the present Administration, the defenders of this tariff system, did not want to make it appear that the farmers are getting in debt, and we can well suppose that those figures are very conservative, if they tell the truth. I will quote here some figures taken from the St. Louis Republic, which I suppose are nearly accurate. It says:

If all the real and personal property of Missouri, all its lands, houses, railroads, cattle, grain, stocks, farms, bonds, promissory notes, merchandise, and other property of all kinds was sold at auction for its total assessed value in 1890 it would take more than three times as much to pay this debt. In taking the States in alphabetical order in 1890, if they had been sold for the total assessed value of all their real and personal property, the proceeds of the sale of Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, and Georgia would have been only $2,545,000,000; $20,000,000 less than the amount of this mortgage debt imposed upon the farms and homes of the country under the past legislation of the Republican party. The annual interest on this debt at 10 per cent would be $256,000,000. If the State of Alabama had been sold at its assessed value in 1890, including all personal property, there would still have been a shortage of $50,000,000 on the interest of this single year, and throwing in Idaho at $25,000,000 and Arizona at $21,000,000, the total value of the two States and one Territory would have been still $13,000,000 short of the year's interest debt. Now, nearly all of this debt is on the States of the Mississippi Valley, nearly all of the interest is paid by the labor of the people of the Mississippi Valley, who are at the same time bearing the enormous burden of the Republican tax on trade.

We are not repudiators out there. The Republican party drove us into this debt, but we borrowed that money and we will repay it, principal and interest, all that is named in the bond. But we must have a system of trade that will allow us to exchange the products of our labor for the products of other people's labor; trade it, not in a restricted market, but in a free market. We must have a system of transportation which will enable us to get the goods to market without paying tribute to Jay Gould and Vanderbilt and the other robbers that stand at the head of the railroad organizations of this country. The Republican party, through its leaders, has poured out copious streams of sympathy for poor, down-trodden Ireland, and I quote the following from the National Tribune, which I hope the Republicans will consider good Republican authority. It says:

England has mortgages on Irish lands to the amount of eight hundred million, at an average interest of 5 per cent. This would make an annual tribute of forty million a year from the little island to the English capitalists. As the population of Ireland is 5,000,000, this would make an annual interest charge of $8 per head or $40 per family. No wonder at all that the people of Ireland are poor.

Now, Kansas can beat this all to pieces. According to the last United States census Shylock has mortgages on Kansas lands to the amount of $243,146,226. The population is but 1,427,096. At an average interest of 10 per cent this would make an annual tribute of $24,314,681.60 a year from the people of Kansas to Shylock, or an annual interest charge of $17 per head or $85 per family. And yet we are told by the old parties that we are the most prosperous people on the face of the earth.

I want the Republican leaders, when they meet in annual convention again, to save some of their sympathy for the citizens of this country. Thirty years ago the people of Kansas received that grand State fresh from the hands of nature. It is peopled by the most industrious class, I say, in America, the most frugal, sober, and industrious, and yet, under present laws and present conditions, they have seen themselves sinking into debt from year to year, until now they are about to lose their homes and surrender everything they have got to the cormorants who have besieged legislation and passed laws in the interest of corporate powers.

I want to read now a statement showing about how much our foreign obligations are, and then I am going to quote a little from my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]. The English income-tax returns, which are considerably below the true mark instead of over it, for no man exaggerates his income for taxing purposes, show that in 1890 English taxpayers admitted the receipts of a hundred and fifty millions from foreign governments and railroads, and a hundred millions more from other foreign investments.

Mr. WATSON. If my friend will allow me, I will remind him that Dr. Norvin Green, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, testified that we owed foreign countries $2,000,000,000 on which we were paying about $80,000,000 a year.

Mr. SIMPSON. This is what we pay Great Britain. According to the table published in the Journal, one-fourth of the foreign investments by English capitalists is made in the United States, and it follows that we pay to Great Britain alone sixty millions as annual interest on our large debt. This condition of things is so far from showing any signs of change that it threatens to become permanent.

The foreign investments of English capitalists are reported to have increased 50 per cent in volume since 1885. Robert Giffen, England's greatest statistical authority, estimates them at five thousand million. The inference is that England now has from fifteen to eighteen hundred millions in American investments and that she actually levies to-day a tax upon the incomes derived by her citizens through American investments more than ten times greater than that other historic tax which she once attempted to impose upon the colonies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that shows where the surplus of this country is going. That shows where the stream of wealth that the laborers and producers of this country are creating is flowing to. England has adopted this policy, that comes by free trade: When she sends out a shipload of goods to any foreign country she endeavors to trade it off for a shipload of goods that is worth more than the one she sent out. She has based her policy upon this principle, that a nation gets richer and gathers more wealth by bringing goods into her territory instead of sending goods out, and when she sends out a shipload of goods it is sent out on the principle that she must get another shipload of goods that is worth more than the one that she sent out.

It is by pursuing this policy that England has been able to gather to her shores a great part of the wealth of the world, that she is trading all over the world; her ships are found in every port, and she has become the mistress of the world because she has adopted this true policy of trade, while we who have adopted the protective tariff and are sending out more wealth than we bring in are laying up a loss every year, and this will account for the sixty odd millions in gold that went abroad in the last year, and that have failed to come back. We are sending a steady stream of wealth out of this country instead of bringing it in. What we want, gentlemen, is more goods. We want to trade for things that we need; and in opposition to what my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] says, instead of calamity coming from a flood of good things, I apprehend that what we want is to have the world flood us with good things.

Did you ever hear of any country sending things into another country when she did not take something out in return? During the arguments on the silver bill we heard from the Republicans and the Democrats both—because they are a unit on that question, so to speak—that great danger would come to us from European nations flooding this country with silver. They were going to send silver into our country. I said, "Let it come." It is not reasonable to suppose they will give us silver for nothing. I apprehend that when they send silver, they will take our surplus wheat and corn and cotton in pay for it; and taking our surplus out will increase the wealth of this country, because they will leave some of the things that we want and that will be of greater value to us. Our debts are payable in dollars, not in 10-cent corn and 6-cent cotton.

The same thing is true of other countries. If they bring in their goods here, it is evident that they are not going to give them to us for nothing; and in exchanging them they must take out such things as wheat, corn, and cotton; and having a large surplus of those goods, they are the things we want to get rid of, and the goods they have are the ones we want. My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] says if we were to tear down this protective wall it would flood us with disaster. Why, gentlemen, it would be about as reasonable to suppose that the Israelites when they were wandering in the wilderness would have roofed themselves over for fear the manna would fall upon them to sustain them. [Laughter.]

This protective-tariff wall that the gentleman speaks of is keeping good things out, and not bad things. The wall that he spoke about, I remember, has been compared with that great wall the patient Dutchman built around Holland to reclaim it from the ocean. The Hollanders devote a certain number of days every year to repairing the dikes. With his willow basket filled with sand he repairs it and puts back all the earth that has been removed. So he watches and guards against the tyrant that is continually wearing down the wall to reclaim the realm that man has won from him.

But, gentlemen, there was a time in the history of Holland when the Prince of Orange saw Louis XIV flooding his land with troops to enslave the people, and he said: "Break down the dikes; give Holland back to the flood." Why? Because he would rather have the sea, enemy as it was, than have the despotism of the French king's rule over the people of that country. I say to-day, "Break down this tariff wall." I would rather have this flood of goods, even if it brings in the products of cheap labor of Europe. I would rather have that system than to have the present system of high protective tariff, a tariff that is bringing the American people to bankruptcy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATSON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman be extended, so that he may be allowed to finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SIMPSON. I desire ten minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of gentlemen here to this free-trade theory, that has never been adopted by any nation in the world. The statesmen of Great Britain have come nearer to it than any other statesmen. Universal bankruptcy and poverty were staring the people of Great Britain in the face. They adopted this system of free trade, or near to it, and to-day she has become one of the richest nations in the world.

To the British statesman belongs the glory of having thus far applied the deductions of science to the art of government. But in so doing they have to take on themselves the risk of failure and confront the possible disgrace of having adopted and acted upon false instead of true principle. Free trade before them had been an idea. They made it a policy. Their action formed a turning point in the commercial history of the whole world, and out of that we should learn a lesson. It would be well enough therefore to look over the history of England for the last fifty years and see what effect this policy has had upon her. I quote from Mongredien Free-Trade Movement in England the following:

In 1840 the population of the United Kingdom was 26,487,000; in 1878 it was estimated at 33,799,000; increase, 7,312,000. In the former year London contained 1,700,000 inhabitants; in the latter, 3,800,000; increase, 2,100,000. So that the growth of London during the last thirty-eight years alone largely exceeded the total growth it had attained during the previous thousand years. In 1878 the emigration of British subjects to America, Australia, and all other places comprised 112,902 persons. The number who embarked at our ports for those places was much greater; but it consisted largely of emigrants from Germany and other Continental states, who took their way through this country for the convenience of passage. On the other hand the number of immigrants in 1878 was 77,951, many of them being returned emigrants; so that, on the balance, the yearly exodus from the United Kingdom is much smaller than is generally imagined.

Trade.—In 1840 the foreign trade of the United Kingdom (combined exports and imports) amounted to £172,133,000, equivalent to £6 9s. 11½d. per head of the population. In 1878 it amounted to £614,255,000, or £18 3s. 6d. per head, a marvelous rate of increase. In the United States the proportion of foreign trade to the population is £4 13s. per head. In France it was, in 1876, £8 3s. per head. In Russia it was, in 1876, £1 9s. per head.

Revenue.—The public revenue for the year 1840 was £51,850,000; for the year 1878, £21,508,000 pounds; and the latter sum presses far less heavily on the people now than did the former sum on the people then. The income tax in 1843 (the first year of its incidence) yielded for every penny in the pound £201,000. In 1878 the taxable incomes had so increased that every penny in the pound of income tax yielded £1,917,000.

Consumption per head.—Of those articles which are partly produced at home and partly imported the consumption per head can not be exactly ascertained, because the extent of the home production can not be accurately defined. But of those articles consumed by the people which are wholly imported from abroad the consumption per head is easily calculated, and it is as follows for the two years which we have taken for comparison:

Consumption per head of the population of the United Kingdom in 1840 and 1878 of the following articles:

Articles.	1840.	1878.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
Tea.....	1.22	4.66
Sugar (raw).....	15.20	48.56
Coffee.....	1.08	.87
Rice.....	0.90	7.50
Currants and raisins.....	1.45	4.49
Tobacco.....	.66	1.45

The immensely improved condition of the working classes of this country is clearly shown by the above table; for the wealthy and middle classes must have consumed nearly as much per head of tea, sugar, etc., in 1840 as they do now, and therefore it is chiefly among the wage-receivers of the community that the largely increased consumption has been distributed.

Savings banks.—The deposits in these banks, which are national institutions, consist of individually small sums, being savings invested voluntarily by the wage-earners of the community. In 1841 the amount of these deposits (after deducting withdrawals) was £24,475,000; in 1878 it was £75,967,000. This large increment has been gradual and continuous, and affords another distinct proof of the enhanced prosperity of the working classes since the advent of free trade.

Pauperism.—The number of adult able-bodied paupers who were receiving relief in England and Wales on the 1st of January, 1849, was 201,644, out of a population of 17,565,000. On the 1st of January, 1878, the number had diminished to 97,927, out of a population of 24,854,000. We have been obliged to take the year 1849 for comparison, because it is the first year for which the actual number of persons receiving relief on a given day was returned, and the comparison is confined to England and Wales, because no returns exist for Scotland and Ireland. The number of paupers from age, infirmity, sickness, etc., had also largely decreased in proportion to the population.

Crime.—In 1840 the convictions for criminal offenses of all kinds throughout the United Kingdom were 24,000, with a population of 24,487,000. In 1873 they were 17,038, with a population of 33,799,000; that is to say, that during those thirty-eight years crime had diminished in this country by one-half, while the population had increased by 7,300,000. Could there be a stronger proof of the vast moral as well as material progress of the people? Note also that this decrease of crime was no sudden, fitful, or accidental circumstance, but was the gradual result, year after year, of permanent influences.

Wealth.—An eminent statistic, Mr. R. Giffen, has by a series of elaborate calculations arrived at the conclusion that in 1878 the total capital of the people of the United Kingdom might be reckoned as a minimum at £25,000,000,000. "This," he says, "is the capitalized value of the income derived from capital, using as far as possible the data of the income-tax returns as the basis of the estimate, and with the addition of an estimate of the amount of capital in use not yielding an income." By a similar process he has made out that the total capital of the country in 1865 was £16,103,000,000, and, consequently, that during the intervening ten years the national estate had improved at the rate of £2,100,000,000 per annum. In 1875 the amount assessed to the income tax was £571,000,000; in 1865 it was £396,000,000. Now, in 1843, when the income tax was imposed, the amount assessed to it was only £251,000,000.

Let us then take the proportion between the taxable income and the national capital as given by Mr. Giffen for the two periods, 1865 and 1875, and apply it to the £251,000,000 taxable income of 1843, and we shall find that it gives £3,890,000,000 as the total capital of the country in 1843. This, of course, is only an approximate valuation, but it can not be far wrong, and it leads to the conclusion that the capital of the country has far more than doubled since 1840, while the increase of the population has only been 28 per cent. This enormous mass of wealth makes our national debt an easy burden compared with its pressure in 1840, and the process of accumulation is still going on at the average rate of at least £200,000,000 per annum.

Commercial marine.—The fluctuations in our progress under this head are curious and characteristic. In 1840 the tonnage of the registered vessels of the United Kingdom was 2,571,000 tons. In 1849, when our protective navigation laws were repealed, tonnage was 3,095,000; an increase under the old system of £523,000 tons in nine years. In 1849 our trade was thrown open to the shipping of all the world and our shipowners and shipbuilders were told that they would be swept away by the competition. What happened? In 1858, nine years after the repeal of the navigation laws, the tonnage of the registered vessels of the United Kingdom was 4,325,000, an increase of 1,229,000 tons over the tonnage of 1849. So that while during the nine years of protection the tonnage of the registered vessels of the United Kingdom increased by 523,000 tons, the increase during the nine years of unrestricted competition that followed 1849 was 1,229,000 tons; and the expansion of our mercantile navy has been going on ever since. In 1878 the tonnage of the United Kingdom was 6,236,000 and the greatest part of the entire international trade of the world is conducted in British bottoms.

To afford some insight into the present distribution of the carrying trade, we may state that the total tonnage of the vessels that discharged and unloaded cargoes in 1878 at the various ports of the United Kingdom was 42,900,000 tons, of which 30,257,000 were British and 12,643,000 were foreign. These 12,643,000 tons of foreign shipping were distributed as follows:

	Tons.
Norwegian.....	2,444,000
German.....	2,270,000
Swedish.....	1,133,000
Danish.....	1,058,000
United States of America.....	988,000
Italian.....	981,000
All other countries.....	3,729,000
Total.....	12,603,000

Thus we have taken stock, as it were, of the material condition of the people at the two periods referred to, viz. 1840, under protection, and 1878, under free trade. The progress that the nation has made in wealth and prosperity during these thirty-eight years seems almost incredible, and one is tempted to think that the picture that has been traced of that progress is the work of a heated imagination. But no! The statements made rest on the solid foundation of attested facts and the unimpeachable testimony of official records. Their truth may be tested by everyone who chooses to inquire.

But, Mr. Chairman, Great Britain has not adopted a system of free trade; neither do the Democrats advocate it, as they are charged by the Republicans. Why, Mr. Chairman, they do not understand what free trade means. Free trade means that the products of labor shall not be taxed either in production or exchange. Whether it comes from a foreign nation or whether it is produced at home the product of labor should escape taxation. Taxes should never be levied upon the products of labor. The good things which labor produces are what you want in this world, and you should never discourage the production of wealth.

Furthermore, free trade means relief from taxation on personal property. It means free access to the natural storehouses of wealth to produce something on which to trade. Labor can not produce anything out of the air. It can produce but very little from the sea. It must have access to land, and any system which places the land of the country in the hands of the few is fatal not only to production but to trade, for without easy access to land the laborer can produce nothing to exchange.

This brings on the transportation question, which is really a part of the question of trade. For example: When the tariff was taken off sugar and sugar was being reduced in price, the Western railroads formed a combination and raised their tariff on sugar, so that what we escaped in duties to the custom-house we paid to the railways.

Mr. Chairman, we have built up by special privilege great lines of transportation throughout this country, which, under our modern system of division of labor, each man must use in getting his product to the consumer.

We have granted special privileges to railroad corporations whereby they can levy a toll on every man who uses them in sending their goods to the public markets. They lay in wait and levy a tariff upon the products of labor, a tribute which amounts to more than $350,000,000 per annum more than a reasonable profit upon the capital invested in the roads and rolling stock. The right to tax is admitted by everybody, but we believe all taxes should foster production and trade and not speculation and monopoly. We would put a tax upon those who buy up and hold out of use the mineral deposits, the coal deposits, the iron deposits, and the copper deposits. They hold these things out of use so that their increased value can go into their pockets. We would take that value to the community and give it back to the people who made the value; and this would open up new fields for the laborer, and instead of going around to the manufacturer begging for the privilege of producing wealth, he could go and produce it without being robbed by the capitalists. This is what we mean by free trade: Access to opportunities to produce wealth and perfect freedom of exchange.

We say that this is another tax upon labor which cripples it, which absorbs the wealth that it produces. It is a part of the grand scheme of protection, and never will the laborer be free from the oppression of his master, never will the farmer be free from the oppression of these monopolies, until the Government resumes its natural functions, takes charge of these great public highways, and says to the people: "This railway is the evolved dirt road, and is to be controlled by us." And then, instead of spending millions of dollars upon the rivers that have now become useless as means of transportation, we shall say to the people: "These iron roads have now become the great highways of the country; we will run them under Government supervision and let him that wants to, run his train upon them." [Laughter and applause.]

There remains, Mr. Chairman, another great factor in trade. To my mind money is one of the greatest factors in exchange. In the development of society we have come to the use of money instead of barter. We say that it is a function of the Government to furnish the necessary currency of the country, and to relieve us from the grasp of the national-bank system. We believe it is the function of government to furnish this essential medium of exchange at cost without the intervention of the national banks. We believe that the money question is a part of the great question of trade, or so mixed up with it that you can not separate them.

We believe that gentlemen here are honest in their advocacy of the protective tariff, some of them at least, all except those who have personal interests involved. [Laughter.] We believe that the Democrats are honest but a little timid, afraid, just now, of doing anything that will hurt their party. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I was very much gratified when I had the privilege of coming into this Hall and sitting here with the great statesmen of the country, and I can assure you that I had a very high and exalted opinion of those statesmen until as time went on I came to learn more about them and their proceedings here. [Laughter.] Then there came back to my mind a story told by Lucian, the Roman writer, of a man who had gotten a lot of monkeys and educated them to perform on the stage till at last they went through their performances just like human beings, until one day some wag in the audience threw a handful of nuts and raisins on the stage, whereupon the performers went down at once on all fours scrambling for the nuts and raisins. [Laughter.] They were no longer men but monkeys. [Laughter.]

I saw here exalted statesmen advocating great policies of state, and I had an idea that they were truly interested in this great country, until all at once some special privilege was thrown upon the stage, and then they suddenly got down on all fours scrambling to see who should first get his little special privilege through this great body of lawmakers. [Laughter.]

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that that is what is behind this protective-tariff system. We believe that once you begin to take off the special privileges you will rapidly recruit the ranks of the reformers until finally you will entirely overthrow this bad system of trade, and we shall be able to take our place by the side of the greatest nations or ahead of the greatest nations in the world. There is no good reason why the people of this country should be poor. There is no reason why the farmers of this country should be in debt. There is no reason why there should be two and a half billion dollars of mortgage indebtedness upon the farms and homes of this country.

With our productive capacity, with our steam power and water power, and our improvements in machinery sufficient to do the work of 22,000,000 men per annum, there is no good reason why there should be 1,000,000 tramps in this country. There is no reason why there should be 100,000 people in the city of New York living upon charity. There is no reason that 7,000 paupers should be buried in the potter's field of the city of New York every year. There is no reason why the farmers and farmers' wives of the West and the South should go clothed in rags, but there is every reason why this should be the greatest nation, the wealthiest nation, the happiest nation on the face of the globe. [Applause.]

[Mr. COBB of Alabama addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee now proceed to consider the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. CLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not be in order until the bill is being considered by paragraphs. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be closed and that it be now considered under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, before the committee resumes consideration of the bill, and in order to move to add thirty minutes to the length of this day's session, I ask unanimous consent that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] desires to dispose of this bill to-morrow, and Mr. DALZELL, the member of the committee who had in charge the preparation of the minority report, is absent to-day; but I have telegraphed him, and he will be here in the morning. It is understood that the bill may be reported back to the House this evening, and that to-morrow, before a vote is taken upon its passage, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] shall speak for an hour, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that that matter had better be arranged in the House.

Mr. BURROWS. If the committee agree to it, I suppose there will be no objection in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can not regulate the proceedings of the House.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and I will probably have no difficulty in arranging the matter. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TURNER. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the hour fixed by the rule for the recess be extended to-day for half an hour.

There being no objection, the hour for the recess was extended until half past 5 o'clock.

And then, on motion of Mr. TURNER, the House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following articles, when imported, shall be exempt from duty, namely: bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of flax, jute, or jute butts; cards, roving frames, winding frames, softeners, and other machinery purchased abroad and used in the manufacture of bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar materials suitable for covering cotton; cotton gins, and also hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel, flared, splayed, or punched, with or without buckles or fastenings.

Mr. TURNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 12 and 13, the words, "And hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel, flared, splayed, or punched."

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that this amendment is offered in response to some suggestions made by gentlemen who are interested in the items included in the amendment, which constitute the raw material out of which hoops are made. I wish to state further that the Committee on Ways and Means, in instructing me to report this bill, meant to confine it to the single item of ties used for the packing or baling of cotton or whatever could be used for that purpose. I myself would have been willing to allow the materials covered by the amendment to enter into the bill; but it is due to my colleagues on the committee to say that the purpose of the bill was as I have stated. Therefore I have offered the amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, in considering this bill, so far as cotton-bagging is concerned, we ought to go back to the summer of 1888—nearly four years ago—when the country was startled by the announcement that this material, so important to the cotton-planter of the South, had been increased in price (without any notice being given and without any known cause for the increase) from about 7 cents to 14 cents a yard. Very soon afterward it was discovered that the reason for this sudden and enormous increase was that a powerful trust had been organized to control the bagging industry.

During that summer three investigations of that trust were made by Congress, and the testimony elicited in those investigations throws the very strongest light upon the merits of this bill. I will read a few extracts from that testimony to illustrate the power which, under the prohibitory tariff existing previously to the McKinley bill, the manufacturers of bagging were by means of this trust enabled to exercise. I read from testimony before the Senate committee:

The CHAIRMAN. I see those contracts bear the date of April 14.

Mr. STURGIS. April 14 and 16.

The CHAIRMAN. You were before us on the 11th of June?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. These contracts were in existence then?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And fully perfected?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes, sir; as they are now.

Senator BECK. The foreign manufacturers could not make bagging for the cotton raised in America, could they?

Mr. STURGIS. They could not, under the present tariff laws.

Senator BECK. I am speaking of the laws as they exist. They could not make it under the present laws, and therefore they only make the bagging that is needed for the other one-quarter?

Mr. STURGIS. Of course.

Senator BECK. Therefore you caught them without any supplies.

Mr. STURGIS. Yes.

Senator BECK. This contract was made in April, was it not?

Mr. STURGIS. Yes.

Senator BECK. And you were here in July?

Mr. STURGIS. In June.

Senator BECK. And you kept the fact concealed from the committee, then?

Mr. STURGIS. I did, and from everybody else I could.

Senator BECK. And you did it on purpose to keep the people of the country from ascertaining the existence of your pool, so that no bagging could be made anywhere else?

Mr. STURGIS. Most certainly. We were in to make money, as I have testified.

Later on we have the evidence of Mr. Gratz, a prominent member of this bagging trust. I read from his examination:

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the active person to manage this?

Mr. GRATZ. It was done principally through the office of Warren, Jones & Gratz, and some part of it at the office of L. Waterbury & Co. I think we made eight or ten leases or contracts to close mills, and probably twenty contracts of purchase of material; and L. Waterbury & Co. made four contracts with mills, one contract for the purchase of material; and Nevins & Co., of Boston, made one contract with a mill.

The CHAIRMAN. So that your concern and Waterbury & Co. did the active work?

Mr. GRATZ. We did the active work. We think to-day we could get 25 cents a yard for bagging as easily as 12 cents, but we do not care to put up the price so high, as it would look like extortion. The additional price now being charged amounts to about 35 cents a bale on cotton, and as the average cotton planter raises about five bales annually, the additional tax on the average planter amounts to $1.75 a year; somewhere in the neighborhood of the same amount of money he spends per month for tobacco.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, if he uses it?

Mr. GRATZ. He mostly uses it, and mixes it with whisky.

There is the idea entertained by these gentlemen—that they have the right to extract from the cotton-planter just so much of his spare money as they think they can squeeze out of him under an operation of this sort. Farther on Mr. Gratz says:

After buying enough bagging and securing control of enough mills to get two-thirds of all the bagging required for this year's crop, we waited to see whether the Mills bill would give us a rate of protection sufficient to enable us to continue in business another year. It was agreed that in case there was protection sufficient to insure us the continuance of our business the price of bagging would not be materially raised; that, however, in case no sufficient protection was left, we would advance the price of bagging from time to time as much as was deemed advisable, in order to get out of the business this year as nearly as possible enough money to pay for our machinery. This policy has been pursued to this day, and we hope and expect to continue it.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut who spoke sometime ago on this floor laid stress upon the fact of the enormous amount of capital invested in this bagging industry. Here is one of the leaders of this business, one of the chief organizers of the trust, declaring that if they were allowed to have their way during that one season by increasing the price from 7 to 14 cents a yard, they would be enabled to obtain in that way enough to pay for their whole investment.

I read further from the testimony of Mr. Gratz:

We believe it will be impossible to produce any sufficient quantity of bagging in time so as to interfere materially with the sales of our bagging, no matter what the prices should be. We investigated that point very carefully and found the mills abroad were so full of contracts for other goods that they had but very few looms which could make this particular kind of bagging set up in their mills, and that it would take so long a time to get the mills ready to manufacture this bagging that they could not wait these other contracts for the other goods.

Then he says, alluding to some previous arrangements made by the manufacturers:

The others were contracts covering proper and exactly legitimate business, and these are contracts to control production, as well as to divide the profits. Therefore they might be called illegitimate contracts.

Here one of the leaders of the trust admits that their combination was an "illegitimate" one, and yet the Republicans in both Houses of Congress have never ceased to deny that there was any trust formed.

Before the House committee Mr. Gratz testified:

Q. What was the price of 2-pound bagging before this association went into operation—say the last of March or the first of April?

A. From the last of February until the middle of March a large amount was sold at prices South from which, if the freight was deducted, the prices in New York would have been from 5½ to 6½ cents for 2-pound bagging.

Q. Let us see what the increase would be. Bagging last spring was 7½ cents, how much higher now do you say it is than 7½ cents?

A. It was 7½ cents, and it is 12½ now.

Q. That is 5 cents a yard from the mill to the merchant?

A. Six and a half by five would be 32½ cents a bale.

Q. Without the merchant's profits having been added to it, however?

A. He would charge a profit on the 7½ cents, being what you would call probably a legitimate profit, but he would also charge a proportionate profit on the 5 cents, which would probably make an increased cost to the planter, say of 5½ cents, bagging being sold in the South on very close margins. It would be 6½ times 5½ cents, which would be 35½ cents a bale.

Q. That would be $350.00 per million bales, and seven times that would be $2,450,000. Have you a definite idea of the amount of capital invested in bagging mills?

A. It is very hard to say the amount of capital, because the real estate in some instances would be necessarily measured with the bagging mill as part of the institution, and in others it would be difficult to divert the other business, some buildings being made especially for this and fit for nothing else, and some property being applicable for this and for nothing else, so I could not estimate exactly the amount of capital invested.

Q. You have seen an estimate?

A. I have not seen an estimate except in the rough. As far as our own institution is concerned, our calculation is, that if we could secure in this year's business 60 per cent of the profits you talk about here we would have gotten pretty much our whole investment, but that would not apply to others, because we own more real estate, and that estimate covers nothing except bare bagging machinery.

I hope gentlemen on the other side will listen to this frank admission:

Our calculation is that if we could secure in this year's business 60 per cent of the profits you talk about here we would have gotten pretty much our whole investment.

What a complete condemnation of a prohibitory tariff to place it in the power of a few manufacturers by a stroke of the pen to exact in one season from the cotton producers of the South more than enough to pay for their entire investment in machinery!

The CHAIRMAN. What is the price of bagging now? I believe I have not asked that?

Mr. GRATZ. Twelve and one-half cents a yard to-day; will be one-fourth of a cent higher Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. What is occurring to advance the price?

Mr. GRATZ. We thought we could get that much more.

Senator BECK. You have the market effectually cornered?

Mr. GRATZ. We have it effectually cornered, and there is no power on earth can stop us except some of us die or turn thieves on the rest.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that was before the passage of the McKinley law. But that law really gave to the bagging manufacturers an equally prohibitory rate, because the duty on jute was removed; jute now comes in free. As in other cases quoted here yesterday, so in this case, these gentlemen went before the McKinley committee two years ago; and just the protection which they asked for they got—they themselves fixed the rate of duty. So that to-day under existing law, with the rate of duty which these bagging manufacturers themselves asked for, we see that it is entirely in their power to control absolutely the manufacture of the article in this country. They can put up the price whenever they see fit to do so.

Four years ago they ran it up nearly 100 per cent. There is nothing in the world to prevent them from doing the same thing to-day. Thus this great industry, so valuable to the country, is completely under their control if they choose to exercise their power. Is it consistent with free institutions that any set of people in this country should have such dominion over the business of others?

Now, of how much importance is the cotton industry? During last year the cotton planters of the South shipped to foreign countries $290,712,898 worth of cotton—about one-third of our entire export. And they receive no protection from the Government—none whatever. If they can compete with the world in the markets of Liverpool, why are not these gentlemen who manufacture this bagging able to do the same thing in this country? The farmer's market is 300 miles away, the manufacturer's market is here at home, at their very doors. For the year ending June 30 last we shipped to foreign countries 5,783,101 bales of cotton, Great Britain alone taking 3,359,846 bales. The home market, of which so much is said on the other side of the House, is of small consequence to the cotton farmer.

Not only is this so, but another danger confronts the farmer. Through some extraordinary movement a large amount of cotton is being imported into this country. Let me give the figures for a few years past. In 1887 the importation of cotton into the United States was $533,000 in value; in 1888 it was $744,000; in 1889, $1,194,000; in 1890, $1,392,000, and in 1891 it more than doubled, increasing to a total of $2,825,000. So not only, Mr. Chairman, have these cotton farmers to contend with all the difficulties that already surround them, but they must meet this foreign importation, small to be sure, but rapidly increasing.

Now, when we contrast the importance of these industries—the production of the cotton on the one side, and the manufacture of bagging on the other—how can the House hesitate what course it shall pursue in this matter?

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for Congress to do anything for the cotton-planter except relieve him of some of the heavy burdens placed upon him by unjust laws. I have no time to discuss that greatest outrage of increasing the duties on cotton-ties to over 100 per cent. It is a well-known fact that the price of cotton has never been lower than it is now. We would be false to every duty not to do all in our power to help the farmer. We mean no harm to the bagging manufacturer and are sure he will suffer none. Jute is already free, and this bill which gives to the farmer free bagging, free ties, and free gins, gives also to the manufacturer free machinery. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, the State of Colorado has vast resources for the manufacture of iron and steel. An immense plant has already been established near the city of Pueblo, and is now employing from 1,500 to 2,000 workmen. It is in successful operation, and has been for some years. It is rapidly increasing its business. The vice-president of this Colorado Coal and Iron Company writes to me that this bill will seriously injure their line of business, and I desire to send to the desk and ask to have read a letter bearing upon this particular question.

PUEBLO, COLO., March 14, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to a bill before the Ways and Means Committee called the "Turner bill," which we understand is introduced before the House on the representation that the same is intended to provide free cotton-ties for Southern cotton-raisers. The wording of the bill, however, makes hoop and band iron free, and as band iron technically includes everything from a foot wide and an inch thick down, it would make free of duty a large proportion of the merchant bar iron now receiving protection under the McKinley bill, and our interests as manufacturers of this iron in the State of Colorado would be seriously injured by the passage of such a measure.

It is a well-known fact that the Rocky Mountains contain large quantities of iron ore and the coal and coke necessary for utilizing the same, and there is no doubt within a few years this region will absorb the investment that goes on from year to year in the production of steel and iron manufactures, and it will be a serious blow to the State should the present protection be reduced in any way.

Kindly give this matter your attention, and greatly oblige,

Yours respectfully,

THE COLORADO COAL AND IRON COMPANY,
By HENRY S. GROVE, Vice-President.

HON. HOSEA TOWNSEND,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, in the city of Denver—

Mr. TURNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, the amendment which I have offered will strike from the bill the item to which reference is there made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that is probably true. I have noticed the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the people of Colorado are exceedingly enterprising and progressive, and they are endeavoring to build up the iron and steel industry, amongst others. In the city of Denver there have been efforts progressing for some time to establish a steam rolling mill, which proposes to manufacture, amongst other things, steel cotton-ties. I have a letter from a gentleman representing this company bearing upon this subject, and showing the effect of the passage of this bill, that it will most seriously injure if it does not entirely stop that industry; and I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Is this for manufacturing cotton-ties?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Where?

Mr. TOWNSEND. At Denver. I ask the Clerk to read this letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DENVER, COLO., March 7, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith you will find copy of H. R. 6005. Associated with a number of gentlemen in this city I have been persistently at work for the past six months to establish a steel rolling mill which should manufacture, among other steel products, steel cotton-ties, which could be sold in Texas, and which are now sold from Cleveland, St. Louis, and other points to the extent of six to eight hundred cars annually.

I need not say to you that these goods ought to be manufactured and sold from Colorado; neither need I say that if not protected as at the present time we can not make a success of our enterprise. We have succeeded in getting a freight-tariff rate established that will protect us against any point so that when established we reach any point in Texas as cheaply as can St. Louis.

I need not say to you, this enterprise has cost at the present time a vast amount of steady, patient work, and we most earnestly request that you will lend your assistance toward the defeat of any resolution of such purport as the one inclosed.

Yours, very truly,

E. H. WEBB,

For the Denver Steel Rolling Mill Company.

HON. HOSEA TOWNSEND,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Duplicates to Hon. H. M. TELLER, Hon. E. O. WOLCOTT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I simply desire to say, Mr. Chairman, representing as I do those interests, and the people desiring to build up those industries, I most emphatically, in their behalf, protest against the passage of any such bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "fastenings," in the fourteenth line, insert the following:

"For the purpose of supplying any deficiency in the revenues of the Government that may arise from the passage of this bill it is herein provided that the unit of value in the United States shall be the standard silver dollar as now coined, consisting of 412½ grains standard silver, or the gold dollar of 23.8 grains standard gold; that the standard gold and silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private. Any holder of gold or silver bullion of the value of $100 or more, of standard fineness, shall be entitled to have the same struck into any authorized standard coins of the United States, free of charge, at the mints of the United States, or the owner of the bullion may deposit the same at such mints and receive therefor coin notes equal in amount to the coinage value of the bullion deposited, and the bullion thereupon shall become the property of the Government. That the coin notes so issued shall be in denominations not less than $1 nor more than $1,000, and shall be a legal tender in like manner and invested with the same monetary uses as the standard gold and silver coins of the United States.

"That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to issue or reissue gold or silver certificates or Treasury notes provided for in the act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes.' That all such certificates and Treasury notes when received in the Treasury shall be canceled and destroyed and coin notes provided for in the first section of this act shall be issued in lieu of the certificates and Treasury notes so canceled and destroyed: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to change, modify, or alter the legal-tender character of such certificates or notes now issued.

"That the coin notes herein authorized may be reissued, but the amount at any time outstanding shall not be greater than four times the value of the coin and the bullion at coinage value held in the Treasury.

"That the said coin notes shall be redeemed in coin on demand at the Treasury or any subtreasury of the United States; and the bullion deposited shall be coined as fast as may be necessary for such redemption.

"That any holder of full legal-tender gold or silver coins of the United States, to the amount of $10 or more, may deposit the same at the Treasury or any subtreasury of the United States and receive therefor coin notes herein authorized.

"That the act of July 14, 1890, hereinbefore cited, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

"That so soon as France shall reopen her mints to the free and unrestricted coinage of silver at her present ratio, namely, 15½ pounds of silver to be worth 1 pound of gold, troy, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to immediately make public proclamation of that fact, whereupon the said ratio shall be the legal ratio in the United States, and thereafter the standard silver dollar shall consist of 400 grains of standard silver, and the laws relating to the standard silver dollars of 412½ grains standard silver shall be applicable to the new dollar of 400 grains standard silver.

"That the silver dollars of 412½ grains then in the Treasury or thereafter coming into the Treasury shall immediately and as fast as practicable be coined into dollars of 400 grains standard silver. Any gain or seigniorage arising therefrom shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act."

Mr. TURNER. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane. I did not hear the reading of the first paragraph of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLOVER], because my attention was occupied, but I understand it to be the free-coinage bill, and I submit that it is not germane to this bill. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not, by offering it here, produce the obstruction which will necessarily ensue to the passage of the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLOVER. I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLOVER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 2.

Mr. CLOVER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that it is not in order in the committee.

Mr. CLOVER. It gives this reform Congress another chance to kick the free-silver bill, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman calls for the yeas and nays, which are not in order in the committee. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. I have never been accustomed, during my life, to appropriate to myself that which belongs to others—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the point of order should be made that the gentleman's matter of privilege should come up in the House and not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLIKEN. There is no question but that the gentleman is right, if he makes that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it had better come up in the House. I do not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment offered by Mr. TURNER was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, if there is no other amendment offered, I will move that the committee rise and report the bill.

[Mr. MCRAE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there is no other product of this country, either agricultural or manufactured, that deserves so well of the National Legislature, from the standpoint of the protectionist, as does the cotton crop.

Mr. ALLEN. Deserves so much and gets so little.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I was about to add that there is no other product of the country that has been so uniformly the subject of unfriendly Congressional legislation.

From the year 1864 to the close of the year 1891, the total exports of this country in value were $15,798,037,495. The net of such exports over imports were $799,863,809. Of the total exports, our raw cotton contributed $5,485,536,034. But for the cotton so exported, the balance of trade against this country during that period would have been over $4,600,000,000. From the standpoint of the Republican party, which regards the prosperity of the country as depending upon a balance of trade in its favor, into what depths of bankruptcy would this country have been plunged but for the cotton crop? The value of the raw cotton exported during that period exceeded by 50 per cent the value of the exports of breadstuffs, and by 15 per cent the combined values of the exports of provisions, comprising meat and dairy products, and cattle, sheep, and hogs combined.

By its side exported manufactured articles cut a sorry figure. In 1891, a year of extraordinary distress with the cotton-growers, they sent abroad to pay the foreign debt of this country, to stop the drain of gold from the Treasury, and to preserve our balance of trade, raw cotton of the value of $290,712,898, besides feeding half as much to the mills of the country. During that year, the pampered, stimulated manufactories of the country contributed to our foreign commerce only $168,927,355; and breadstuffs, provisions, comprising meat and dairy products, and cattle, sheep and hogs, all combined $298,992,115.

Now, from the standpoint that I have mentioned, should not every burden placed upon that product be lessened, especially if the industry has become unprofitable? How has it been treated? During the war a tax was levied upon every pound of cotton. That tax was continued for several years after the war, the tax-gatherer, enforcing the most burdensome provisions of an exceedingly harsh law, affixed his tag to every bale. It was continued until it became evident that the Supreme Court was about to pronounce the tax unconstitutional, and then the law was hastily repealed in order to cut off from the cotton-planter the opportunity of enforcing the return of the tax, and to-day $68,000,000 of that cotton tax lies in the Treasury of the United States, and half as much more was stolen by the tax gatherers. Of all the exports, making up the values I have quoted, cotton is the sole one unprotected.

That is all right. The cotton-grower must sell two-thirds of his product in the free markets of the world, and any attempt to protect him, or to raise the price of his product as a whole, would be futile.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, while there is produced in this country a long staple cotton in small quantity, which could be wholly absorbed by our own mills, the McKinley bill allows Egyptian cotton to be brought in free to compete with it.

It ostentatiously placed cotton on the free list when there were over $1,000,000 worth of cotton imported the year before; it placed a duty upon wheat, although there had not been over $110,000 worth of that product brought in from abroad during the same year. It also provided a protective duty on corn, although the amount imported the same year had been wholly insignificant, not $2,000 in value. It reduced the tax upon binding-twine and gave, as it should have done, to the prosperous farmer of the Northwest a cheaper tie for his wheat; in the same breath, to compensate the manufacturing interests, it increased the tax upon cotton-ties and thereby wrung—

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. CLARKE's time was extended for five minutes.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have just called attention to the fact that by the McKinley bill the duty was reduced upon binding-twine while it was increased upon cotton-ties. We are told that the cotton-grower was thereby benefited. Was the wheat-grower then injured by the adoption of just the opposite policy?

The minority report upon the bill intimates, while it does not assert positively, that the price of cotton-ties to the planter has not been increased by the McKinley bill. I have taken the trouble to examine the daily and monthly quotations in the New Orleans papers as to the prices of baling-stuff and cotton-ties for a period of two years before the McKinley bill was enacted, and since that time. The crop immediately preceding the enactment of the law was tied at a cost of $1.15 per bundle for ties.

Immediately upon such enactment the price bounded to $1.40 a bundle, and remained at that figure during the months of October, November, and December, 1890, during which time the bulk of the crop of 1890 was packed; after that, for the next eight or ten months, the price was $1.35 a bundle, and since that time it has never been less than $1.25 per bundle. Therefore, while the crop immediately preceding the enactment of the McKinley law was packed at a cost of $1.15 a bundle; that which first fell under the operation of that law was put up with ties costing more than $1.35 a bundle; making a difference of 20 cents per bundle in the price.

The second crop since the law went into effect, that now being marketed, has been packed at an increased cost as to ties of 15 cents a bundle; that is, of $225,000 upon the crop of 9,000,000 bales.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman is giving the price of cotton-ties at what place?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I take these quotations from the New Orleans daily papers which I have examined.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And which are not reliable.

Mr. BURROWS. If it will not disturb my friend I should like to give him some figures that I have here in relation to the price of cotton-ties.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. It will not disturb me if I shall have enough time.

Mr. BURROWS. I will yield the gentleman my time. It appears from the statement which I hold in my hand that in February, 1892, the Bristol Rolling Mill Company gave the prices per bundle of standard arrow cotton-ties in 1890, 1891, and 1892. The price in June, 1890, according to these figures, was $1.10; in July, $1.12; in August, $1.12; in September, $1.12; in October, $1.17. That was the time the McKinley bill was passed. In November it was $1.20, and in December, $1.20. In the following July it was $1.22; in August, $1.20; in September, of last year, $1.18; in October, $1.15; in November, $1.12; in December, $1.10, and in January, of this year, $1.07. I wish to know whether these figures are correct?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. If my friend will consult with me the files of the New Orleans Times-Democrat and the New Orleans Picayune, he will find in them daily commercial quotations, showing that on September 1, 1890, cotton-ties were $1.25 a bundle for jobbing lots in the city of New Orleans; on October 1, 1890, $1.40; on November 1, 1890, $1.40; on December 1, 1890, $1.40; on January 1, 1891, when more than three-fifths of the crop had been packed, $1.35 to $1.37; and that they were not less than $1.35 from that time up to the last day of November, 1891, since when they have been at $1.25 the whole time.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment, because I have no desire except to be correct in this matter. According to my information—

Arrow ties ruled at about $1.05 per bundle until about the 1st of August, 1891, when the price advanced to $1.07.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. My friend is reading from the report of the committee, but he has taken the statement of the manufacturers, while I have taken the quotations of great commercial papers of New Orleans.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. If I can be recognized, I yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE]; and I wish to say just here that the price of these ties in January, 1892, as appears by this report, was $1.07 per bundle. The prices stated in this report are the reports from the mills, embracing the markets of New Orleans and Galveston. In 1889 the average price was $1.18; in 1890, $1.16; in 1891, $1.09; and in January, 1892, $1.07. I wish to know whether these figures are correct.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. No, they are not, as applied to the markets mentioned.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to call attention to a portion of the report of the committee showing a confusion in reference to these figures.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I should be very glad, indeed, to yield to the gentleman, but—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I regret not to have time to do so.

I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that, as a matter of fact, the price of cotton-ties to the cotton-planter has been very much higher since the passage of the McKinley bill than it was before, and that, at last, is the issue we are now discussing. The price has been not less than 3 cents on the bale higher, and indeed has been more than that. Upon a crop this year of nine million bales there is a difference of $225,000 in the cost of cotton-ties alone.

Now, the testimony of a manufacturer which has been taken on this subject, and which I understand is in the hands of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER]—I have not time to ask him to read it—shows that four hundred men can make in one hundred days all the cotton-ties needed to cover the crop of the country.

Mr. TURNER. The statement was that three hundred men making each one ton a day, could in one hundred days make 30,000 tons of ties, the amount estimated to be necessary for the crop of that year, the year when the tariff commission was sitting.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, suppose four hundred men to be engaged one hundred days in making the ties required for our present larger crop, I ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] what would be a fair wage per day for each man? Shall we say $1.75 per day?

Mr. BURROWS. I am not speaking of that matter. What I want to get at is whether the wholesale price of cotton-ties has not gradually gone down since the passage of the McKinley bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. By no means. It is higher to-day. Taking the quotations of the New Orleans papers and from my own personal knowledge of the price at which the cotton-planter gets his ties, I can inform the gentleman that the price is a great deal higher for the crop just packed, not less than 2½ cents a bale higher, than it was before the passage of the McKinley bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Are you speaking of the retail price or the wholesale price?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I am speaking as to the retail price from my personal information derived from cotton-growers. I also speak from the quotations of commercial papers of New Orleans, where more cotton-ties are sold than anywhere else in this country. Those quotations are for jobbing lots and at wholesale prices.

Mr. BURROWS. Are not the present prices, both wholesale and retail, lower than the prices in 1889?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. On the contrary, they are higher; at least 2½ cents a bale higher.

Now, let me go on. There was an increase of $258,000 in the cost of putting ties around the cotton crop of one year, that packed from the fall of 1890 to the spring of 1891. Now, take four hundred men working for one hundred days in making all the necessary ties; give each one $1.75 a day, which I believe it will be conceded is a good wage.

Mr. BRETZ. Make it $2 a day.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Then, making it $2 a day, we have $80,000 as the total wages of those men for making the ties for a 9,000,000-bale crop.

It has been time and again declared upon this floor that the McKinley bill laid a protective tariff for the benefit of the workman alone, never in the interest of the manufacturer; that the great underlying principle in fixing the rate of such a duty is to have it just cover the difference between the liberal wages paid to the American workman and the pittance dealt out to the pauper labor of Europe engaged in producing the same article.

Let us see how far this principle was observed by the framers of the McKinley bill in fixing the cotton-tie duty now under consideration. The result will throw some light upon the good faith of the assertion that the principle stated was the controlling influence in the adjustment of the other schedules of that bill. As I have stated, the higher rate increased the cost of ties for the crop of 1890—8,600,000 bales—more than 3 cents per bale, or in the aggregate, more than $258,000. As the total of wages paid the workmen for making all the ties for the crop did not exceed $80,000, the McKinley bill levied upon that single cotton crop of 1890, an increase of tax which paid all the wages of all the men engaged in the production of the ties, and paid besides $178,000, in a single year, into the pockets of the manufacturers.

Mr. ALLEN. That is, increased by the McKinley bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. That was the increase of cost of ties for the crop of one year brought about by the operation of the McKinley bill.

In the face of these facts, let the cotton-tie manufacturers be silent while other combines prate of "a protective tariff for the workmen only."

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us turn to cotton-bagging for a moment. The fact is that the combination formed in 1888 for the purpose of putting up the price of that article—and I ask the attention of my friend from Michigan to this—the fact is that in one night, or rather between Saturday night, July 27, 1888, and the following Monday morning, that cotton trust advanced the price of bagging in the market of New Orleans 1½ cents a yard.

It takes 6 yards to cover a bale of cotton; so that they increased the cost of covering each bale 7½ cents, an aggregate of over $500,000 on the crop. They then rapidly advanced the price until it reached on the 11th of August 12 cents a yard for 1½ pound bagging, the grade generally used, an increase of 3 cents a yard within two weeks, or over $1,250,000 on the crop. Still the "squeezers" pushed the price on from 12½ cents per yard on the 25th of August to 12½ on the 20th of October, at which price it ruled to the 30th of December.

Bear in mind that not 100 bales of cotton of the whole crop had been packed when the mine was sprung; that the bulk of the crop was put up in September, October, November, and December; that the increased cost to the cotton-grower was even greater than the advances indicated by the wholesale quotations I have given, since each middleman between him and the jobber had his interest and profit on the advance, as well as on the original price. It must, on these facts, be conceded that the trust wrung $1,500,000 from the cotton-producers on the crop of 1888.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. It is true that the price of cotton-bagging has gone steadily down since January, 1889, and that is now very low as compared with its then price. But what brought about that decrease? Did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] hear the testimony read by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] during the course of his remarks—the testimony of the cotton-bagging conspirators before the Senate Committee in 1888? Did he listen? Why, one of them said:

The needs of the farmers are absolute and imperative, and they must have the bagging, no matter what the cost is.

The excuse was that the manufacturing interest was threatened by the Mills bill, whereas, as a matter of fact, they did not put their plundering scheme in operation until after that bill passed the House, and when they knew perfectly well that it could never pass the Senate. After so testifying before the investigating committee, these bagging manufacturers came before the McKinley committee and had from it carte blanche to fix their rate.

My friend, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, spoke of the manufacturers of the country being allowed by that committee to fill up blank commissions with rates satisfactory to their respective interests. No more striking example of that license exists than in the case of these jute-bagging "stranglers." The McKinley bill adopted the very words of the request of the cotton-bagging manufacturers. When Mr. Pearce was before the House committee, as will be seen by reference to pages 547 and 548 of the hearings of 1889-'90, he said the manufacturers asked one or the other of the following provisions: "If jute butts are placed on the free list then either of the following:"

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, flax, jute, or jute butts, valued at 6 cents or less per square yard, 1.6 cents per square yard.

Such is the identical language of the McKinley bill. But it went even further than the bagging manufacturers asked, and made provision for bagging valued at more than 6 cents per square yard. The manufacturers asked protection only on bagging valued at 6 cents or less, knowing that none imported into this country is valued at over that price. So, the bill gave them not only exactly what they asked, in the exact language framed by them, but gave them something additional, supposing, I presume, they did not understand exactly what protection they needed, or were too modest to ask it.

That provision increased the rate on cotton-bagging over the then existing law, if the estimate made by the clerk of the committee is correct. I have before me his official comparison of the rates of the then tariff duties and those laid by that bill. He states the equivalent ad valorem rates on the bagging specified in the schedule I have quoted as 44.49 per cent under the existing law, and 47.04 per cent under the McKinley bill. However that may be, it handed the cotton-growers over to the trust combine bound hand and foot, so far as the committee was able to tie them.

The Fiftieth Congress prated of its enmity to trusts!

A leading protectionist Senator warned the manufacturers of the country, when the McKinley bill was under consideration, that they must organize no more trusts, for he was in favor, whenever a combination should be organized to advance the price of any protected article, of throwing the doors open to its free import as a punishment. Yet here were men who, with as cruel a trust as was ever organized and put into execution, with their perfidy then exposed by their own testimony before investigating committees of Congress, dictated their own rates, and were taken to the arms of the committee as worthy exemplars of American enterprise and disinterested friends of the American laborer.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Does not the gentleman understand that there is a law against trusts and combines. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What use was ever made of it?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks what use—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I decline to yield—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (continuing)—was ever made of it: when one of the greatest trusts—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I repeat, I wish not to be interrupted—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (continuing)—combinations this country has ever known has been disbanded by virtue of just such legislation as this.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not by any means, but by the action of the Ohio supreme court.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Not at all, but by legislation of this kind.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. This illustrates the whole protection theory. The gentleman from Illinois seizes upon my time against my consent, just as his party wrings from my people their hard and scanty earnings against their protest. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE] has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask that he have five minutes more because of my interruptions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman has had five minutes, and then five minutes more, and then makes objection to any one interrupting him.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I trust that he may have five minutes more.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. While the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] might very well consent to my retaining the floor, since he would be very sure, with his customary interruptions, to take the greater portion of my time, I am conscious that the nearness of the hour for conclusion of this debate precludes my going on now. But I shall hope upon some other early occasion to pay my just tribute to the manly resistance which the cotton-growers made to the exactions of the bagging trust; a resistance which finally brought oppression to temporary terms, but could not crush it. That can only be done by the just legislation of this bill.

Mr. BYNUM. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows.

Strike out the word "purposes," in line 12, and insert instead the word "cotton."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee will readily perceive by an examination of the bill that this amendment does not change the purpose of the bill. It simply makes it more specific in its terms. I will read it as it stands, and as it would be when amended:

And also hoop or band, iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes.

Now, my amendment would simply make it read:
For baling cotton, etc.

I am in favor of this bill so far as its scope was intended, that is, to give relief to the great cotton industry. I believe that all these materials ought to be upon the free list, so far as they affect that industry, for the reason that every other industry which imports an article and then exports it has the advantage of receiving a drawback, which is 99 per cent. For instance, the Standard Oil Company receives a million and a quarter dollars in drawbacks upon tin plate; but the growers of cotton do not get the benefit of this drawback. They buy the cotton-ties and then sell the cotton to the shippers or the exporters; and of course they not only lose the duty they pay upon the ties and the duty they pay upon the bagging, but they lose the entire cost, so that, as a matter of justice to that industry, I am in favor of placing these articles upon the free list; but this may go further. It may go so far as to let hoop iron used for other purposes come in free. Now, this question of a reduction of the tariff is not a selfish one with me; it is purely a question of principle. Whatever is done in the way of a reduction of duties should be harmonious and in view, at all times, of the question of principle. Certainly those in favor of a reduction as well as those in favor of protection would not justify the placing of a manufactured product upon the free list while high duties were left upon the raw or partially manufactured material. So that while I might favor a reduction upon hoop iron, I do not want it to go on the free list while its basis is taxed, except where it is exported and where the exporter fails to get the drawback.

Therefore I would like to have this word stricken out, so that the bill may be confined specially to the cotton industry, and I can not see that there should be any objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If you wish simply to cover that part which is exported it ought to be still further limited.

Mr. BYNUM. You can not make that distinction. The bulk of it is exported, and you can not make any arrangement by which that distinction could be carried out.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I do not know that it is very important whether the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] is rejected or adopted, but I think it is proper that the committee should understand the reasons why the Committee on Ways and Means have presented the bill in this form and why that committee changed the bill by striking out that portion covered by the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. TURNER]. The reason that we made the bill broad enough to cover ties for other baling purposes, was that it might benefit those engaged in raising and baling hay, straw, or other farm products. We thought the same need for cheap hoops existed as to those farm products that applied to cotton. The principle that we had in view was to give the benefit of cheaper covering and hoops to those farmers who raise products that the tariff did not and could not benefit.

The tariff on hay can benefit none of the producers of that article except perhaps a few farmers in the Eastern States who are protected against a small importation. Hence, we thought this bill ought to be broad enough to cover the hoops for that product as well as for cotton. We therefore provided free hoops for baling purposes, so as to give the same benefit to all farmers who raise products that require baling in their preparation for market. We might with justice have gone further than this bill, and given bagging for grain. But there can be no doubt I think that this provision ought to remain as it is and not be limited to cotton.

It makes no difference to me or to my constituents, as in baling hay we use only wire. Still, hoops are sold and used to some extent for that purpose, and the committee thought in framing this bill that they ought to give it scope enough to cover hay and straw as well as cotton. I merely make these remarks that this committee may know what influenced the Committee on Ways and Means to use the language in this bill which the gentleman from Indiana proposes to amend—our purpose being that the hoops for hay and straw, or other farm products which must be baled for market, should be put on the same footing as hoops used in baling cotton. Farm products that can receive no benefit from protection should, if possible, bear none of its burdens.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the whole discussion of this question convinces me of one fact, and that is, that after our friends on the other side have put the Northern farmers' wool on the free list—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And the Southern farmers' also.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Ohio can give me no information, or I would be glad for him to do so; but he always talks and never says anything. [Laughter.]

At the same time they are endeavoring to relieve our Southern farmers of a little duty upon cotton-ties, they keep the duty upon the ties which binds the hay of the North. While they relieve our Southern friends—

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Relieve them! Is the tariff a tax?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in favor of having a fair deal, and I only mention this, not because I care very much about it, but to indicate the direction in which the Democratic majority of this House are going. In other words, the entire effort on their part is to attack and cripple the industries of the North—

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman pardon me if I ask him one question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. No, I will not pardon you. [Laughter] [Continuing:] And at the same time to relieve their own friends at home.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. You decline to answer one question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not blame them for seeking to relieve their friends down there, but at the same time I do not think, while they come here and ask that their section have all the advantages of tariff reduction when they can help themselves, that they ought at the same time to take $27,000,000 out of the pockets of the Northern farmers who are raising wool.

Mr. SAYERS. What about the Texas wool-growers?

Mr. ALLEN. Is not that in conflict with your remarks that appear in the RECORD this morning? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi has asked me a question. I think if he had started in his early childhood and kept on asking questions all the way down to the present of people who knew he probably would be a man of very much greater information than he is now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. It does not seem to have improved you much, and you have been at it all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is why I can give information to my friend from Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Now, in my remarks up to this time my friend will notice this, that I desire to be absolutely fair. [Laughter.] I do not want to have anything attributed to me that does not belong to me. There is a law in my State under which the receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief. Now, somebody has attributed to me the remarks made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

Mr. CARUTH. You say that you did not say that?

Mr. MILLIKEN. You ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] whether I did.

Mr. CARUTH. Did you say it or not?

Mr. MILLIKEN. No.

Mr. CARUTH. Then where is your affidavit? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope that my friend from Missouri will find this distinction between him and my friend from Kentucky, when he notices that in order to be believed in his country he has to make an affidavit.

Mr. CARUTH. No, no.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am not required to make one. Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that I entirely disclaim all right or title to the remarks made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Give the gentleman another minute.

Mr. TURNER. There are only five minutes remaining of the time, or I would be glad to do so. I desire that the committee finish this bill, and I ask that the committee rise so that the House may extend the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia make any motion?

Mr. TURNER. Let us vote on the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. I have an amendment to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "gins," in line 10, the words "saw, brushes, and screws used in making cotton-gins."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit that later.

Mr. BYNUM. My amendment is first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the suggestion of the gentleman is correct. Really the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas does not affect the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana; and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TERRY. I just want to state in a few minutes—

Mr. TURNER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, and cotton-gins, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pending tariff bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for taking the recess be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I submit to my friend that we can not finish this to-night, and he had better let it go over until morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia, that the time for taking the recess be extended until twenty minutes of six o'clock?

Mr. KILGORE objected, under the impression, as he stated, that the extension asked was for twenty minutes, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

The session was accordingly extended as requested.

The motion of Mr. TURNER was then agreed to.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

Mr. TURNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BYNUM. Let us have a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, yeas 50; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, in regard to my amendment, I simply desire to say this: In this bill you propose to put cotton-gins upon the free list. Now the amendment provides that certain materials used in the making of cotton-gins shall be put upon the free list, to-wit: Saws, brushes, and screws. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TERRY, and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. TERRY. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, yeas 40; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties and cotton-gins, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. TURNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I give notice that by arrangement between the gentlemen who represent the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means and myself we will finish the consideration of this bill in the House to-morrow, with the understanding that the vote shall be taken before the special order is reached, and, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], I will add that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who has prepared the minority report and who is now absent, will be heard to-morrow if he desires.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the bill (H. R. 2503) for the relief of R. A. Spaulding, passed this morning, there was an error committed in the second amendment adopted by the committee, on account of the old report having been used. I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment corrected so as to read "strike out the words 'fifteen thousand' and insert 'six thousand and fifty,' so that it will read 'six thousand and fifty dollars.'"

Mr. BAILEY. Is that merely a verbal amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. BYNUM, for two days, on account of important business. To Mr. KRIBBS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BUNTING, until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK of Tennessee, for thirty days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CAPEHART, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MONTGOMERY, for this evening's session.

Mr. McMILLIN (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). I now move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will now declare the House in recess under the rule till 8 o'clock this evening. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is designated to discharge the duties of the Chair this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider under the standing order business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. McCREARY in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under clause 3 of Rule XXVI.

AARON J. OLIVER.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of Aaron J. Oliver.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in such manner as to relieve from the charge of dishonorable discharge the name of Aaron J. Oliver, formerly a member of Company E, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report by (Mr. ROCKWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2949) for the relief of Aaron J. Oliver, having considered the same, respectfully report:

Aaron J. Oliver was mustered into service December 10, 1861, as second lieutenant of Company E, Ninety-first New York Volunteers, and is reported present with his regiment to March 9, 1863, when, on the recommendation of his regimental, brigade, and division commanders, he was dishonorably discharged for "having three times offered his resignation in the presence of the enemy."

From a careful examination of the evidence offered on behalf of Lieut. Oliver, your committee are of the opinion that the said charge was false. It appears from the testimony of his fellow officers that he was a capable, faithful, and efficient officer, and that his dismissal was cruel and unjust, and was the result of malice toward him on the part of his commanding officer, Col. Jacob Van Zandt, who was himself, in the following November (1863), tried by general court-martial for "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," conduct "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," and "disrespectful language towards his superior officers," and sentenced to be dismissed the service.

Said sentence was mitigated by the President to six months' suspension, but he was afterward, and on February 2, 1865, dishonorably dismissed the service.

We append hereto as a part of this report letter from the War Department of date June 6, 1890, affidavit of Gen. John Palmer, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, and a letter of Col. J. Tarbell, late First Deputy Comptroller of the Treasury, both fellow officers of Lieut. Oliver.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill pass.

Tioga County, State of New York, ss:

The undersigned, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he was formerly a lieutenant of E Company, Ninety-first New York Volunteer Infantry; that he was dishonorably discharged the service of the United States in March, 1863, by reason of a misrepresenting indorsement of Van Zandt, colonel Ninety-first New York Volunteers, then acting brigade commander; and he now, under oath, offers for the first time the true reasons and circumstances connected with his case.

He first offered his resignation as such lieutenant while his regiment lay at Key West, Fla., and with no enemy opposing or threatening it, and with absolutely no prospect of an engagement with such enemy. This resignation was offered, together with the resignations of ten other officers of the regiment, because military life with Van Zandt was unbearable, owing to his ignorance, gross intemperance, and partiality among the officers and men, encouraging and building up cliques and strife by marked and offensive partiality of favors or oppression.

Col. Van Zandt sought to persecute particularly several officers of the regiment, myself among them, who had belonged to an organization known as "Cole's Columbia County Regiment." This battalion was consolidated with another fraction recruited by Van Zandt, and thus the Ninety-first New York Volunteers was formed.

It will be noticed that this was the first time resignation was offered by me. The next and the last time my resignation was offered was in March, 1863. I had tried repeatedly to secure leave of absence from duty for a limited time in order to attend to some pressing, imperative business at the North, so important that only myself could attend to in person, and each time I had been met with prompt refusal, offered in a contemptuous and insulting manner. These applications failing of success, I was, owing to the urgency of the business alluded to, finally forced to offer my resignation, and did so.

It was accepted, with the indorsements of all the commanders procured by Van Zandt's vile and scurrilous misrepresentations of me, made and procured without my knowledge, and with no opportunity offered me either in defense or denial.

I repeat that I never offered my resignation in the face of the enemy, nor "when about to move against the enemy;" that it was offered twice only as above explained; that I at no time while in the service was moved to offer my resignation by reason of cowardice, as is intimated by the indorsement of Van Zandt; that my loyalty, my personal courage, my love of country and of duty, my zeal as a soldier, stood all unchallenged until March, 1863, and they have never been questioned since.

AARON J. OLIVER.

Clerk of Tioga County, State of New York.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, June 26, 1890.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 29th instant, received in this Department on the 23d instant, requesting the military record of Col. J. Van Zandt, late of Ninety-first New York Volunteers, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the records show that Jacob Van Zandt was mustered in as colonel Ninety-first New York, December 16, 1861; that he was tried by general court-martial, convened in the Department of the Gulf, in November, 1863, for "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," conduct "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," and "disrespectful language toward his superior officers," of all of which he was convicted and sentenced to be dismissed the service; but the sentence was mitigated by the President to suspension from rank and emoluments for six months.

He was dishonorably dismissed the service February 2, 1865, in orders from this Department, for "interfering with the discipline of the Ninety-first New York Volunteers, by ordering enlisted men thereof, who were undergoing punishment, to be released, and advising a noncommissioned officer not to obey the orders of lieutenant-colonel commanding the regiment, pleading drunkenness as an excuse therefor."

"This whilst said Van Zandt was not on duty nor in command of his regiment."

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH.

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

Hon. T. S. FLOOD,
House of Representatives.

John Palmer, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he served in the Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteers from September 10, 1861, to July 3, 1865, at which date the regiment was mustered out of service at Albany, N. Y.; that this deponent distinctly remembers Lieut. A. J. Oliver, of said regiment, as a capable officer and a man of character and good habits; that this deponent does not now remember the exact details of the case that led to his dismissal; he does remember that it was the general opinion amongst officers and men of said regiment that the dismissal of said Oliver was cruel and unjust, and the result of a personal feeling against him on the part of the commander of said regiment; that the deponent further says that he served in said regiment in the several grades from private to captain, and since the war he has been located at No. 25 Washington avenue, Albany, N. Y., in business; that since the close of the rebellion he has been twice elected department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of New York State, and in 1879 was elected senior vice-commander-in-chief, Grand Army of the Republic; for the past nine years has been one of the trustees of the New York State Soldiers' Home, and is at present chairman of the executive committee of said home; that the only interest this deponent has in this matter is to render an act of justice to a faithful officer and a good citizen.

OCTOBER 27, 1864.

Aaron J. Oliver, of Albany, N. Y., was formerly lieutenant in the Ninety-first New York Volunteers, dismissed the service upon a false statement made against him which he had no opportunity to disprove, having been dismissed the service without a hearing, now desires to be restored or have a trial, so that he may wipe out the disgrace of dismissal.

It affords me great pleasure to certify to Lieut. Oliver's character as an officer and a gentleman; to his good conduct, his fidelity, and his correct deportment at all times.

A capable, faithful, zealous officer, his dismissal was unjust to him and a loss to the service. I hold myself in readiness at all times to testify under oath as to Lieut. Oliver's merits and claims to favor, hoping he may be relieved from an unmerited stigma and the service receive back a valuable officer. The accusation against him was not merely false but based on personal hostility.

J. TARBELL.

Lieut. Col. Ninety-first N. Y. Vols.

I fully concur with the above statement and will testify to the truth of it.

J. W. FELTHOUSEN,
Capt., Ninety-first N. Y. V.

The foregoing statements with reference to Lieut. A. J. Oliver, made in 1894, are renewed and repeated, and, if necessary, will be made under oath. His case is earnestly recommended to favorable action.

J. TARBELL,
Late Col. Ninety-first N. Y. V. Bt. Brig. Gen., U. S. V.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CURTIS P. WISE.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3844) for the relief of Curtis P. Wise.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the record of Curtis P. Wise, late a member of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, any charge of desertion that may exist against him, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The report (by Mr. PATTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3844) removing charges of desertion against Curtis P. Wise, late a member of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, having considered same, respectfully report:

Curtis P. Wise was enrolled September 6, 1862, at Camp Butler, Illinois, as a private in Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, to serve three years. He served faithfully until the last days of March, 1863, at which time he was sent home sick from Cairo, Ill., by his captain, William A. Fry, and told that his discharge would be sent him. Said Curtis P. Wise remained at home, but secured no discharge, and was sick and unable to do service during the entire remainder of time for which he was enlisted, and no charge of desertion was ever made against him.

In view of all the facts the committee would recommend that the bill do pass.

Case of Curtis P. Wise, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers.

Curtis P. Wise was enrolled September 6, 1862, at Camp Butler, Illinois, as a private in Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, to serve three years, and was mustered into service November 4, 1862.

The muster-roll of the company is the only one on file and no record of the soldier is found subsequent to his muster in.

This regiment was organized at Camp Butler, Illinois, from November 4 to December 18, 1862, to serve three years, and within the period of five months lost 700 men, principally by desertion.

Applying for a discharge the soldier testified, under date of July 12, 1863, that he served in Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, until the organization was disbanded and its officers mustered out of service, at which time he was absent on a sick furlough and failed to get his discharge.

Marble D. Camden, of Stone Fort, Ill., aged 53 years, in an affidavit executed in Johnson County, Ill., July 12, 1863, declared that he was with the claimant some time at Camp Butler, Illinois, and knows that the claimant was on duty in Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers; that after the regiment moved to Cairo claimant came home on a sick leave and remained, unable to be present when the officers of his company were mustered out; that he was at claimant's house (they were neighbors) the greater part of the summer of 1863, and was in bad health; that he (affiant) was acquainted with the claimant until the end of the war, and knows that he was unable to do duty as a soldier.

Wyatt C. Ferrell, of Creal Spring, Ill., declares, under date of July 10, 1863, that he was a sergeant in the same company and regiment, and did duty with the claimant at Camp Butler, Illinois, up to the last of December, 1862, when the claimant was sent home on a sick furlough, and that he was unfit for duty until after the regiment had been disbanded, in the spring of 1863; that a short time before the dissolution of the regiment the colonel, Lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. Fry told affiant that the claimant was then in hospital at Cairo, very sick, and should be discharged when "they" returned to Cairo; that after claimant came home, in the spring of 1863, affiant saw him and he was hanging between life and death, being sick from camp fever and diarrhea.

William A. Fry, of Christopher, Ill., who signs himself as captain Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, in an affidavit (not dated) executed in Franklin County, Ill., declares that the claimant served in said company and regiment until January 1, 1863, that he contracted diarrhea, mumps, and sore legs, and was sent home during the last of March, 1863; that he was not able to be with the regiment when it was consolidated by order of Gen. Buford, commanding post at Cairo, Ill.; that they were all reexamined and all who were not able for service were to be discharged, and the claimant was entitled to a discharge, for he was not able to be present at that time.

The records show that this regiment was reorganized April 1, 1863, and continued under a battalion formation until September 1, 1863, when it was broken up and the men were transferred to the Ninth Illinois Volunteers, which remained in service until the summer of 1865. Many of the absentees returned to the One hundred and twenty-eighth Battalion, or to the Ninth Illinois Volunteers, but the name of the applicant has not been found on the rolls of either of those organizations, nor has any record been found that he was under medical treatment or that he was granted a furlough.

On the 19th day of October, 1869, the application of the soldier for discharge was denied, the evidence submitted being deemed insufficient to warrant a removal of the implied charge of desertion.

Under date of December 30, 1889, Nathan J. Rushing, of Carmen Mills, Ill., aged 54 years, declares that the claimant, when affiant saw him, about April, 1863, was suffering from diarrhea, rheumatism, and what affiant thought to be frozen feet and legs, and from that time until the close of the war (affiant saw him often during that period) he did not recover from either of said disabilities, and was not able to return to his company.

R. V. Grace, M. D., of Newcastle, Ill., aged 43 years, in an affidavit dated January 1, 1890, declares that he has been a regular practicing physician for more than twenty-four years, ever since he was 18 years of age, and has well known the claimant since the spring of 1862; that claimant was, when affiant saw him in the spring of 1863, in very feeble health, using (he thinks) crutches, and suffering from rheumatism and the results of frozen feet and legs, as affiant considered from his diagnosis of the case; that the physical condition of the claimant, whom affiant has known intimately since 1863, was such as to render him wholly unfit for military duty, or to return to his company from the spring of 1863 to the close of the war; and affiant further declares that when claimant enlisted in the Army he was a sound, able-bodied man, and free from disease.

R. H. Wise, of New Burnside, Ill., aged 54 years, a brother of the applicant, in a sworn statement dated January 25, 1890, declared that he was a member of Company F, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers; that his brother, the claimant, was taken sick at Cairo, Ill., in the winter of 1863, and was still sick when the regiment moved to Mound City; that affiant told the colonel that he had better have the boy discharged and sent home; the colonel replied that claimant was ordered to be discharged and would be sent home, and that his discharge papers would be sent to him; that the claimant was sent home on the next day, in February or March, 1863, but never received a discharge.

C. T. Hunter, of Springerton, Ill., late first sergeant Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, in an affidavit executed on January 28, 1890, declares that he subsequently became captain of Company F, same regiment; that the claimant was taken sick in the winter of 1862-63, and was sent to the military hospital at Cairo, Ill., where he remained, affiant thinks, until about the last of March, 1863, when he returned to the regiment at Mound City with orders, as affiant understood, to be discharged; that claimant was still sick, and, according to affiant's recollection, was told to go home and that his discharge would be sent to him as soon as completed; that about April 4, 1863, most of the officers were mustered out, the men were consolidated into a detachment, and the claimant, as affiant learns, never received his discharge.

J. E. W. Reid, of Ozark, Ill., aged 55 years, declares under oath, January 21, 1890, that the claimant, whom he well knew, returned home in February or March, 1863, in very bad health and unable to do any kind of hard service; that the father of claimant said that the latter should not return to the Army even if he ever should get able to do so; that he (affiant) has known claimant ever since the war, and does not think that he has ever been able to do the duty of a soldier, and that he thinks that claimant's health was ruined in the service.

On February 6, 1890, the Department again denied the application, on the ground that nothing was found in the additional testimony to warrant a reversal of its former adverse decision in the case.

Since that date the status of the case has not been changed, either by the introduction of new testimony or by legislation.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Major and Surgeon, United States Army

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, January 26, 1892.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Saline County, ss:

Curtis P. Wise, of said county, after being duly sworn, on his oath says, that he was a member of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, that while in said company and in line of duty and during the latter part of 1862 and the early part of 1863 he incurred the following disabilities, to wit: Frozen feet and legs, chronic diarrhea and mumps, resulting in injury to testicles; that in consequence of said disabilities he was placed in the hospital at Cairo, Ill.; that about the last of March, 1863, Col. R. M. Hundley, who was then commanding said regiment, and his captain, William A. Fry, and the physician then in charge of said hospital, pronounced him then wholly unfit for military duty or that he ever would be, and ordered him to be honorably discharged from the Army; that immediately after said order, and by the assistance of Col. R. M. Hundley and his captain, William A. Fry, he was placed on the train and sent home, and ordered by them to stay there, and at the same time was informed by them, and each of them, that an honorable discharge would be forwarded him at his home in Johnson County, Ill.; that on arriving at his home, and in consequence of said disabilities he was confined to his bed and room; that he was never able at any time after his return home in the spring of 1863 to the close of the war in 1865 to have returned to his company; that he was never ordered or even requested by his superior officers or anyone else so to do; that he did not desert nor intend to desert his company, but was acting honestly and in good faith; that being only 19 years of age at the time he came home he did not know, nor was he ever informed or advised, that any other and further effort was necessary to obtain an honorable discharge until after the close of the war; that his discharge never reached him as promised, and that he is now justly entitled to the same.

CURTIS P. WISE,

Late of Company I,

One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of December, 1891, and I hereby certify that the foregoing affidavit was fully explained to said affiant before swearing to the same, and that said affiant is respectable and entitled to full credit; that I am not related to affiant and have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Franklin County, ss:

William A. Fry, of said county, after being duly sworn on his oath, says that he was captain of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, from its organization to April 4, 1863; that he was well acquainted with Curtis P. Wise, who was a member of said company and regiment; that about the last days of March, 1863, the said Curtis P. Wise was sent home from Cairo, Ill., on account of disability, with the understanding that he be discharged, and that his discharge would be forwarded to him when made out; that the said Curtis P. Wise was an honorable and good soldier and at no time either willfully or impliedly deserted his company; that he is not related to soldier, and has no interest in this claim.

WILLIAM A. FRY,

Late Captain of Company I,

One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of April, A. D. 1891. Further I certify that the affiant, William A. Fry, is a good moral citizen, a credible person, and entitled to full credit, and that he was acquainted with the contents of the foregoing affidavit before swearing. Further, I am in nowise related to either the affiant, William A. Fry, nor the applicant, Curtis P. Wise, nor am I concerned in the prosecution of the foregoing claim.

MARTIN V. B. DIAL,

Justice of the Peace of said County and State of Illinois.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Johnson:

In the matter of the application of the claim of Curtis P. Wise, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, personally comes before me, a notary public in and for the county of Johnson, State of Illinois, Wyatt C. Ferrell, a citizen of the county of Williamson, in the State of Illinois, whose post-office is Creal Springs, county of Williamson, State of Illinois; who being duly sworn, is personally known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit. Being by me duly sworn as above stated, declares as follows:

"I became acquainted with Curtis P. Wise almost from his infancy, and that he enlisted in Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in the latter part of the summer or early fall of 1862; that I was orderly or first sergeant of said company and Curtis P. Wise was a duty sergeant of above-said company. The above-named regiment arrived at Camp Butler, Springfield, Ill., about the 9th of October, 1862. That said Curtis P. Wise was a good and dutiful soldier and bid fair for future prominence. That some time in, I think about the last of November or first of December, 1862, during a very cold spell of weather, I took said Curtis P. Wise out with me to look up some boys that had overstayed their leave of absence, and while out after night Curtis P. Wise accidentally got into a hole of water, from which before we got to camp his feet and legs were badly frozen or frostbitten.

Soon after this occurrence I too became in bad health and was furloughed home. I was only with my company and regiment a few days at Cairo, Ill., from that time until the spring of 1863, but found said Curtis P. Wise suffering with his feet and legs, also with chronic diarrhea. That being in bad health myself through the winter and spring of 1863 I was sent home by Col. R. M. Hundly on special service, the object being to try to induce many of the boys that were absent at that time to return to duty. That while preparing to discharge last said duty I was notified by Col. Hundly that there was an arrangement made to discharge said Curtis P. Wise, he being at that time at home on a sick leave.

That while at home on above-stated business I saw and talked with Curtis P. Wise, and from his appearance he was in feeble health. The One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry was disbanded some time in the spring of 1863, and then formed into a detachment. I don't remember seeing said Wise any more till after the close of the war, perhaps in 1866, and still heard him complain of his old referred-to injuries. Curtis P. Wise was a healthy, stout young man up to his injuries above referred to. I think, perhaps, I could make further statements, but my mind and memory is somewhat disturbed over the loss of my dear wife a few days ago. My age is near 62 years; post-office address as above. I further state I have no interest in the prosecution of above claim.

WYATT C. FERRELL.

Sworn to, subscribed before me by the above-named affiant, and I certify that he wrote the body of this affidavit and acquainted himself with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in this case, and am not concerned in its prosecution, and the words interlined was done before he executed the same.

Given under my hand and official seal this April 30. A. D. 1891.

In pension claim No. 723830, of Curtis P. Wise, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county, Edward Teal, who, being duly sworn on his oath, says that he is 65 years of age, and his post-office is Stonefort, Ill.; that he is well acquainted with the said claimant, and has been since his claimant's boyhood; that at date of claimant's enlistment in the Army, in 1862, he was a stout, healthy boy; that he served in same regiment with claimant, from date of enlistment in 1862 to the last of March, 1863, at which time claimant was sent home on account of disability; that he, claimant, was then suffering from diarrhea and the effects of frozen feet and legs; that he saw claimant and talked with him while in the hospital at Cairo, Ill.; just before he was sent home; he was then in a very bad condition; that his understanding, at the time, was that the claimant was then to be discharged; that he knows as a matter of fact that claimant's condition was such as to entitle him to a discharge.

That he next saw claimant in the summer of 1863; he was still suffering from said disabilities, and so continued to suffer for two or three years; most of his time was confined to his bed and room, and was not at any time, after his return home, able to have traveled or left his home and reported to his company before it was discharged from the service; that he has lived in the same neighborhood with said claimant each and every year since in the summer of 1863 to the present time, and has the means of knowing his physical condition; that he has never recovered from said disability to the present time, and has not been able to perform any kind of manual labor during any year since his return from the army; he is not related to claimant and has no interest in this claim.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Saline County, ss:

James W. Fletcher, of said county, after being duly sworn, on his oath says he is 45 years of age, and his post-office is Harrisburg, Ill.; that he was well acquainted with C. P. Wise, of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and served in same regiment with him; that at date of enlistment said C. P. Wise was a sound man, free from disease of any kind; that while in the Army and in line of duty said soldier became disabled by frozen feet and legs, and diarrhea and mumps; that he was with said soldier in the hospital at Cairo, Ill., about March, 1863; that he knows as a matter of fact that said soldier was ordered discharged from said hospital; that he heard their colonel and the physician in charge make the order; that Col. Hundly took said soldier to the train and helped to put him on the car and sent him home, telling him at the time that his discharge should be forwarded to him; that he further states as a matter of fact that the said C. P. Wise did not desert his company at any time during his term of service.

He further declares that he has no interest in said case and is not concerned in its prosecution, and is not related to said applicant.

JAMES W. (his x mark) FLUTCHER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me [by] the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in this case and not related to claimant, nor am I concerned in its prosecution.

This the 28th day of April, 1890.
I have a certificate on file.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Salem County, ss:

In the matter of pension claim No. 723830 of Curtis P. Wise, of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county, Thomas Dixon, who, after being duly sworn, on his oath says that he is 59 years of age, and his post-office is Carrier Mills, Ill.; that he was well acquainted with the said Curtis P. Wise at and prior to his enlistment in said company; that he was then a sound and able-bodied man; that during the winter of 1862 or early part of 1863 said soldier became affected with frozen feet and legs, which rendered him totally disabled for any kind of military duty; he thinks the disability was incurred in December, 1862, near Camp Butler, Illinois; that he, affiant, was a member of Company K, of same regiment, and was in the hospital at Cairo, Ill., with said soldier for a long time; that soldier was suffering in the extreme from frozen feet and legs; that he frequently saw soldiers' feet and legs dressed, and well remembers the offensive and bad odor caused by the same in the hospital; that about the last of March, 1863, said soldier was sent home, by order of his captain, William A. Fry, and Col. Hundly and the physician in charge of hospital, with the understanding that his discharge be forwarded him at his home, for the reason that he was then adjudged to be unable to ever perform military duty again; that he was taken out of said hospital by the assistance of his captain and put on the train at Cairo, Ill., which was the last time he ever saw said soldier until after the close of the war; that he, affiant, left said hospital and was sent to Company A, Ninth Illinois Regiment Infantry.

That on his return home from the Army in 1865 he again saw said soldier, at which time he was still suffering from said disability; that he is not related to said soldier; and has no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

In the matter of pension claim No. 723830, of Curtis P. Wise, of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county, Jacob Teal, who, being duly sworn, on his oath says that he is 59 years of age, and his post-office is Stone Fort, Ill. That he is well acquainted with Curtis P. Wise, the above-named soldier, and has been since he (soldier) was a boy. Well remembers when said Curtis P. Wise enlisted in the Army in the fall of 1862, at which time he was a sound and able-bodied man. That he also remembers when said Curtis P. Wise came home from the Army in the spring of 1863, at which time he was very low, and was suffering from diarrhea and the effects of frozen feet and legs. That he continued to suffer from said disease for several years after his return home as aforesaid. That he lived in the same neighborhood with said Curtis P. Wise from and before his return home in 1863, to the present time, and has had the means of knowing his physical condition each year to the present. That he knows as matter of fact that there was no time between the spring of 1863 and the close of the war in 1865 that the said Curtis P. Wise was able to have returned to his company, for the reason that he was confined to his bed and room and was so confined at the close of the war. That he made frequent visits to see said soldier, in fact, saw him almost weekly from his return home in 1863 to 1865, and often assisted in waiting on him. That he was treated by Dr. John Whitnel, who often called on him to assist him when dressing said soldier's legs and feet. That said soldier has not recovered from said disabilities or either of them to the present time. That he is not related to Curtis P. Wise and has no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Saline:

In the matter of the application of Curtis P. Wise, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, personally came before me, in aforesaid county and State, N. J. Rushing, a citizen of the town of Carrier Mills, county of Saline, State of Illinois, who is personally known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being by me duly sworn, declares as follows: That he was well acquainted with said claimant at and prior to his enlistment in 1862, at which time he was a sound and able-bodied man; that he saw claimant in the spring of 1863, immediately after he came out of the Army; he was then suffering from sore feet and legs, which he is well satisfied was caused by being frozen; he was also complaining of mumps, which had injured his left testicle; remembers seeing his tes-ticle at the time; that he knows he was in very bad health; very much emaciated; that he has been very well acquainted with claimant each year since 1863 to present time and knows that from some cause he (claimant) has not been able for the performance of manual labor during any year since 1863 to present time sufficient to obtain his sustenance more than one-fourth of his time or ability, and some parts of his time not so much; age, 54 years; that he knew said statement to be true of his own personal knowledge, derived from personal acquaintance and being in claimant's company each year from 1863 to present time; he further declares that he has no interest in said case, and is not concerned in its prosecution, and is not related to said applicant.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Saline County, ss:

In the matter of pension claim No. 723830, of Curtis P. Wise, of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county, T. J. Osburn, who, after being duly sworn, on his oath says, that he is 51 years of age, and has been since 1855. That in the fall of 1865 he commenced treating the said claimant for chronic diarrhea; also treated him for frozen feet and legs, which diseases, he was then informed by claimant, were contracted while in the Army, which he then had and still does have every reason to believe is true.

Judging at the time (1865) from the appearance of said claimant, and his knowledge and experience in such disease, that claimant was at the time in bad condition, wholly unable for any kind of duty or manual labor; that he was also informed by claimant that he had contracted said disabilities during the winter of 1863 and the latter part of 1862; that he would now give it as his opinion that if said disabilities were so contracted at the time aforesaid, that said claimant would have not at any time between the contracting of said disabilities and the time he first saw him in 1865 been able to have performed any kind of military duty, or to have traveled from his home and reported to his company; that he has seen claimant and treated him almost every year or gave him medical advice since 1865 to the present time; that he has not recovered from said disabilities, or either of them, at any time since he first treated him; that he regards the injuries to his feet and legs as the result of being frozen, and that the same is permanent and incurable, as it frequently breaks out in sores; that claimant may at times partially recover from diarrhea, but would again relapse; that he has all of the time aforesaid been very much debilitated and very weak, and never able to perform manual labor and do justice to his health; that he would consider him now wholly unable for the performance of any kind of manual exercise; that he is not related to claimant, and has no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

W. R. STALLIONS, Notary Public.

(Clerk's certificate on file in Pension Office.)

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think this a proper way to do business. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman from Texas objects, the question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk read this report with a great deal of rapidity; and I did not understand from the reading the character of the case except that the bill is for the relief of some man who deserted in the presence of the enemy.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. KILGORE. If I am mistaken in that view of the matter, the member in charge of the bill can correct me.

Mr. RAY. I think the gentleman has in mind the first report which was read. As I understood the reading of the last report, this is the case of a man who went home sick, under the promise that his discharge should be sent him, which was never done, and who continued sick until the close of the war. I think I am not mistaken in this regard.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I did not know that the other case had been disposed of. I heard the reading of the report as I came into the Hall.

Mr. ALLEN. May I ask you a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose this man did desert in the presence of the enemy, did you not at that time approve the act? [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Well, sir, times have changed; and with the changes which time has wrought men have changed. In the days to which my friend from Mississippi refers I have no doubt I would have been glad, as he would have been, to see all the men on that side desert; but they did not do it. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not know but that it may be well enough to relieve the charge of desertion in some cases, particularly where the circumstances attending the absence without leave are such as do not make the case strictly one of desertion. When a man deserts the Army in time of war, instead of his being relieved by act of Congress, the requirement of military law is that he should be shot. That, at any rate, was the law on our side.

Mr. DAVIS. A man may desert to keep from being shot.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, as suggested by my friend from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] sometimes men desert to keep from being shot.

Now, as to the statement made by my friend from New York, if that is the condition of the case, I perhaps ought not to make any objection. If the man is a good citizen now, and has borne himself bravely in voting the Republican or the Democratic ticket—

Mr. DAVIS. Or the People's ticket.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, or the People's ticket since the close of the war.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the restaurant people would be willing to give him a certificate of character. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. But the point that I would like to inquire about relates to the proof; that is to say, how all of these facts are secured; what is the source of the testimony, the affidavit of the party himself or his comrades? Is there anyone present who can enlighten the committee on that point?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It does not seem to appear from the report that the charge of desertion was ever entered against this soldier. It seems that he served faithfully until the last days of March, 1863, at which time he was sent home sick from Cairo by the captain of his company, and told that a discharge would be sent to him at his home. That discharge, it appears, was never sent or never received, and the purpose of this bill is to grant him the discharge which the captain said would be sent to him.

Mr. KILGORE. What time in the war was this?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. In the latter part of March, 1863. The evidence on file with the case is a certificate from Maj. Ainsworth, the affidavit of Capt. Wise, commanding his company, the affidavit of Capt. Fry, who apparently succeeded afterwards in command of the company—

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose that will be sufficient.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And several affidavits from privates and comrades. The facts seem to be well substantiated. It does not seem to come within that class of cases where the soldier was guilty of willful desertion. The discharge was never sent to him, although it is claimed that he was entitled to it. At that time a discharge was not regarded of so much importance as subsequently. If soldiers now desire to have their records perfected and the facts show they are entitled to it we should not hesitate to grant the request.

Mr. KILGORE. Was he sent home by reason of disability?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes; sent home sick.

Mr. KILGORE. Who is the chairman of the committee that reports this?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. OUTHWAITE.

Mr. KILGORE. I have a bill to remove a charge of desertion from a Maine volunteer who lives in my State now pending before that committee, and I can not get it reported.

Mr. ALLEN. I make the point of order on the gentleman from Texas that he must confine himself to the case under discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Well, we have about a thousand bills before that committee; it is a very diligent and laborious committee, and I have myself reported as many as twenty bills in one day. Probably the case of the Maine man now in Texas may be among the last of that thousand.

Mr. KILGORE. That is a good case.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I assure the gentleman that it will be attended to when it is reached. There never was a committee that attended to its business better than the Military Committee.

Mr. KILGORE. Accepting the statement of the gentleman, I will not make any further row now.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM STIMSON.

* The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1424) for the relief of Hiram Stimson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Hiram Stimson, a late private in Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and substitute therefor "absent without leave" from July 15, 1863, to September 30, 1864, when he enlisted in Company M in the Twelfth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, and served faithfully under the name of Arnold Bennett until mustered out and honorably discharged on the 23d day of June, 1865; and the Secretary of War is further authorized, upon the surrender of the discharge issued to the said Hiram Stimson under the name of Arnold Bennett, or proof of its loss or destruction, to cause to be issued to the said Hiram Stimson, as a member of Company M, Twelfth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, an honorable discharge in his proper name and to correct the official records to show his service under that name.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add to the end of the bill: "Provided, however, That no pay or emoluments shall become due by virtue of this act."

Mr. ALLEN. I would like to have the report read. The report was read at length.

Mr. ALLEN. I would like to make an inquiry about this case in all good faith. As I recollect something of the history of those times, there were very large bounties paid to men who enlisted in the Army at about that period, and I desire to know if there is any gentleman present who can give us information as to whether or not this soldier, by enlisting in the Army under an assumed name, got an additional bounty. If he did, I shall feel constrained to vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. MEREDITH. And also whether he gets a pension under his assumed name. That is another pertinent fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 73—

Mr. GRADY. I make a point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The count of the House has not been completed yet.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask permission to withdraw this bill from consideration for the present and allow it to retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the gentleman should adopt this suggestion: Permit the bill to go back to the Committee on Military Affairs and to allow them to inquire into the suggestion I have just made, whether or not this man secured an additional bounty by changing from one regiment to another. It will be more satisfactory to the House to know that fact.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The report does not say anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the bill was withdrawn.

MARGARET CHRISTIEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4886) to pension Leon Christien.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Christien, mother of Leon Christien, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Artillery. Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to pension Margaret, mother of Leon, Christien."

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire why this lady can not obtain her pension through the Pension Department under the pension laws?

Mr. MCKINNEY. I will explain that at the proper time. If this is a proper time I will make the explanation now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to do that.

Mr. MCKINNEY. In this case of Leon Christien it is claimed that he was shot while he was attempting to run the guards. The evidence makes it appear that he did nothing of the kind. The man had been sick in the hospital for many months and at that time was convalescent. He was walking out, and the evidence goes to show that another man was trying to run the guard who was shot at but was not touched, but Leon Christien was killed.

Now, his mother has no means of getting a pension from the Department on that account, and the whole evidence, the fact that he was sick and convalescent from the hospital, and was in such a condition that he had no disposition or desire to run the guard, convinced the committee that it was an error, that he was not the man who was doing the wrong; and another man has already testified in a letter that he was the one who was running the guard, who was shot at and was not touched, while Leon Christien was killed.

Mr. TARSNEY. If that be the case, why has not the Pension Department granted the pension?

Mr. MCKINNEY. Because he did not die in the line of duty.

Mr. TARSNEY. But he received his wound in the line of duty.

Mr. MCKINNEY. He was killed there, but the charge was made against him that he was shot while attempting to run the line.

Mr. TARSNEY. The Pension Office must have found that to be true, or they would not have denied the pension.

Mr. MCKINNEY. There is no positive evidence, but there is cumulative evidence.

Mr. TARSNEY. Then you gave him the benefit of the doubt?

Mr. MCKINNEY. Yes, because the cumulative evidence convinced the committee that the Department was wrong. The guard had no right to shoot him anyhow, even it were true, but we believed it was not true.

[Mr. COBB of Alabama withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Chairman, I know very little about the merits of this claim, except as I get it from gentlemen on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also from the report they have made to this House. It seems to me that this pension claim, being a claim for the relief of a mother more than 90 years of age, ought not to be treated as a laughing matter by this House. It seems to me that a question of this importance ought to receive the serious consideration of every Representative in this Hall. And, sir, it seems to me that no gentleman, from whatever section of this country he may come, ought to stand upon the floor and consume an hour in reiterating arguments which would seem to have no bearing upon the merits of this question. [Applause.]

Now, sir, I wish that I had the grace and the ability of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], who stood upon this floor a few nights ago and discussed this question in a dispassionate and fair manner, concerning the way in which every pension claim should be treated by this House, by every member of it. Now, sir, I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] if he intended to-night to carry out his threat which he made last Friday night. He denied that he made any such threat. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the statement which the gentleman made, and to leave it to this House to say whether or not he did make a threat and whether he is mistaken or whether I am.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me? Does he not know—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSBY. Not now. I will read what he said last Friday night.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No sir; I will not give any such promise. I here and now give fair warning (and therefore you gentlemen who are interested in pension matters had better vote to excuse me) that if I come here regularly (and I will do so if it be the pleasure of the House) I will come here for the purpose of discussing these pension bills one at a time; and I will claim an hour on each bill.

[Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. CROSBY. Not yet. I say that I stated the truth about it, and that by the action of the gentleman to-night he is carrying out the threat which he made last Friday night. So much for that. Now, I will yield.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. You were here that night?

Mr. CROSBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Do not you know that that whole matter was stated humorously, and was so taken by the House?

Mr. CROSBY. No; I do not.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The very language used shows it.

Mr. CROSBY. I say, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that would lead the House to believe that he was in all earnestness, it is the fact that he has carried out to the letter the threat he made last Friday night. Now, sir, there is on this Calendar pension bill after pension bill; but I submit that there are a hundred private war claims upon the Calendar where there is one pension claim; and I find that on one page of the Calendar, though I have not the exact page, there are twenty-eight private war claims in one resolution. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will vote against any one of those claims?

Now, I say, that this thing is all wrong. I am here to do my duty in these pension claims, and as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I would not give any man or any woman a pension if I believe he or she were not justly entitled to it. From day to day in our committee I am glad to be able to sit down upon desertion cases which are not meritorious. As you all know, that committee has jurisdiction of these desertion cases, and where we find a man deliberately deserted in the face of the enemy, he will get no relief from that committee, so far as I can help it, while I am a member of it. But when we find a deserving case, an honest case, it seems to me that we ought to act upon it conscientiously and seriously, and not jokingly.

I submit that it is hardly fair to the other members of this House that the time be taken up here in discussing for an hour a small bill of this character where the facts are within a very narrow compass. We should dispose of it and pass to the next bill. Yet what is the result? We get no result whatever, and as has been said here to-night, we have been in session for four months and not a single pension bill has passed on a Friday night, although a large number of pension cases have been passed in the House during the day sessions.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. CROSBY. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Have you ever known me to obstruct the passage of any bill? You have complained of what has been done in the past.

Mr. CROSBY. I want to answer, Mr. Chairman, that I do not want to do injustice to the gentleman. I have never known him to object to any claim except this one since I have been a member of the House or to appear in the rôle of an obstructionist in this or any other kind of legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all there is about it. Let us go on and consider these cases fairly, give them fair treatment, not pass over them hurriedly, but after a fair and reasonable amount of discussion, let us have a vote taken and pass on to the next bill. Consider them on the merits, if they have any merits, and if they have no merits reject them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up the time of the House during the three years I have been here exceeding twenty-five minutes. [Cries of "Vote!"] Well, we will vote in a few minutes.

Mr. KILGORE. Do I understand that the gentleman is not going on with his speech?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. I was going to say that if the gentleman from Illinois was not going to make a speech I would make a speech myself.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I have been serving for the last three years, Mr. Chairman, along with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] in one committee, and I have found him very gentlemanly and a very elegant gentleman; but I have always found him, when it comes to these Friday-night sessions, somewhat opposed to the legislation which is supposed to be debated and passed on Friday nights. Now, as I said in the first place, I have never, during my whole term here, occupied exceeding thirty minutes on all the Friday nights put together.

Mr. O'DONNELL. You spoke in behalf of the ladies one night.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I believe in the character of legislation which is sought to be passed at these Friday-night sessions. It is a character of legislation that meets a certain class of people who can not be reached by the general law. During the last term of the Fifty-first Congress I know that it was said by some gentlemen on this floor, and their faces I see now, and they are gentlemen whom I will see in the next Congress, as I expect to be here. [Laughter.] I know it was said that this character of legislation was not agreeable to them; but I will say it is with the masses of this House, as I believe when a special bill comes up to pension some old soldier or some army nurse the majority of this House, whether on the Democratic or Republican side, if it is a worthy bill, are in favor of passing it. [Applause.]

I will give to my friends on that side of the House the credit to say that I believe they are honest and honorable in reference to these matters, but I will also take occasion this one time to say that I believe there are those in this House at present, and they have been here ever since I have had a seat on this floor, who prefer rather to hear their own voices and the plaudits of the galleries than to do justice to an honorable cause. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have committees appointed by the Speaker of this House. Whether he be Democrat or whether he be Republican, he is supposed to select his committees with proper judgment and with due regard to the transaction of the business of this great country. In the last Congress we had our committees, as we have in this. And I am willing to accept the reports of our Committees on Pensions and pass the bills they recommend. It was complained that "Czarism" was exercised by our Speaker, but I believe that a majority of this House to-day would agree with me in saying that they would favor the Czarism, as they call it, of the last House in comparison with the loose rules of this House.

I was in favor of the rules of the last House, and I would be willing to be governed by them now and to cut off all filibustering which the small Republican minority here might see fit to indulge in. I have never favored filibustering. I believe that when any measure comes up before the Congress of the United States it should be carefully, candidly, and fully discussed by such members as choose to discuss it, and then should be promptly disposed of.

But, I am wandering from the subject of these Friday night sessions. [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. No; not at this time. You have had an hour. I beg pardon for the abruptness of that remark. In a few minutes I will yield. I was not in the Army myself. Sometimes when talking with my colleagues on the committee, several of whom were in the Confederate service, and when I hear them talking over those dark and bloody days I feel like saying: Thank God I was not old enough to see the blood and the suffering which those on that side of the House as well as gentlemen on this side have seen.

But I desire to say here and now, Mr. Chairman, that while I was not in the Army myself, while too young then, I am neither too young nor too old to-day to remember the grand services that were rendered by the boys in blue, who stood by the flag of their country and maintained the Constitution and the institutions of our Government, and who, by their services and their sacrifices, have preserved to us, as has been said hundreds of times on the other side of the House as well as on this, the grandest Government that this earth has ever seen. [Applause.]

I trust I shall never be too old to remember the services of those men. To those who see fit to come here—and I would not trespass upon the time of the House to say this but for the fact that it seems, from the course of this evening's proceedings, as well as the proceedings at these pension sessions during the last four months, that nothing is intended to be done—to those who have come here night after night, week after week, month after month, for the purpose of obstructing the business of pension legislation, I can only say: For God's sake, gentlemen, do something to put yourself in touch with mankind and the better emotions of the nature of your fellowman.

It is said that the milk of the cocoanut has a wonderfully soothing effect on a soured nature or an irascible disposition. To you, gentlemen, without naming you, I say, try it, drink deep from that milky fountain, and see if it will not be of some benefit to you. [Laughter.]

I doubt not that your hearts are in the regular locality and properly placed in your physical anatomy [laughter], but, judging from the course of your conduct in this and the preceding Congress, I greatly fear that your digestive organs are tremendously disarranged. [Laughter and applause.] Do something to improve their condition. Or, if that principle is not congenial with your own ideas and dispositions, then for God's sake do nothing, and give to those of us who are willing and anxious to work an opportunity of doing so. [Applause.] To better fit yourselves for the day's duty try this remedy.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Not at present.

Mr. MEREDITH. I only wanted to ask the gentleman if the speech that he has written was prepared for this occasion, as it does not seem to be germane to the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will say to my friend from Virginia that this was not prepared for this occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEREDITH. I imagined not.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I have never yet prepared a speech, but during the last four months I have from time to time jotted down a few points to use on such an occasion as this, and I have determined to use them now, as I suppose from your course this evening that you gentlemen do not intend to do anything except to keep us here until half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. MEREDITH. That is exactly what you are doing. [Laughter.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I understood my friend from Illinois to say the speech which he is now delivering was not prepared for this occasion.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Nor for any other occasion. I have no speech prepared.

Mr. POWERS. That being so, if it would be in order, Mr. Chairman, I would make a motion that the gentleman have leave to present this speech on some other occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, with the extreme courtesy which I can exercise I extend to my friend on this side of the House [Mr. POWERS] my thanks for the uncourteous remarks which he has just made. [Laughter and applause.] I supposed that possibly he was in sympathy with the character of the remarks I am making. If he is not, I do not desire to have the short time which I shall occupy broken in upon by any further interruptions.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I do not desire to be further interrupted, although I will at any time yield for a gentlemanly question which requires an answer.

Mr. POWERS. I thought I might be permitted to make a personal explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, to continue, let me say to the gentlemen who have been obstructing pension legislation here for four months that, as has been said on that side of the House to-night, we have not during that period passed one single private pension bill—I simply take the statement of the Democratic side upon that subject and reiterate it, supposing it is true—to those who are disposed to interrupt these proceedings on Friday nights let me give (and I hope you will take it in the proper spirit) a little advice. Tear yourselves loose—

Mr. FITHIAN. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Not at present, Brother FITHIAN.

Mr. FITHIAN. I want to remind the gentleman—

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Oh, I will get through before half past 10; but you will not pass any bills, I know, before that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes gentlemen will observe order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. To those obstructionists, Mr. Chairman, let me say by way of advice, tear yourselves loose from the soothing breath and the tender embraces of the goddess of sleep. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] Rise from your downy beds in dreamland with the earliest notes of the lark. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, this is good advice, whether you see fit to take it or not.

Mr. KILGORE. I rise to a point of order. I insist that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] has the floor, and is entitled to a hearing. I think order ought to be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is sustained. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Rise from your downy beds in dreamland with the earliest notes of the lark. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, I do not care to have you listen to this. I do not suppose you will be benefited by it, or that you will improve by the advice which I am giving you. It is only for the benefit of the country; that is all.

Get out into the fresh air. [Laughter and applause.] Well, it seems from the applause that but very few have been indulging in this character of exercise. Look around you on nature as she smiles on the opening buds of spring. Look over the calm and placid face of the broad and beautiful waters of the Potomac. Listen to the music of the murmuring brooks. [Derisive laughter.] That, Mr. Chairman, is a different kind of music, according to the reports of yesterday's proceedings in the House, from that to which many gentlemen here have been accustomed to listen.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Drink in the pure and exhilarating—[laughter]—not the kind of exhilaration that you get in the restaurant here, as appears from the report of yesterday, but drink in the pure and exhilarating breath of nature's God. [Laughter and applause.] Listen to the twittering notes of the forest songsters as they warble forth from their tiny throats their simple songs of praise to the Great Unseen but all-seeing spirit which moves and rules the universe. [Applause.] Stand beside that beautiful white monument erected by a grateful people to the memory of him—[laughter and derisive applause.] Well, gentlemen, your demonstrations can not stop me until half past 10. [Cries of "Goon!"]

Stand beside that beautiful white monument, gentlemen on the Democratic side, erected by a grateful people to the memory of him who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Draw from that spirit of departed greatness some laudable inspiration to guide your course while acting as the accredited representatives of a portion of this great people. Gaze on the beautiful orb of day. [Derisive applause and laughter.] I presume there are not many here who have ever seen his smiling face.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will please suspend a moment, until the House comes to order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. My colleague is making an argument in favor of the pending bill, and I think he ought to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks gentlemen to take their seats and preserve order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I thank my colleague from the Nineteenth district [Mr. WILLIAMS] who canvassed my district against me the last time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend. Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Gaze on that beautiful orb of day. [Loud laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to gentlemen having their fun and enjoying themselves. I have no objection whatever to it. I do not desire to curtail them, if they think this amusing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to be heard, and the Chair hopes that members will resume their seats and preserve order upon the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I beg of the Chair that he will not interfere with the pleasure of any gentleman. It is entirely agreeable to me if they choose to applaud or laugh.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will now resume his remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Well, then, to begin again on a sentence on which I was stopped, I will say to my friends on the other side of the House, gaze on that beautiful orb of day [laughter and applause] as he lifts his smiling face above the mountains in the eastern horizon, and with his genial rays—

Mr. CROSBY. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I do not yield for an interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a question of order, and will state it.

Mr. CROSBY. The point of order is this, if the gentleman will allow me to state it, that inasmuch as we came here to transact pension business, it seems to me that we ought to transact it. The gentleman has consumed a large part of an hour with remarks that are by no means germane to the pending bill.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I am coming to that part of it immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. CROSBY. I make this point of order because the gentleman has spoken nearly an hour from the Republican side, and has not touched the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report paragraph 1 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it hopes he will proceed in order, in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I rose and respectfully addressed the Chairman of this House, we being in Committee of the Whole, and not, as the rule specifies, in the House with the Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I do not desire to be interrupted.

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Chairman, with all respect for the gentleman, I ask a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CROSBY. I have stated the point of order, that the gentleman having spoken nearly an hour, and not having touched the merits of this bill, further remarks are not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to an hour if he chooses to occupy the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will not occupy that length of time.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair hopes the gentleman will confine his remarks to the question.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I am coming directly to the point at issue.

Mr. Chairman, as some gentlemen have spoken about that beautiful orb [laughter], I will say to them, look upon him as he rises above the mountains in the eastern horizon and with his genial rays kisses away the tears of night [laughter and applause] which still linger on the beautiful flowers and tremble in the dewdrops as they hang upon the tiny blades of grass. [Laughter and applause.] Do this, gentlemen on that side of the House—and I am not talking to this side now—do that on Friday morning next, and I feel—yes, I know—that you will be better men, better citizens [applause], more patriotic, more impressed with the great duties of our short lives and the utter insignificance of man when at his best. [Applause.]

It will put you in touch with your fellow-men, stimulate your spirits [applause] for the business of life, and soften your natures towards the suffering and needs of those who are now standing so near the border line 'twixt this and the great unknown, that the shimmering rays of eternity's sunshine, mingling and blending with the gathering shadows of age, have formed around them the twilight of life. [Laughter and applause.] They need some help from us. It would cheer their spirits ere they take their flight to the embrace of those who, with shadowy hands, are beckoning them on to the future of their existence in the unseen world. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, try this prescription—I give it to you free. [Applause.] Try it on Friday morning next; you will do nothing to-night, and it may be that you will then come to the House in the evening with smiling faces, and resolution and determination to aid in passing some of the many bills now on our Calendar to pension some old veteran soldier, who is not sufficiently provided for by the existing general law; or some deserving woman who served as an army nurse, who wiped the death damp from the fevered brow of some brave boy in blue, or kindly bore his last sad message of love to sorrowing ones at home; and when his quivering pulse was stilled and "death had kissed his eyelids down," lovingly and tenderly folded upon his breast the Stars and Stripes and bade his spirit a fond but sad farewell. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, without intending to reflect upon the arguments made by any members of this committee this evening, I beg leave to say on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that it is not the purpose of that committee, so far as its individual members are concerned, to consume the time of the House or of the committee with lengthy speeches upon various bills that may come before this committee. I beg leave to present to you just this one square question to-night.

We have now fifty minutes of the two hours and a half left of this evening for the consideration of this one bill, and I beg leave to say to you that the question is squarely this: Here is this old mother, 90 years of age, living in a poverty in which she can not help herself, the mother of a boy who lost his life after two years and more than four months of honorable service, who lost his life by a gunshot wound—whether it was by his mistake or however it may have come—and the question squarely comes, upon the evidence in this case, will we vote "yea" or "nay" upon laying aside this bill with a favorable report?

Am I, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, assuming too much—I beg you will believe that I do not so intend it—if I ask this committee, without further discussion, to come to a vote upon the question presented by the motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable report? And I am sure, gentlemen of this committee, that you will receive the thanks of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who have examined this matter carefully, and who have presented their report upon their consciences. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to engage in this discussion to-night, and I will not detain the committee very long in the few observations I have to make. We have lost sight of the case which is before the committee in our effort to "soar among the stars and gaze upon the bright and burning orb of day." Now, Mr. Chairman, here is the case before the House: A young man seems to have been slain while in the commission of an unlawful act, as the records of the War Department disclose. That record has stood for twenty-five years or more. Now, his representative comes before Congress with a bill to correct that record. The record as it stands makes a prima facie case against him. It is conclusive against him as to any right he might have in the Pension Office.

Now, if this soldier was slain in the discharge of his duty, if the facts exist as they have been stated upon this floor, the surviving and dependent mother can go to the Pension Office and secure a pension. They say she can not do that for the reason that he was slain in the commission of an unlawful act, an attempt to run the guard. That is the charge in the Department. They seek to escape the effects of that charge by a theory which they admit upon this floor is not supported by proof. The committee and those who have spoken to this question, say that there is some evidence to the effect that he was not running the guard, and that some one else was violating the army regulations on that subject, that the guard fired at the offender, and that this young man was slain accidentally. There is some proof to that effect.

Well, now, in no court under the sun, in the presence of no jury that could be impaneled in this country, could you recover on such a case. Here you have a prima facie case to rebut, and you undertake to rebut it by a theory which is not supported by the proof, according to your own confession. Now, they say, we ought to consider these measures. That is not the question. You do not care anything about considering them; that is a great majority of the members present do not. You want to vote upon them and to pass them without consideration; and I have seen it done a hundred times in this House.

As I said here on a recent occasion, I have seen bills passed in this House which came from the committee with an adverse report. I have never seen one defeated on a square vote since I have been here, and I have seen thousands of them passed.

Now, in the argument of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] I presume he intended to address to me a lecture for the course which I have chosen to pursue with reference to legislation of this character.

These gentlemen who are urging this case and who are rebuking other members who insist that business ought to be transacted in this House in a business-like way have said the Congress has been in session four months and that no single pension bill has passed this House. That is accurate to this extent. It has been in session, so far as legislation of this kind is before it, a little over a month and a half; but that is about as near the fact as my friends have come to-night in the discussion of this question on the other side.

I have never, since I have been a member of this House, from the 4th day of December, 1887, to this blessed moment, resisted the passage of a pension bill in the House of Representatives at a Friday night session—never. Now, I know that my friend from South Dakota, if he were out behind a tree, would say, "That is a whopper." I have never, since I have been a member of this House, seen a lawfully constituted House of Representatives in this Hall on a Friday evening at a pension session.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, will my friend allow me right there?

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; not for a minute.

I never have seen the House of Representatives assembled here on a Friday night. The Constitution says that a majority of the members of this House shall constitute a quorum. It takes 167 members to constitute a majority. There never has been a time within my recollection in this House when a quorum has been present to transact business on a Friday-night session.

I do not believe much in the merit of the bills that pass this House, or that passed the last Congress, or the Congress before. I believe that nearly every individual in this country who earned the bounty of the Government, and who needs it, can under the pension laws, which are liberal and liberally construed, get all he or she is entitled to. [Applause.]

Well, if you encourage me I will talk all night. [Laughter.]

I say that I am not impressed with the merits of a great majority of these private bills that are considered in this House on Friday nights, or in the private bills that come into the House at any time. I have antagonized all such legislation, because it does not meet the sanction of my judgment.

Now, if these bills were ever so meritorious, if they were such as to meet the support of every member of this House, which is composed of 332 members, I believe it to be my duty, and that is a sufficient warrant for my conduct, to see that this House is properly constituted before it undertakes to enact legislation of that kind. So believing, I have chosen to demand that a quorum shall be present on these occasions, and I have that right. Why, the Democrats have a majority of fifty or sixty above a quorum.

And it is the right of any member to demand a quorum. However we may consider this legislation, however much demand there may be for it, it ought to be enacted in accordance with law, and in accordance with the rules which have been prescribed by this House for its government.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the provocation was ever greater than it is now to say a few words, and yet I must not say more than this: I want it to go on the record that every man who is opposing this legislation here to-night is a man who will get up and make a long speech, and every man who has made such a lengthy address is opposed to this pension. By his very act of long speaking he has consumed time that would have resulted in the passage of bills for the relief of old veterans.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. If the gentleman's observation has reference to me—

Mr. BUTLER. It had reference to you.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then I denounce it as untrue, and my record so shows.

Mr. BUTLER. The record is wind, instead of voting.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. On your side it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. As many as are in favor of the adoption of the amendments will say aye—

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the gentleman from Iowa has any right to dictate to me, or to reflect on me for the course I have pursued. I do not accept his lecture, and when I want to be lectured I would like to have something to do with the choice of the man who is to lecture me.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYNUM. The Chair was taking a vote, and a gentleman can not take the floor when the House is voting.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say in regard to my remarks that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] had already stated that he opposed such legislation. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] had already said that he opposed such legislation. There was only one other left, and I wanted to apply it to him as well, because it was intimated that men who wished to kill time killed it because they were not favorable to such legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a personal explanation. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota has been recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois rises to a question of personal privilege, which he will state.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not yield the floor. I believe I have the floor, as I understood the Chair.

Mr. HARRIES. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from South Dakota yields the floor, he is entitled to it.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not yield.

Mr. HARRIES. I rise to a question of order. We were taking a vote. The affirmative vote was taken, and I do not think there is anything in order until that vote is completed.

Mr. PICKLER. Since that time—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was taking a vote, but the gentleman from Texas rose and addressed the Chair, and the Chair then stopped taking the vote and recognized the gentleman, who was in order. The gentleman from South Dakota is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. PICKLER. I only wish to say a few words as a member of the House who has attended these Friday-night sessions regularly for the past four months. I make no reflections upon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] or any other gentleman as to his course upon this floor. He answers only to his own conscience and his own constituents, and I am not here to upbraid him.

But, as a member who has not the time to lose, if we are simply to lose these Friday nights, and in behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, composed of gentlemen who, I believe, are working earnestly and faithfully in this business and also in behalf of members of the House on both sides, I wish to say this: If gentlemen feel it to be their conscientious duty to come here and raise this question of the Constitution and of a quorum night after night, will they not be kind enough to their fellow-members to announce it plainly and let us do away with these Friday night sessions? Is not this boys' play? Is it worthy of the Representatives of the American people to come here as we have come Friday night after Friday night during these four months though never up to this moment have we passed a single bill through the House at a Friday night session.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman says that this has been going on for four months. These Friday evening sessions were not provided for until the rules were adopted, and that was in February, and since then two or three of these sessions have been vacated by unanimous consent; so that there have not been more than four or five of these Friday evening sessions altogether in this Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not say how many of them there had been, but we have been here a good number of nights, as all members know who have attended these pension sessions. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Texas takes this course in the interest of economy. I understand that he claims it is in the interest of economy; but I am here to say that the gentleman, by his course here, has caused the expenditure of more of the people's money, by retarding the business of this House, than would have pensioned every soldier for whom there is a bill on the Calendar for his natural life. [Applause.] It is the gentleman's privilege to do that if he pleases. All that I wish to say is that if gentlemen on the other side, two or three or half a dozen of them, have determined to keep this business up they ought to so state and let us govern ourselves accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman speaks of "the other side of the House." There is a gentleman on the Republican side who has occupied a good deal of time to-night. Does the gentleman answer for him also?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will answer for myself.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Illinois is probably able to answer for himself.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Entirely so.

Mr. PICKLER. There is one thing, Mr. Chairman, that stands out conspicuously, and I say it with no purpose to make reflections upon a great many gentlemen on the other side of this House. That one thing is that the point of "no quorum" at these Friday night sessions has never originated on this side of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH R. CRAWFORD.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3838) to pension Elizabeth R. Crawford, widow of C. A. Crawford, soldier in the Creek war, 1836; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to at once place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth R. Crawford, widow of C. A. Crawford, soldier in McMillan's regiment, Capt. George Patrick's company, Alabama Volunteers, in the Creek war, 1836, and that she is hereby allowed a pension of $20 per month, payable monthly.

SEC. 2. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3838) granting a pension to Elizabeth Crawford, have considered the same, and report:

The records show that the claimant's late husband, C. A. Crawford, was enrolled June 19, 1836, as a private in Capt. Patrick's company, Alabama Mounted Volunteers, subsequently Capt. Patrick's company, First Battalion, McMillan's Fourth Regiment, Alabama Volunteers, to serve three months, and mustered out of service, with the company, July 21, 1836.

Jeremiah Hackett and Thomas H. McMurtrey, citizens of Sebastian County, Ark., testify to the identity of the claimant as the widow of the above-named soldier; that she is 78 years old, of very feeble health, and has no support, only charity.

Your committee, believing the bill to be a meritorious one, recommend its passage with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know why this bill should especially provide that the pension shall be payable monthly, when the rule is that pensions shall be payable quarterly. Is there any special reason for the change in this case? I understand that it is not convenient for the Pension Bureau to make these payments monthly.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "payable monthly," at the end of ninth line. The retention of those words was an oversight on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, the objection I have to this bill is that it is private special legislation in a case which ought to be provided for by a general law. I suppose there are a thousand or fifteen hundred survivors of the Indian wars from 1836 to 1840. They live mostly in the South—in Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Florida, Texas—and some have emigrated to the Western States. They are all very old, and as a class they are poor. I am not in favor (and that is one of the grounds on which I have resisted legislation of this character) of singling out one case among a thousand which are just as meritorious, and conferring special favor in that case to the exclusion of others.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], I believe he repudiated North Dakota or North Dakota repudiated him, I am not certain what his remark was, made a remarkable statement in his speech just now. He said that in the course I had pursued here during the four or five Friday nights when we have attempted to transact business I had wasted more money than it would take to pay all the soldiers whom it is proposed to pension by special laws. He made that broad statement, and I believe he went farther and said that in the course I have pursued I have wasted more money than it would take to pay all the pensions of all the soldiers on the pension roll.

A MEMBER. Oh, no, "on the Calendar."

Mr. KILGORE. Well, then I will correct that statement. He said that by the course I have pursued I had wasted more money than it would take to pay the pensions of all the claimants whose bills are now on the Calendar. That, I am told, is the statement he made. Well that is a wild statement. How or when or under what circumstances I can have wasted a dollar by the course I have pursued I can not understand. The salaries of members of Congress do not stop when the House adjourns or when the House is not transacting business. The salaries of the employés in and about this House go on night and day, summer and winter, seed-time and harvest, Sundays and all other days.

Now, I can not understand how so remarkable a statement could have been made by anybody except the gentleman from South Dakota. It may cost the members of Congress the expenditure of some shoe leather in walking up here, or 10 cents to pay their car fare, or a dollar and a half or $2 to pay their carriage fare; but how it costs the Government any more for me and the few gentlemen who are associated with me in this movement to come into this House on a Friday night and "kick up a row" than to let things go on smoothly I can not comprehend; and nobody else can, I reckon.

I do not think the gentleman from South Dakota can make that matter clear. I observe that the gentleman is now out of the House; I am sorry; I thought he was present. I simply wanted to make that statement; and I want to emphasize my objection to private legislation like this in cases which can be and ought to be provided for by general legislation.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

NOAH STALEY.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2496) granting a pension to Noah Staley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Noah Staley, who was a soldier in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2496) granting a pension to Noah Staley, have considered the same, and beg leave to report as follows:

Relative to the service of the claimant the War Department reports as follows:

"The muster-out roll of Capt. McCoun's company, Spy Battalion, Second Brigade Illinois Mounted Volunteers, dated August 15, 1832 (the only record of the company on file in this Department), reports Noah Staley, a sergeant, enrolled May 12, 1832, to serve ninety days, with remark: 'Horse and equipments left, having broke down on a forced march to the battle ground on the Mississippi River; furloughed at Prairie du Chien.'"

In his petition for relief the claimant states under oath that he was discharged from the above-named organization September 12, 1832; that he is now 81 years old, in very bad health, so crippled up by injuries and rheumatism that he can not walk without a crutch and stick, and in needy circumstances, owning no real estate and but little personal property.

E. L. Stewart and Thomas K. Wilson, citizens of Carmi, Ill., testify to the claimant's identity, and that he is a truthful, honorable man, and one whose statements are worthy of belief.

Mr. Staley resides at Carmi, Ill.

The bill is returned with a favorable recommendation.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW J. JONES.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3123) to pension Andrew J. Jones for services in the Indian wars.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension rolls of the Government the name of Andrew J. Jones, of Capt. James Brown's Spy Company, Second Regiment of Oregon Mounted Volunteers, for meritorious services, and for severe wounds received in March, 1856, while engaged in battle with the hostile Rogue River and Cow Creek Indians in Cow Creek Valley, in the then Territory, now State of Oregon, and allow him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendments proposed in the concluding paragraph of the report were read.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not understand the effect of those amendments.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. With the amendment, the concluding language of the bill will be: "and allow him a pension for said wounds, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws."

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to inquire whether the report has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3123) granting a pension to Andrew J. Jones, have considered the same and report:

The muster roll of Capt. James Barnes's spy company, Oregon Volunteers, organized for service in the Rogue River Indian war of 1855 and 1856, reports service of Andrew Jones as private from February 23 until July 3, 1856.

Accompanying the bill is a sworn statement by the claimant to the effect that he is 69 years old and has been a resident of Douglas County, Oregon, ever since 1852; that in the latter part of 1855 the Rogue River and Cow Creek Indians broke out in open hostilities against the whites, and he enlisted in the above-named organization to aid in its suppression; that during the all-day battle of Cow Creek on March 27, 1856, he received a wound in the back of the neck from an Indian bullet, and that from the effects of said wound he remained in hospital under treatment until the 8th of July following, and that he had suffered more or less in consequence ever since; that said wound interferes with the pursuit of his trade (that of carpenter); he dare not trust himself any great distance from the ground, as his head grows dizzy, and he suffers from throbbing pains in the back part of his neck and head.

He further states that he has been subject to rheumatic and neuralgic pains ever since said war, which he believes to have been contracted by exposure during said winter campaign, assisted and aggravated by said wound.

John Kelsey, a citizen of Burton County, Oregon, and late colonel of the regiment in which the claimant served, corroborates under oath the applicant's allegations relative to receipt of said wound; this witness states he saw the claimant lying on the ground where he had fallen when wounded, and he (witness) believed the wound to be a dangerous one. He further testifies that the claimant was a good and brave soldier and has always been regarded as a worthy, honorable, and deserving citizen.

Dr. N. P. Bunnell, of Roseburg, Oregon, gives a detailed description of the wound in question, and states that the same causes constant and severe pains when the claimant is exposed to the heat of the sun.

Isaac Boyle, of Douglas County, Oregon, testifies to being a member of the same company with the claimant, and has personal knowledge that the claimant was wounded as alleged.

It is further reliably shown that the claimant has never recovered from said wound, and that he is in reduced circumstances and an extremely poor man. These facts are certified to by the gentleman who introduced the bill.

After a full and careful consideration of the case, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Amend by striking out after the word "pension," in line 11, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "for said wounds, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws;" also amend by spelling the name of the captain under whom the claimant served, "Barnes" instead of "Brown."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the reading of the report in this case that the service was performed in 1855 or 1856.

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. What I want now to inquire about is this: Was this man in the service of the United States, or in the service of the State or Territory of Oregon?

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen from Texas will permit me, I will state that these companies engaged at that time in this Indian war were provided for by the Territorial government of Oregon—Oregon being a Territory at the time. They were subsequently, however, paid by the United States, and this gentleman whose name is mentioned in the bill was at that time in the actual service of the Government under the command of the colonel of his regiment, a regiment which was provided for by the laws of the Territory as then organized.

Mr. KILGORE. I would be very sorry indeed to interfere with my friend from Oregon on this subject or any other, but I do not think that those persons who have been soldiers in the service of a State or Territory are entitled to pensions from the United States Government. I do not believe that it has been the custom in the past to grant pensions in such cases, and I should be under the painful necessity of antagonizing this measure to-night. I might, some time hereafter, on looking into the matter with more care, be induced to change my mind.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him further—

Mr. KILGORE. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to state that these volunteers were recognized by the United States Government, were received into the service, and that Gen. Wool, with whom the gentleman from Texas was probably personally acquainted, a major-general in the regular Army of the United States, assumed command of these volunteers after they were mustered in pursuant to the laws of the Territory, took charge of the command, issued his orders to them, and they were absolutely under his control and direction as members of his command after having offered their services to the Territory. Let me state further that they received their compensation from the United States Government. They received bounty-land warrants, and they did good service all over the Pacific coast.

Mr. KILGORE. That is the rule, I will state to the gentleman from Oregon, in all cases in which the State or Territorial troops coöperated with the Federal troops in any operation against the common enemy. They report to the commanding officer of the United States service at the point where their services are required. They are under his command, and if they do service under his command they are paid for it by the Government. They are entitled also, perhaps, to the bounty under any law which may be specially provided for them. But I do not think that Congress has ever yet undertaken to give pensions to soldiers engaged in the service of a State, although acting under command of a Federal officer.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him again, I desire to state that it is within my own personal knowledge that a number of cases of this character have been passed since my participation in the proceedings of Congress. We have passed quite a number of just such bills. I have several in mind now, and can give the gentleman from Texas the names if he desires.

Mr. KILGORE. Some cases which you got through yourself?

Mr. HERMANN. Not only myself, but other gentlemen too; and I want to say that they were no more meritorious than this. And I know the gentleman's good heart, and that he will probably give me a moment's opportunity to state something of my own personal knowledge in regard to this case.

Mr. KILGORE. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. I am personally acquainted with the applicant in this case; I have known him for the past thirty-three years. Shortly after the Indian hostilities, mentioned in the report, I formed his acquaintance. He is now old; one of the best citizens in the community; he is poor, disabled, having received a wound at the time of which the report speaks, which has disabled him from that time to the present. Now, there being no legislation of a general character, he is prevented from obtaining relief which is granted to the soldiers of the late war, of the Mexican war, or any other war in which this Government has been engaged.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERMANN. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Were the Territorial troops to which the gentleman has referred ever mustered into the Army of the United States?

Mr. HERMANN. Not regularly mustered, I think.

Mr. MALLORY. Was not an officer sent there to muster them in?

Mr. HERMANN. I think so, though I can not say that they were regularly mustered.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman know whether or not a roll of them is filed in the War Department?

Mr. HERMANN. The rolls were filed in the War Department, that I know to be a fact.

Mr. MALLORY. How did they get there?

Mr. HERMANN. By legislation on the part of Congress.

Mr. MALLORY. I think from the fact that the rolls were on file they must have been mustered in.

Mr. HERMANN. Gen. Wool, who was commanding on the Pacific coast, was authorized, I understand, to supervise the volunteers as they were mustered in; and the roll is on file in the Auditor's Office. The Committee on Pensions, I understand, submitted this bill to the War Department and received a certificate setting forth the facts narrated here.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. If my friend from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] will permit me, I will state for the benefit of my friend from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] that this case stands upon exactly the same ground as these other cases that have been passed upon to-night. In all those old Indian wars the troops were State troops. In this case they were State troops.

Mr. HERMANN. Territorial troops.

Mr. MILLER. Territorial troops.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. In this case they were Territorial troops. They were under command of United States officers as Florida troops, Georgia troops, or Alabama troops. They were State troops, but they were under command of United States officers.

Mr. HERMANN. And they were under pay of the United States.

Mr. KILGORE. But, if the gentleman will allow me, these troops that were enlisted in Georgia for the war in Florida were mustered into the United States service.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. They were State troops.

Mr. KILGORE. They were commanded by Gen. Scott, many of them.

Mr. MALLORY. A great many of them were mustered into the United States service, and it was the intention to muster them all in.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. They were called out by the State, but afterward they were under the command of United States officers, precisely as in this case.

Mr. HERMANN. I will state furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that I should not ask the kind attention of this committee to-night as earnestly as I have did I not know the circumstances connected with this case and the honorable character of the gentleman who is applying for the pension.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the proposed amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and Mr. RICHARDSON having resumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration sundry private bills, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that not enough time remains to-night for the passage of any bill, even if there be a quorum here, and I therefore ask unanimous consent of the House that the previous question be considered as ordered on these bills, and that they then go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills which have been considered in the Committee of the Whole to-night, to their engrossment and third reading—

Mr. MARTIN. And also upon their passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And also upon their passage.

Mr. KILGORE. I am willing to agree to the bulk of that proposition; that is, that the previous question may be ordered on the bills which have passed the Committee of the Whole to-night, to their engrossment and third reading. I am not willing that you should accumulate the previous question upon these bills by stretching it to cover their passage.

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent then that the previous question be considered as ordered on the amendments on the bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole to-night, and to include the engrossment and third reading of the bills. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 9, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O, Eternal God, we are again come to pay mournful tribute of our respect and affection to the memory of a late member of this House, who has passed behind the veil which hides the invisible world. We commend to thy fatherly compassion and tenderness the wife and children bereaved by this death. Comfort and provide for them in their extremity, and let them find Thee a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless. Bring home to the hearts of all upon this floor a solemn sense that somewhere in the waste of years ahead there lurks the solemn shadow which shall carry us to the same world of reality and substance beyond this world of fleeting shadows. Help us wisely, faithfully, and reverently to look towards Thee with a keen and vivid consciousness as to our duty, with large and kindly charity to our fellow-men, and to walk this earth so that at the last we shall come to Thine eternal kingdom in heaven, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BINDING AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, recommending an amendment to the bill (S. 1549) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT STATION AT CEDAR RIVER, MICH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that the engineer of the ninth light-house district reports that he will have a balance of $9,000 left from the construction of the light station at Cedar River, Mich., and recommending that this balance be used for additional expenditures for the light stations at Seul Choix Pointe and Chicago, Ill., also that an additional appropriation of $10,000 be made for the latter; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings of the court on the French spoliation claims arising out of the seizure of the vessels the brig Caroline and the schooner Phoenix; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. MEIGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2351) granting a pension to John B. Meigs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. HARTER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYNES of Ohio, for ten days, on account of important business.

STATUE OF PÈRE MARQUETTE.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 107) authorizing the State of Wisconsin to place in Statuary Hall at the Capitol the statue of Père Marquette.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the State of Wisconsin be, and is hereby, authorized and granted the privilege of placing in Statuary Hall at the Capitol the statue of Père Marquette, the faithful missionary, whose work among the Indians and explorations within the borders of said State in early days are recognized all over the civilized world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WEADOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONGRESS.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, it is known that our colleague the Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER is prevented from being present in the House of Representatives on account of ill-health. By his request I yesterday introduced a bill to authorize an international monetary conference, to be held at Chicago in the year 1893. I have received from Mr. SPRINGER a written argument in regard to his bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], in behalf of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], asks unanimous consent that a statement respecting the international monetary conference may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

[From the North American Review, March, 1892—Copyright, 1892, by Lloyd Brice. All rights reserved.]

AN INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

[By the Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.]

Commerce between nations is increasing rapidly every year. The foreign commerce of the United States now amounts to nearly $2,000,000,000 annually, while that of Great Britain exceeds $3,500,000,000. The prodigious number of transactions which comprise such enormous aggregates can hardly be realized. The increased facilities for transportation, the constant opening of new markets, the quick communication of intelligence by telegraphs, the publication of newspapers, trade reports, and commercial statistics have brought all nations into one commercial family and established relations of mutual interest and profit.

The greatest hindrance at this time to international exchanges, next to restrictive legislation, is the want of uniformity in monetary systems and in weights and measures. The advantages of uniformity in these respects can not be overestimated. In view of the intelligence which prevails in every part of the civilized world, and of the readiness with which all new inventions are adopted and employed, it is remarkable that there is at this time such a diversity as to coinage, weights, and measures between the various governments of the earth. Each nation seems to adhere to the systems of finance and domestic commercial exchanges which have prevailed heretofore, and which served every purpose of commerce in a state of isolation. If we consider the enormous volume of trade between all nations which has grown up in modern times, it is scarcely credible that so little advance should be made in the direction of securing uniformity of monetary systems and of weights and measures. The time is coming when the interests of business and of international exchanges will demand of the lawmaking powers of the respective nations the adoption of systems of uniformity in these respects.

The celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America is a most appropriate occasion for the assembling of an international congress in the city of Chicago during the World's Columbian Exposition, which should have for its object, and whose duty it should be, to formulate and submit for the approval of the governments sending representatives thereto, uniform systems and nomenclatures of coinage, of weights, and of measures. At this Exposition will be exhibited the products of chief commercial importance of every civilized nation in the world. As one passes through the various buildings and beholds those products, he will find their value, their weight, and their measure expressed in different terms, so as to make comparisons almost impossible. The products in most cases will be familiar objects, but to compare them in price and quantity with the products of other countries will require a greater amount of intelligence than any one man will possess.

There will be a perfect confusion of tongues, a modern commercial tower of Babel. This difficulty, however, must serve a useful purpose, and may perhaps result in the greatest advantage which will be secured by such an exposition of the products of the world. If out of this chaos of diversity should come complete systems of uniformity by which all commercial transactions could be expressed in the same terms, the Exposition would prove the most important ever held, and the benefits to mankind would be as enduring as time itself. If an earnest effort shall be made on the part of the United States and all other governments whose products will be represented at this Exposition, it is reasonable to hope, at least, that some good result will follow, if not the complete success of this much-needed reform.

The Congress of the United States should make proper provision for the assembling of such a congress. It should be in every sense a congress—a great, open, deliberative body, composed of the ablest citizens of the respective nations of the earth. Its proceedings should be published, the same as the proceedings of our Congress, and the press should be furnished with every facility for the reporting of the debates and proceedings. It should not be limited as to the time during which its deliberations are to take place. Ample time and opportunity should be afforded for the most thorough discussion of all the topics which may come before the body.

The President should be authorized, in behalf of the United States, to invite the governments with which we maintain diplomatic relations to send representatives to this international congress. The United States should be represented by at least twenty-one delegates, seven of whom should be appointed by the President and an equal number by the President of the Senate and by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Not more than four to be appointed by each should be members of the same political party, and they should represent as far as possible all shades of opinion upon the subject of coinage. Those appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives should be members of this Congress who may be members of the Fifty-third Congress also.

The President of the United States should be instructed to inform the governments with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations, that the Government of the United States earnestly desires to secure uniform systems of coinage and of weights and measures, so as to facilitate, as far as possible, exchanges of commodities and to simplify monetary transactions; that this Government especially desires an international agreement as to the relation which should be maintained between gold and silver, and uniformity in weight and fineness of the coins of each metal, and the adoption of a coin or coins that would be current at the same value in all countries of the world.

The President should be further instructed to call the attention of all such governments to the advantages which would accrue from the adoption of such uniform systems, and to say that the Government of the United States would await with deepest concern the deliberations and conclusions that might be reached by this international congress, with the earnest hope that these efforts might be crowned with success. He should further inform such governments that, in the event that no conclusion is reached which would meet the approbation of this country, the lawmaking power of the United States will then be free to adopt such measures in reference to the subjects named as may be most conducive to the welfare of the people of this country.

The calling of such an international congress will not necessarily prevent the United States from legislating upon the subject of silver coinage in the mean time. It is universally conceded, however, that, owing to the present condition of the lawmaking power of the United States, no free-coinage bill can become a law during this Congress. It is possible that a bill having this object in view could pass the House of Representatives; it is barely possible that it might pass the Senate; but here the possibilities end. The President would undoubtedly return it with his veto to the House in which it originated, and there is no possibility of passing such a bill over Executive disapproval by the necessary two-thirds majority. Hence there will be no legislation on this subject by this Congress, which expires by limitation of law on the 3d day of March, 1893. The next Congress will not assemble in regular session until December of that year. This is the earliest period, then, at which it is possible to consider legislation which may thereafter be enacted into law in reference to the coinage of silver.

However desirable the free coinage of silver may be in the estimation of those in favor of legislation to secure that object, all efforts in that direction by this Congress will be futile. All legislative experience teaches that that which is most desirable can not always be accomplished. Therefore that which is desirable, and which at the same time may be attained, ought to be the prime object of all legislators. What, therefore, is attainable by this Congress so far as silver coinage is concerned?

The calling of an international monetary congress and the discussion which such a congress would provoke would result in the greatest benefit possible to this country and to all other countries. Such a congress would not result in suppressing silver as a political issue, but would make it a great national and international question, to be settled at the earliest time practicable upon lines as broad as possible. All persons must concede that an international agreement upon this subject, which would secure uniformity of coinage throughout the world, is the object most to be desired. With such an international agreement and uniformity all apprehensions for the future would be dispelled, and there would be perfect security as to the value of each of the metals in all parts of the world and for all time to come. Those who favor the largest use possible of both metals will recognize at once the supreme importance of such an agreement as this.

In view of the fact that this country can not secure free coinage of silver for itself, even if that were desirable, prior to the time at which such a congress would assemble and conclude its labors, what objection can any bimetalist offer to making one last and determined effort to bring about a result which would be so beneficial to mankind? But if such a congress should fail to reach a conclusion, or if the conclusion reached should not be acceptable to this country, the discussion which will have taken place will so enlighten the people of this country that when the Federal Congress assembles in December, 1893, it can enter upon the consideration of the subject with the light of the century thrown upon it. A campaign of education, as it were, will have been carried on, which must result in pointing the way to a proper solution of the question at that time.

There have been several international conferences held on the subject of coinage. There was one held at Paris in August, 1878. There were three commissioners on the part of the United States, Messrs. Reuben E. Fenton, William S. Groesbeck, and Francis A. Walker. Only nine governments were represented, namely: Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Russia, Sweden and Norway, Switzerland, and the United States. The proceedings were conducted almost exclusively in the French language, but the secretary of the American commissioners obtained a stenographic report of the few English addresses, and these, with the journal of the conference, were transmitted to the Secretary of State of the United States.

Congress has caused the report of the commission and the journal of the conference to be printed, together with an appendix, which contains much useful information on the subject. Another international monetary conference was held in Paris in 1881. The same governments, with the exception of Russia and Italy, were represented in this conference, and also Denmark, Germany, Greece, Portugal, and Spain. The delegates on the part of the United States were William M. Everts, Allen G. Thurman, and Timothy O. Howe. The journal of the conference and report of exhibits were printed by the Secretary of State.

The Pan-American Conference, which assembled in Washington in 1890, recommended the appointment of a commission, composed of one or more delegates from each nation represented in that conference, to consider the quality and kind of currency, the uses it shall have, and the value and proportion of the international silver coin or coins, and their relations to gold. The commission met in the early part of 1891. Three commissioners were appointed on behalf of the United States, namely, Nathaniel P. Hill of Colorado, Lambert Tree of Illinois, and William A. Russell of Massachusetts. The delegates from the United States recommended that the governments represented unite in inviting a monetary conference of all the powers of the world, to be held in London or Paris, "to consider bimetalism and the equalization of gold and silver, to be fixed by international agreement, and the universal assimilation of monetary types both of gold and silver, and their legal international circulation for all purposes." A committee representing the Spanish-American Republics reported a similar recommendation.

Mr. Romero, the president of the commission and Mexican minister at Washington, submitted an amendment to both propositions, to the effect that the Government of the United States should be requested to "invite a universal conference of all civilized nations, to be held at the time it may deem desirable, to reach, if possible, an agreement upon a fixed ratio between gold and silver and the adoption of a common coin for all of said nations." After a prolonged discussion of all these propositions, the commission adopted a series of resolutions setting forth the great benefit to the commerce of the world which such an agreement would secure, and expressing the opinion that the object could be accomplished by an international agreement; but, doubting whether the desired ends could be attained at present, the concluding resolution merely expressed "the wish that before long another commission may meet, which shall reach an agreement that will secure the adoption of a uniform monetary system between the nations of America advantageous to each and all."

It remains to be seen whether the United States will make any further effort in the direction indicated.

These conferences have not brought about the objects contemplated, but they were not without beneficial results. Much more important results undoubtedly would have followed if, instead of these small conferences, there had been a great international congress, composed of two or three hundred delegates, whose deliberations would have been conducted openly, where the representatives of the press would have been present and where the widest publicity would have been given to the discussions and proceedings.

Objection to such an international congress has been made upon the ground that the great governments of Europe will oppose any agreement which will give silver a place in the coinage of the world, and that it will be impossible to attain success. It is possible that some countries may decline to send representatives to such a congress, or refuse to enter into any agreements upon the subject of coinage, of weights, or of measures. But that fact should not prevent other governments from sending such representatives or from earnestly desiring to secure uniformity in these matters. If the Latin nations of this hemisphere and of Europe should reach a conclusion satisfactory to them, it would not be many years until all the other nations of the earth would adopt their system. In any event, success will never be attained unless great and earnest efforts are made in that direction. The time has arrived, the opportunity is offered, and the holding of such an international congress ought to be favored by all who desire to promote the commercial interests of the world.

If international agreements could be reached upon the subjects indicated in this article, and if such agreements should receive the approval of the great commercial nations, this achievement would be the crowning glory of the nineteenth century. But if no agreement should be reached, the education which would result from the holding of such a congress would be worth all the expense and effort that would be put forth, and would enable the representatives of our own country, when it is possible to secure results, to deal with the question of coinage in such a manner as would best promote the welfare of our own people.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate has passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6746) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes; in which concurrence was requested.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. On behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I report the bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that it and the accompanying report be printed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The bill was referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREE COTTON TIES AND BAGGING.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the tariff bill, in the consideration of which the House was engaged on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the regular order is the call of committees for reports. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I shall object.

Mr. TURNER. I move to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Division.

Thé House proceeded to divide, but pending the division—

Mr. TURNER said: Mr. Speaker, at the instance of and on the appeals of gentlemen on the other side I withdraw the motion to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports, and the Clerk will call the committees.

INDIANS ON COLVILLE RESERVATION.

Mr. WILSON of Washington, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7557) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation in the State of Washington, with certain modifications, and to make appropriation to carry into effect the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR PER DIEM EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MCCLELLAN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 577) providing for leaves of absence to certain per diem employés of the Government; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 69) authorizing the use of the martello tower on Tybee Island, Georgia, for a signal station.

FREE COTTON TIES AND BAGGING.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer one more amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding in the tenth line of the printed bill, after the word "gins," the words "and parts thereof."

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend that by striking out the word "cotton-gins."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] has the floor.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the arrangement which was made between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and myself on yesterday, I will not call the previous question at this time. By that arrangement the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] was to be allowed to take the floor this morning to make such remarks as he may think fit, and to occupy such time as he desires, not to exceed one hour, and by that arrangement, if it is recognized by the House, the gentleman is entitled to proceed at this time.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], being a member of the committee, is entitled to recognition.

Mr. ATKINSON. I would like to have my amendment received at the appropriate time.

Mr. TURNER. We will consider that hereafter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I feel under obligations to my friend from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] for the courtesy extended to me in being allowed to say a few words this morning in connection with the bill now before the House. I had not expected to delay the House or the committee longer upon this subject, as I included in the remarks I made last week, and which were published in the RECORD, substantially what I had to say about this bill. As it is understood, however, that I am to say something, I beg now to call attention very briefly to several of its distinguishing features as a tariff measure.

In the first place I call the attention of the House to the fact that the language of the bill is sufficiently broad to admit many other iron and steel products than mere cotton-ties. The language is "all hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length." Now, I have in my hand a protest from the American Manufacturing Company, a large number of copies of which have come into the possession of members of the House, which really embodies in brief terms all that I care to say upon this subject:

Under the pretense of providing free cotton-ties, the Ways and Means Committee has reported favorably a bill called the Turner bill, which makes all hoop and band iron free. As band iron technically includes everything from a foot wide and an inch thick down, you will readily see that this bill will make free of duty a very large proportion of the manufactured iron used in the United States, this proportion, excluding steel rails, being estimated from 25 to 40 per cent of the estimated quantity of iron used.

The fact is, therefore, that under this seemingly innocent bill you are making an attack upon the existing tariff law which will affect a number of schedules impossible now of anticipation, and introduce complications into the administration of the tariff law, the effect of which it is impossible now to forecast. I have just been handed a letter by one of my colleagues which accentuates and emphasizes this proposition. It is from iron manufacturers in the city of Cincinnati, and the writers say:

This bill is ostensibly to make cotton-ties free, but as a matter of fact it makes all hoop and band iron free. These terms are so loose and general that they would allow a large proportion of the manufactured iron of the country to come in free of duty. Its effect would be practically to wipe out a good part of the present protective tariff on manufactured iron. This bill seriously threatens one of the great industries of the country.

This is simply a repetition of the proposition I advanced a few moments ago.

Mr. TURNER. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER. What is the date of the letter from which the gentleman has read?

Mr. DALZELL. March 12 of this year.

Mr. TURNER. I will state that since that letter was written—perhaps in the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania—this bill has been amended so as to obviate the objection that has been raised in the letter.

Mr. DALZELL. I understood, as my friend from Georgia now states, that the bill had been amended; but does not my friend from Georgia still retain in the bill the opening words with reference to this subject, "and also hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel cut to length"?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I submit—

Mr. TURNER. But the gentleman has not finished the clause. The scope of the provision will appear more fully by reading the entire clause. As the gentleman has not the amendment, I will read it:

And also hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, with or without buckles or fastenings.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, but the language still remains, "hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel."

Mr. TURNER. "Cut to length."

Mr. DALZELL. Very well. It does not seem to me, with all deference to my friend from Georgia, that the difficulty in the administration of the tariff law is at all obviated by the amendment to which the gentleman referred. There will still come in under the terms of the bill as it now stands "hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel cut to length;" and "hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel" means technically everything from a foot wide and an inch thick down.

Mr. TURNER. But the words "cut to length" are taken from the present law, and relate back to the first words in the clause.

Mr. DALZELL. Exactly so; still, the difficulty is not obviated so long as you may import hoop or band iron—

Mr. TURNER. "Cut to length."

Mr. DALZELL. "Hoop or band iron," which may mean iron a foot wide and an inch thick, whether cut to length or not cut to length, because—

Mr. TURNER. Is that kind of iron used for baling purposes?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. TURNER. But the bill requires that if imported under this provision it shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not so understand the grammatical construction of the bill. It seems to me if the gentleman means that, the bill ought to be still further amended—

Mr. TURNER. That is exactly the language of the present law, and it is the language understood at the Treasury Department.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I will ask the gentleman this question: Does he understand that this bill as it now stands will not affect the manufacture of hoop and band iron in this country?

Mr. TURNER. It will to this extent: The hoop or band iron specified, and between the two gauges mentioned in the act, and to be used for baling purposes, will be affected by the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Then the hoop or band iron that a man wants to import for a specific purpose may be imported free of duty; but the same thing imported for another purpose will be subject to duty. Is that right?

Mr. TURNER. Then there is no issue between the gentleman and myself on that point.

Mr. DALZELL. I asked you whether that is so.

Mr. TURNER. That is so.

Mr. DALZELL. Then the gentleman means to say that the effect of the law will be this: If I see fit to introduce into this country hoop or band iron for the specific purpose named, it can come in free; but if I see fit to import the same article for another purpose, then it must come in loaded with a duty.

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true?

Mr. TURNER. I agree with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. DALZELL. So that a man who imports hoop or band iron for a purpose to which it can not be devoted except south of Mason and Dixon's line may bring in his hoop or band iron free of duty; but if my constituents, living north of Mason and Dixon's line and having no cotton to tie, see fit to import precisely the same article for some other purpose, they must pay a duty.

Does my friend from Georgia undertake to justify on this floor or on any floor or from any platform legislation which, in its operation, divides this country into sections by drawing a territorial line?

Because if he does then I appeal to the House that the principle is a bad one; that his declaration is in favor of sectional legislation, unworthy of us and of the great purposes for which national legislation is intended, inconsistent with the principles that ought to inspire us as legislators, being legislation for a section as against the interests of the entire country.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Will the gentleman allow me to make this suggestion to him: that this bill covers the ties that are used in baling hay as well as those used in baling cotton. Does he not know that other sections of the country than the South raise hay?

Mr. DALZELL. I care not to what other purposes they may be applied. It is sufficient to support my proposition that the bill proposes that if I see fit to import an article for one purpose it shall come into the country free of duty, whereas if I import it for another purpose, the identical article, it shall pay a duty; and in this case I have stated that the purpose for which these ties come in free is a purpose for which they can be employed only in a certain section of the country.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Is there no hay raised anywhere else than in the South?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman knows very well that that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. But wire is used for the purpose of baling hay.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. And these ties are used for that purpose also.

Mr. McMILLIN. As I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he is complaining that by the provisions of the pending bill this material, if imported for one purpose pays a duty, and if for another purpose comes in free. I want to suggest to him that that is the very thing that was done in regard to salt and a number of other things carried in the law heretofore in force. This provision, then, is by no means a new one. If a farmer, for instance, wants to import salt for packing his pork, he is compelled to pay a tax upon it, whereas if the fisherman living along the Eastern coast desires to import the same commodity for the purpose of packing his fish it comes in free.

Mr. DALZELL. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to find that when the gentleman from Tennessee wants an argument to sustain a proposition in regard to the tariff he is willing to go to the McKinley bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not go to the McKinley bill for this illustration. There is nothing that I would go there for willingly.

Mr. DALZELL. Then what the gentleman states with respect to the duty on salt is not the existing law if it is not in the McKinley bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the law before the passage of that bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I am talking now of the law as it is, or as it is to be; and the distinction against which I inveigh, in the case of salt, the case cited by the gentleman from Tennessee, was stricken out by the McKinley bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to make a suggestion, the tariff on salt is not a sectional one; that is to say, that the same rates apply to the farmer of Michigan as in Tennessee or anywhere else.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. And so do the provisions of this bill. Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask if the tariff law is not sectional with regard to all kinds of materials that enter into the construction of ships, and whether that provision of the law was not intended for the express benefit of the Northern and Eastern shipbuilders?

Mr. DINGLEY. Wherever ships are built, whether it be South or North, the same provision prevails.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know that, but the industry prevails in the North.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it is prevailing in the South, too. I attended the launching of a steamship in Virginia myself but a few days ago.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There was no such industry when that bill was passed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, it ought to be all over the country. If the bill had the effect of establishing the industry there, it was a good thing.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let me ask the gentleman this further question: Whether hay is not raised in the North to a greater extent than in the South?

Mr. DINGLEY. But wire is used for baling hay, and not hoop iron.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is partly correct, and partly not correct.

Mr. DALZELL. In answer to the first question of the gentleman from Ohio there is no analogy whatever between cotton and ships. There is nothing to prevent the building of ships anywhere in the country, wherever people choose to embark in the business, and if the law can be so made as to encourage their building south of Mason and Dixon's line I believe it will be good for the entire country. But so far as hay is concerned, I never heard of these ties being used for baling it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do not they use these ties even in Massachusetts for putting up cotton and other merchandise in bales?

Mr. DALZELL. And so far as the gentleman from Tennessee is concerned, and the principle invoked by him, I care not how many instances he may cite, they afford only the stronger argument against the principle which I am combating, that is, legislation for the benefit of one section of the country as against another section of the country.

Neither two wrongs nor two thousand of them ever make a right. Now, this is not only, according to the confession of the author of the bill, a sectional bill, but it is a bill that no man can justify upon any sound principle of tariff legislation. You propose to keep the duty on iron ore. You propose to keep the duty on coal. You propose to keep the duty on pig iron, on blooms, on sheets, and then, when you come to the last finished product of all, the result of many processes and the result of many kinds of labor, you propose to make it free.

Whoever heard of tariff legislation upon such a principle as that? Raw materials loaded with duties, and the finished product free! I defy any man, I care not who he be, to rise on the floor of this House and defend that proposition as consistent with sound principles in tariff legislation.

But more than that. This bill is a direct blow at an existing American industry. It is a proposition to close the hoop and band mills of this country; and if you will turn to the report of the minority of the committee, you will find a list of twenty-one establishments in which hoop and band iron or steel are manufactured. Twenty-one establishments, some of them in the South, that have grown up under the policy of protection, that have cheapened the product to the American consumer, that have made use of American capital and given employment to American labor, and all with advantage, as I have said, to the buyer in our own market.

These industries you propose by this bill to strike down. You propose to put their product on the free list and to bring our laborers, employed in those mills, into competition with those who get less wages, and our capitalists into competition with those whose products cost less, and who have the ability, therefore, to run our product out of our market.

Not only that, but the result of the McKinley bill, brief as its life has been, has already demonstrated that its effect will be to rehabilitate an American industry. Under the act of 1883, cotton-ties bore a duty of 35 per cent.

Under the act of 1890 we added two-tenths of a cent per pound on the hoop iron or steel from which they are made. Now, what has been the result, I ask you as a matter of experience, of the operation of those two laws? Under the act of 1883, under insufficient protection, the cotton-ties of the South were made across the water, not by American manufacturers.

Until the passage of the McKinley bill we had not for many years past made to exceed 2 per cent of the quantity of cotton-ties in use in this country. Let me call your attention to the importations. On page 9 of the minority report of the committee you will find that the importations of cotton-ties increased from 15,641 tons in 1884 to 30,305 tons in 1888.

I find, upon inquiry made of the statistician of the Treasury Department, that in the fiscal year 1891 the importations for consumption were, under the old tariff law, at 35 per cent ad valorem, 29,868,048 pounds, of a value of $456,981.67, whereas the importations at the rate of the new law amounted only to 1,522,113 pounds, of a value of $23,984. And this is supplemented by the fact that all over this country the hoop and band iron and steel mills that were equipped prior to the passage of the law so as to be able to make cotton-ties have resumed the making of them.

Not only that, but additional mills have been erected. Additional mills have been equipped and a number of them in the Southern country; three of them in the State of Texas, one at Denison, one at Jefferson, and one at Tyler, all inviting the investment of American capital and giving employment to American labor, to furnish the American market with an American cotton-tie. And this has been done without any increase of price.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. The cotton crop of the year 1889 was packed with iron ties at an average cost of $1.15. I take this, I will say to the gentleman, from the daily commercial quotations of the New Orleans papers. Upon the passage of the McKinley bill the price of iron ties rose from $1.25 per bundle on the 1st of September to $1.40 on the 1st of November; and the cotton crop of the year 1890 was packed with iron ties that cost at wholesale in the city of New Orleans $1.35 a bundle as against $1.15 a bundle for the year 1889. And 2,000,000 laborers in the cotton fields have had to pay $270,000 additional price for their cotton-ties for the year 1890, whereas the whole wages of all the men who are employed in making those ties could not have exceeded $80,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. Those 2,000,000 laborers are colored men.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Many of them are colored men.

Mr. SIMPSON. And Republicans?

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE] whether those are the prices at the mill or the prices after they have passed through the hands of the middlemen?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. They are the wholesale prices, by carload lots, in the city of New Orleans, and both quotations are upon the same basis. That is, the quotations for the year 1889 were upon the same basis as those for the year 1890, being for carload lots in the city of New Orleans.

As a matter of fact the increase to the planter was greater, for the increase to the buyer of the carload lot in the city of New Orleans being 15 cents per bundle, that to the planter was more than 15 cents, for naturally the man who bought the carload lot had to have a profit on his additional 15 cents.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, I will say to my friend from Alabama this—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. One moment. There are a half dozen, and probably more, gentlemen upon this floor who are practical cotton-planters. There is not one of them who will not substantiate my statement that since the passage of the McKinley bill he has paid largely more for cotton-ties than ever before.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Alabama that of course there must be, there always will be, somewhat of a difference in the cost of such an article as cotton-ties, accordingly as you take the price at one point or at another. That is to say, the freight will enter into consideration somewhat.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Well, the freight—

Mr. DALZELL. I am not through. I will say also to the gentleman that the figures that are given to me, and which I consider reliable, the authorship of which I will give to the gentleman, do not verify his statement; and that, therefore, there will probably be an essential difference as to our views. But I will come to that question in a moment.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. If the gentleman will examine the files of papers in the Congressional Library, he will find the daily commercial quotations as I have stated them. Now, it is not likely that a great paper in a city like New Orleans would give false quotations.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is not the most reliable source.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. If the gentleman from Maine is the editor of a paper, he may have such views, but I have not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly why I do know that it is not the most reliable source.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I have no doubt of it, but I am speaking of the New Orleans papers and not of your paper.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is very smart.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I am glad you think so.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, if my friends will give me a show—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Certainly. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. DALZELL. It is true undoubtedly, I would ordinarily take a newspaper quotation—

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly; but I am not through answering the gentleman from Alabama yet.

Mr. MOORE. I apprehend that there must be some mistake. I find the figures as they are in the minority report as to the value of these ties which you now speak of being cheaper under the McKinley bill; that is taken upon the face of your own report. Now, for an instance, you refer on page 8 of your report—

Mr. DALZELL. Now, my friend must pardon me. I can not yield to him for a speech.

Mr. MOORE. I just want to call your attention—

Mr. DALZELL. But you are going on with a speech.

Mr. MOORE. Now, let me make a single suggestion. In your minority report you give these quotations:

1891.		1892.
January	No sales.	January (out of season)	1.07
February (out of season)	1.10	February (out of season)	No sales.

The meaning of that is this—

Mr. DALZELL. But, Mr. Speaker, I can not allow the gentleman to inject a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. DALZELL. I am perfectly willing to answer any question.

Mr. MOORE. It is part of the minority report. That, I submit—

Mr. DALZELL. I submit to the gentleman that it is not fair to me. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Then will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, certainly.

Mr. MOORE. If making cotton-ties free makes it a sectional matter would not a prohibitive tariff make it equally a sectional matter? That is exactly what your tariff does.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, coming back to my friend from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE], I would say that I have no doubt there are divergencies and variances in the rates as to prices.

If we should take the newspapers in the different sections of the country—I will concede them all to be reliable—we will find that these variances exist. But I call his attention—and he cites the cotton-planters, who are good authority, of course, but an equally good authority, let me suggest to the gentleman, are the people who make and sell cotton-ties—to what I have here. The Bristol Rolling Mill Company gives the price at their mill, standard iron-arrow cotton-ties, from June, 1890, to February, 1892, in a table of prices. The prices are by the bundle of 50 pounds, but I will not stop to read them.

The gentleman will find these prices on page 8 of the minority report, following the passage of the McKinley bill and the month before September, and, going back perhaps a little further (which would be fair, taking the time into consideration during which the bill was under debate), the prices are given in March, April, May, June, and July, $1.22½.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, one moment. Will the gentleman excuse me while I look for those prices?

Mr. DALZELL. July at $1.22½.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, I say to the gentleman that during each of those months in 1890—

Mr. DALZELL. Just one moment, you understand—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I understand that we are speaking of the effect of the McKinley bill upon the prices of cotton-ties in the summer of 1890.

Mr. DALZELL. True.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, during each of those months in 1890, in March, April, May, June, and July, August, and September, the price of cotton-ties was $1.25 a bundle in New Orleans.

Mr. DALZELL. That is a difference of 2½ cents from the figures I have given.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Well, that was an advance. I suppose necessarily they sell for a little more there than at the mills.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, bear in mind that when cotton-ties were at that figure there was no cotton of the preceding crop that had not been packed. That crop had been packed at $1.15 per bundle for ties. As I stated before, on the 1st day of September the quotation was $1.25, on the 1st of October, $1.40, and thereafter, $1.35, up to the 29th day of November, when the great bulk of the crop of 1890 had been packed at $1.35.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is the price now?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. The price now is $1.25, and since that time it never has been less than $1.25.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. To resume—and about the variance in price I will say something in a moment—in August, according to my figures, according to the figures of the Bristol Mill, the price was $1.20; in September, $1.15; in October, $1.15; in November, $1.12; in December, $1.10; in January, no sales; in February, $1.10; in January, 1892 (no sales), $1.07½.

Now, of course the price of cotton-ties will vary largely under any circumstances, tariff or no tariff, with the output, or the aggregate of the cotton crop. That must be taken into consideration.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. But bear in mind that the cotton crop of 1889 was very nearly as large as that of 1890.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, but I am simply laying down now a general proposition to be borne in mind in this discussion, namely, that the amount of the crop and the consequent demand will, as a matter of course, have considerable influence on the price of cotton-ties.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I do not question that.

Mr. DALZELL. And there are various things aside from the tariff that will go to affect the price of cotton-ties or any other commodity. I have given the figures of one mill. Now, I have here a letter from a very reputable firm having quite an extensive factory in my own city of Pittsburg, in which they say under date of February 22, 1892:

A bundle of standard arrow cotton-ties weighs 50 pounds, and the prices of the same the past season were fully 5 cents per bundle less than in the years 1889 and 1890 before the McKinley bill became a law. Of course all the ties were made in this country in 1890, and the competition was so fierce among the American mills that there was positively no advance in prices, and, as we have said above, the price was less. It thus clearly appears that the bill did not make ties dearer to the Southern planter, but on the contrary benefited him.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. We come at last then to the question whether the planter is benefited by the McKinley bill. Now, how is he benefited when every day since that bill was passed he has paid more for his cotton-ties than ever before, while he has been selling his crop for half the former price?

Mr. DALZELL. I will answer that this in way. In the first place the gentleman's proposition as to prices is, to say the least, a disputed one. He and I do not agree about the facts, which makes it difficult for us to arrive at the same conclusion.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. That is, you insist that since the passage of the bill the planter has bought his ties at a less rate than he paid before?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know whether the cotton-planter has bought them cheaper or not. I say that the effect of the Mc-Kinley bill has been to reduce, or at least not to increase, the price of cotton-ties realized by the manufacturers in this country.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Ah, but you read just now a statement from a letter that the McKinley bill had been a benefit to the planter.

Mr. DALZELL. It must be, in view of its effect upon the price.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. In order to be a benefit to the planter it must have enabled him to buy his ties lower.

Mr. DALZELL. I should think so.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, as a matter of fact I say to you, and I will establish it very fully, that the planter has paid a higher price for his ties ever since the passage of the McKinley bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well. But it was not the fault of the McKinley bill; it was the fault of the way business is conducted in the place where the cotton-planter buys his ties, and where a man is allowed to make more than a fair profit on what he sells, and that is a difficulty that no tariff bill can affect one way or another. If the effect of the McKinley bill is to put on the market from the establishment of the American manufacturer cotton-ties at a less price than they can be bought for from the foreign manufacturer, then its effect is a benefit, so far as the principle is concerned, and if the consumer, the planter, pays more under such circumstances he pays somebody that he ought not to pay, and somebody receives that which he ought not to receive. The effect of the bill has been to reduce the manufacturers' price. It has done its part to relieve the consumer. It can not fairly be charged with the extortions and avarice of middlemen.

This letter goes on to say that in 1889 the average price of cotton-ties was $1.18; in 1890, $1.16½, and in 1891, $1.09½.

Now, suppose that for the purposes of this argument I concede the claim of the gentleman from Alabama, then I affirm this proposition—

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. May I ask the gentleman to read again what he has just read as to the price of cotton-ties in 1889?

Mr. DALZELL. The statement is that the average price in 1889 was $1.18.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Per bundle?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. At no time during 1889 did cotton-ties sell by the carload in New Orleans as high as $1.18; the highest price was $1.15.

Now, will the gentleman explain how the manufacturer could make ties costing $1.18 per bundle and put them on the market, when the highest price in New Orleans, and that is the port referred to by the minority in their report—

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I believe the report makes reference to the city of New Orleans, or at least the persons quoted in the report do so. Now, how could the manufacturer make ties at $1.18 per bundle when the very highest price in New Orleans during the whole year was $1.15?

Mr. DALZELL. I say that a respectable gentleman in the city of Pittsburg engaged in this manufacturing industry says (and I believe him) that according to his books the average price there was $1.18 in 1889, $1.16½ in 1890, and $1.09½ in 1891. And if these same ties, with freight added, sold at an advanced price in New Orleans to the Southern merchants and through them to the Southern consumers, they sold at the factory price plus the freight and plus, it may have been, an exorbitant profit. But that has nothing to do with the question of the ability to manufacture cheaply in this country under a protective tariff.

Now I leave that question. I may concede for the purpose of argument the gentleman's claim, and then I affirm this proposition: That if the imposition of a duty increases at any time the cost of the manufacture of an article, the inevitable result is that American capital is invited into the investment for the production of that article, and that home competition eventually reduces its price; and that principle is applicable in the case of cotton-ties. So that the question I have been discussing with the gentleman is a question which has no substantial or material bearing upon the continuance of the rates of the McKinley bill.

Now, if I am right, the McKinley bill has done this: It has adequately protected a large industry in which an immense amount of American capital is invested and a large number of American laborers employed; and it has done this without any increase of price to the consumer. It has done more than this, it has rehabilitated a lost American industry which had perished by reason of insufficient protection. It has therefore invited more American capital into a new American manufacture, has given employment to more American laborers, and has operated to the advantage—now, I say, but if not now, then, pursuant to an inevitable law, in the future—to the consumer of the American product.

Mr. Speaker, what is the reason for this bill, anyhow? It is conceded—my friend from Georgia will not deny when he comes to speak in his own time—that it is a false principle to bring in finished products free, and tax, as he will call it, the raw material. That much he must concede, I think. There is no reason, therefore, arising out of that feature of the bill why there should be any change in the law; but on the contrary, a reason against it. Now, why should there be a change? My friend from Georgia says in his report:

The effect of the McKinley rates upon bagging and ties has not yet been fully developed.

Now, I appeal to him, why legislate on a subject as to which he says he has not yet sufficient knowledge?

The presumption always is against a change. Why change the existing law if, according to the gentleman's theory, experience has not demonstrated whether it be a good law or a bad one? I have a right to rest upon the maxim that the presumption is against a change. Change is unjustifiable unless there be a reason behind it.

But go a step farther. For what other reason, according to my friend from Georgia, shall we change the law? Because, says he, the cotton industry is depressed and the cotton-raisers want cheaper ties. I ask him, in all seriousness, is the depression of one industry in this country any good reason why you should strike down another industry of the country? And if the gentleman's logic be logic upon which he is willing to stand, then he must face its result. If the cotton industry next year ceases to be depressed—becomes prosperous—then the duty on cotton-ties ought to be put back; for "it is a poor rule that will not work both ways."

Now, I take it—I may be in error, but I take it that this bill does wrong to the section of country that the gentleman himself represents. Why should not the South, with its great cotton crop, have at home the manufactures of those things necessary to make that a paying crop? The Southern people are already, if am rightly informed, learning a lesson. I find here in the Manufacturers' Record the letter of a firm that is manufacturing steel ties in Chattanooga, Tenn., and sends samples of its products to the Manufacturers' Record with the following explanatory note:

These ties are now being turned out at the rate of 20 tons per day from Chattanooga steel, and will consume 5,000 tons of that metal between now and October 1. These ties are pronounced superior to any ever made in this country, and are in every way as good as the imported ties; they can be made as cheap as iron ties; much stronger and better in every way. Already large orders have been booked, and Chattanooga will produce this year fully one-fifth of all the ties used in this country, when heretofore 98 per cent of all the cotton ties were imported. The sample we send is taken from a bundle ready for shipment; you will find that it can not be broken by bending.

So that in Chattanooga, Tenn., the effects of this tariff legislation have already been felt in the development of a home industry and of the wealth native to that great State. And not only that, Mr. Speaker, but at Rome, Ga., not very far from the gentleman's own home, I conjecture, they are turning out cotton-ties. My friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] hands me a newspaper clipping, received this morning, from the Atlanta Journal, as bearing directly upon this subject. Here is what this article says:

The mills are complete in every detail, and furnish constant employment to upwards of 150 hands. They run day and night, and the output reaches 850 bundles every twenty-four hours, each bundle containing 30 hoops and 30 buckles, weighing 50 pounds standard weight. They are easily adjusted to the bale; in fact, a blind man may put them on; and the buckle is the simplest ever made.

And then I find, referring to the same place, a clipping taken from the Atlanta Constitution. A writer in that paper says:

I met Col. Jack King, of Rome—

No doubt my friend knows to whom reference is made—at the Kimball last evening. Mr. King will be remembered as Mr. Williamson's second in the famous Calhoun-Williamson duel. But he has quit that business now and gone into a more profitable one. He is making cotton-ties up in Rome, and incidentally making a fortune out of them.

"I am down before the rate commission," said he, "to get a better rate on cotton-ties. We have a factory in Rome, and are turning out 810 bundles of 30 ties each daily. We already have orders for nearly every tie we can make, and could sell twice as many had we the capacity. We can make them cheaper than they can in either Ohio or Pennsylvania. The McKinley bill has helped us out in this considerably, but our people down here do not like for us to say that. Anyhow, we are making enough ties to bale half of the cotton crop of Georgia and Alabama."

Now, I welcome the enterprise, the energy, and the thrift of the citizens of Georgia to a competition with the American thrift, energy, and enterprise of Pennsylvania. I hope that they can make these ties cheaper in Georgia than in Pennsylvania, if thereby they may be induced to realize the great advantages of this protective system, and to build up beside their cotton plantations the factories that will make their own cotton-ties and bagging.

Now, a single word on another point. My friend says in his report:

Cotton, when sold in the markets of Europe, is subjected to a tare, or deduction, for the bagging and ties. The American price is fixed relatively to the price paid for the cotton abroad. The cost, therefore, of the covering and ties which inclose the lint is a sacrifice inflicted on the cotton-grower in both the foreign and home markets.

Now, I am advised that the cotton is sold in the American market gross weight; that is to say, it includes the weight of both the ties and the bagging. I am also told that it is sold in the foreign market with a tare of 6 per cent, and of course there is a vast difference as to weight between the cotton and the ties and bagging; and I would say that with this 6 per cent tare the Southern planter instead of suffering loss on account of the weight of ties and bagging, becomes a gainer.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. May I state to the gentleman the true weight of the bagging and ties?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. It is 20 pounds. The British buyer takes off 6 per cent or 30 pounds for the bagging and ties. The average weight of the ties and bagging, as I have stated, is 20 pounds. The British buyer, and the American buyer necessarily, for the price in this country is regulated by the price abroad, takes off not only the 20 pounds, but 10 pounds more for tare.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from John Thompson & Co., of Philadelphia, whose business is that of cotton merchants. They advertise themselves as buyers direct from the grower for manufacturers, and their places of purchase are Monroe, La., Vicksburg, Miss., Little Rock, Ark., and Pine Bluffs, Ark. In this letter they say:

Allow me to give you some items that may be of some value to you in debate. Five and one-half yards of bagging, to cover one bale of cotton at 7 cents a yard, 38 cents. Six hoops weigh 12 pounds, at 14 cents a pound, 15 cents. Cost of bagging and ties to cover one bale, 53 cents. The same as above sells for as follows, bringing the same as the cotton is sold for: Five and one-half yards of bagging, 11 pounds, six ties weigh 12 pounds, or 23 pounds, at 7 cents per pound, $1.72. Deducting from this the cost of bagging and ties, 53 cents, and the net profit on bagging and ties put on one bale of cotton is $1.19.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Now, may I trespass just a little further on the courtesy of the gentleman for the last time?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. The proposition of the gentleman is that the planter makes a profit on the bagging and ties; that is, that it is not he who pays for them. Now, the course of business is this: The planter sends—

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I think my friend is going to make a speech.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. No; I was simply about to make a statement which I think would satisfy as clear-headed a gentleman as my friend.

Mr. DALZELL. I shall have to ask you to make it in your own time.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Unfortunately, I have no time.

Mr. DALZELL. I could only say in answer to the gentleman, even if his statement were made, that I do not assume to speak from personal knowledge about this matter, for I have none.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to make one statement of about five words?

Mr. DALZELL. No; not a statement, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. It is in answer to what you say; in refutation of what you say.

Mr. DALZELL. I have not time to give way to gentleman to allow them to answer me. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] has time in which to answer me.

Mr. LEWIS. I just want to say that the weight of the bagging and ties is taken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has only five minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have substantially covered all that I intended to say. I have suggested all the reasons that have been advanced by the gentleman who drew the majority report in this case, in favor of the repeal of a clause of a bill, when he himself says at the same time that he asks its repeal. "We know nothing from experience yet as to its effect."

Now, if what I have said amounts to anything, it amounts simply to this, that every argument to be adduced from existing facts shows that this bill has re-established an old industry, protected an existing one to the benefit of capital, to the benefit of labor, and to the benefit of the consumer; and that under the force and effect and the favoring influence of the bill, even those in my friend's own section of country have already taken hold upon the protection that it affords, and established an industry which furnishes them with what is necessary for their market at a fair cost, and gives them a double profit—the profit of buyer and the profit of seller—the profits that are always made by keeping our home market. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order set for this afternoon at 2 o'clock may be so modified that it will await the action of the House on this bill; that it may be postponed, if necessary, to enable us to take a vote upon this bill. I understand the gentleman in charge of the special order assents to the arrangement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks that the special order for 2 o'clock this afternoon be postponed until the conclusion of this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. TURNER withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I proposed an amendment, which was to strike out the words "cotton-gin" from the bill.

The SPEAKER. That amendment will not be in order unless the demand for the previous question be voted down.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the demand for the previous question and let this amendment be considered.

Mr. TURNER. I would be very glad to oblige the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but we are proceeding under the courtesy of the gentlemen who have given way as to the special order for our benefit, and I hope the gentleman will not urge his request.

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, it will occupy but a few minutes.

Mr. HATCH and others. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question on the pending amendment and to the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, in the tenth line of the printed bill, after the word "gins," the words "and parts thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 46, not voting 115; as follows:

House, taking part in an investigation by order of the House; if present, he would vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted; but I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Georgia. Mr. LIVINGSTON. If he were present I should vote "no," and he would vote "aye."

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by my colleague, Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, to say that he is paired, and that if he were present he would vote "no." I also am paired; if I were not I would vote "no."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I voted, but being paired, I withdraw my vote. If I were not paired I should vote "no."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 167 and the nays are 45. The yeas have it, and the bill is passed.

Mr. TURNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, which will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a report at this time from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Monday will be District day, and this is the only opportunity we can have before then to present the report.

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2015) to amend the act incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. BRICKNER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by unanimous consent, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8007) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREE TIN PLATE, ETC.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. 8033) to reduce the duty on tin plate,terne plate, taggers tin, and to repeal paragraph 209 of section 1 of an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, unanimous consent was given for the minority of the committee to file their views upon the bill, to be printed with the report.

RETURN OF RESOLUTIONS FROM THE SENATE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the order adopted which I send to the desk.

The order was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the concurrent resolution of the Senate "to print 50,000 copies of the eighth and ninth annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1891 and 1892." Also the concurrent resolution of the Senate "to print 8,000 copies of the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology."

The resolution was adopted.

BRIDGE BETWEEN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by unanimous consent, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE.

Mr. GEARY also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6091) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Knoxville, Tenn., approved August 9, 1888; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HALL, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PEARSON, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRYAN, until April 21, on account of important business.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MELBOURNE H. FORD.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the special order for this day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, April 9, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m., be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a member of the House of Representatives from the Fifth district of Michigan.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of the Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a public servant, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, the frequent assignment of days in which the course of business is suspended in the House of Representatives to pay tribute to the worth of departed members of the Fifty-second Congress who have gone to the silent continents of eternity furnish impressive lessons of the mutability of human affairs, the uncertainty of life, and the certainty of death. Since my service in this House many have been summoned from the activities of being to the stillness of the grave. What a roll of names that can make answer only from the silent depths of memory! In the present Congress what a membership have gone to the solemn shades!

Since Michigan became a State five of its members in this House and two Senators have died in office. The latter were Kinsley S. Bingham, one of our early statesmen, who died in 1861, and Zachariah Chandler, the great war Senator, unexpectedly taken from earth in 1879. Of the members of the House whose terms were closed by death were Edward Bradley, died in 1847, before taking his seat; Wilder D. Foster, who passed away in 1872; Alpheus S. Williams, summoned hence in 1878; Seth C. Moffatt, suddenly called in 1887; and the fifth and last of the list of Michigan's representatives released from duty by death was Melbourne H. Ford, whose memory we honor to-day, and who was numbered with the dead less than a year ago, April 20, 1891.

Mr. Ford was born in Saline, Mich., June 30, 1849. My first acquaintance with him began in my own city, where he was employed as a clerk. I remember that the duties of the clerkship were performed faithfully and acceptably by the youth. When he had given up the humble position he departed, and I did not meet him again until the winter of 1887 in this Hall, when he came to enter upon the duties of a Representative in the Fiftyeth Congress.

Mr. Ford commenced his education at the Agricultural College at Lansing, and while there received the appointment of naval cadet at Annapolis. He pursued the studies at that historic school for a few months. The young man desired to serve his country. He had not attained the years on entering the Academy to be enrolled among the country's defenders, but after a time he joined the naval forces and saw a little service before the ordeal of war was fully ended. He was permitted to be a participant in the great struggle that made ambition virtue and repaid the nation in following the profession for which it had partially educated him.

When peace was restored he quitted the Navy and turned his talents to the conquests of peace, studied law, and was admitted. He never practiced that profession, but served many courts in another capacity than that of advocate or counsel. He ranked among the most proficient of stenographers and enjoyed the work. He held but two elective positions, both legislative. In 1884 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the Michigan Legislature, being accredited to that branch by the great manufacturing city of the State. He soon gave evidence of decided ability, his service being so acceptable that he was rewarded in 1886 by an election to this House.

During the term here he exhibited application and industry, accomplishing much for his constituency and district. He sought by law to stay the tide of immigration of the unworthy to our shores; to elevate American citizenship, and debar dangerous elements coming here; to close the door to those not fitted for our institutions. His design was misunderstood. He had reared a structure to protect his country. This was leveled by those whom it was intended to assist, and in the ruins was the political hope of the promoter of the legislation. He learned the instability of public opinion; that it is ever changing. He accepted the verdict with composure.

In the Legislature of Michigan the members of the political party with which he was identified paid him the compliment of making him their candidate for United States Senator.

He retired from this House at the end of his term, disappointed at the lack of recognition on the part of the constituency whom he had desired to benefit. The interregnum between elections passed, and in 1890 he was again nominated for Congress, to share in the astounding victories of his party in that year of surprising results. Public opinion that two years before had cast him down now triumphantly designated him again as a Representative in Congress. He stood once more in the sunshine of success. The lesson of public life is difficult to con by those whose philosophy is the welfare of others. The issue of that contest restored Mr. Ford to his place among the leaders of his party in the Peninsular State and he planned to serve his people more efficiently than before.

In the brief period of forty-seven days after the beginning of his tenure as a member of the Fifty-second Congress he was suddenly summoned from earth by death, the grim messenger striking the fatal blow without warning. On Sunday night, April 19, 1891, he sought repose, and in that strange and solemn interval of time, the twilight of the morning, in the violet dawn, he was stricken with the malady which in a few hours removed him from the scenes of earth. He never recovered consciousness from the attack. He saw not the sorrowing wife and children and grieving friends about that couch of death, but quietly stepped from the harassing cares of the present into the realm of eternal rest and peace.

The 20th of last April was a day of sadness at Grand Rapids, his home. The wave of sorrow was felt all over Michigan. At the funeral the affection of the people and their mourning for his demise were manifested in many ways. The legislature of the State attended in a body, business was suspended, and the remains lay in state at the city hall, amid the flowers of awakening spring, thousands with moist eyes looked upon the placid countenance of the dead.

The bereavement was expressed so generally that it seemed those sealed ears might hear. Amid the somber trappings of woe, the quiet procession of bereaved friends and acquaintances, as I looked it seemed to me there was that strange reflection of a light that never was on land or sea touching and brightening the still features into a look of hope and peaceful joy.

A great city's heart throbbed with grief that he was taken. The inanimate form was conveyed from its house on earth to its final home, followed by a great concourse, and in the silent city, on that April day, when nature was awakening in the vividness of renewed life, when the long day of the year had dawned upon spring, all that was mortal was tenderly laid to rest by loving, fraternal hands; the grave closed over this young life. At the obsequies the workmen of the city requested that the factories be silent that day in order that they might pay their tribute to the memory of one they esteemed so well in life. I believe our dead friend would have asked no sweeter rosemary for remembrance than this act of the industrial forces at his home. Could he have looked down from the calm heights of eternity he would have realized that useful lives here are not forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, as I saw those marks of respect to his memory in that great mart of trade, while gazing upon the cofined lineaments of our friend and associate, there came to me the tender thought once spoken of another:

Thou camest into the world weeping, while all around thee were smiling, and thou leavest the world smiling, while all about thee are in tears.

Mr. Ford lived not quite forty-two years. In this limited period he accomplished much. In the swift pilgrimage "from the rosy dawn of birth to death's sad night" he wrought for others more than for himself. I knew him well during his service here, and soon discovered his strong convictions on public questions, and his constant advocacy thereof. This spirit distinguished him to the end of his too brief life. His tastes were social as well as literary, and those who knew him here were inspired with confidence and friendship. His work in this Capitol won success, gained by ability, fidelity, and industry.

Reflecting over the vanished life now passed on, let us remember, as was said by Lucretius centuries ago:

Life is given to no one for a lasting possession; to all for use.

Mr. Speaker, I have sketched the life and public service of our departed associate, how he labored for his people and the nation. His strong character, enlarged views, application, and native ability displayed while a member here brought him recognition and prominence in the country. Those who noted that career as it developed in this Hall lament that he was too early summoned to the other world by death.

In paying this tribute to my dead friend and colleague my mind recalls a solemn scene in this Chamber on February 29, 1888, when he spoke words of sorrowing regret over the death of another departed member from Michigan, Mr. Moffatt, who, like the subject of our service to-day, had crossed the dark river and entered the portals of eternity. He, too, had been almost as suddenly summoned from life. We looked upon him one day well and strong, and in a few hours we saw on his face the wondrous seal of everlasting peace. In Mr. Ford's eulogy of our dead colleague, he uttered that gem imbedded in the language of every people, "say naught of the dead unless good." In that fitting address he foreshadowed his belief in the future life in these words:

That there is a hereafter every man, it seems to me, must believe. I can not conceive how anyone with human instincts can think otherwise. If there exists a person who honestly believes that when his eyes are closed in death nothing remains, then, I say, such a person is to be pitied. Can it be that at the conclusion of man's existence on this planet for a comparatively infinitesimal period of time—can it be, I say, that when dust is rendered into dust, all is ended? No.

No word comes back. We know not what awaits us. Still, I have something here in my innermost soul which tells me that this life is not the end; that beyond all this we have a wider, a higher, a nobler destiny. There lies in the human breast a something which says, "This is not all." What an encouraging hope, what a divine thing it is for this world, this belief in a future existence.

To repeat the words of our departed friend, spoken here four years since, for him we trust in that "encouraging hope" he gave of his "belief in a future existence" and are gladdened by the conviction that with him it is well. In the celestial economy no ray of light is left to wander aimlessly. His good deeds are treasured in the archives of eternity. We rejoice that back of death's semblance is the potency of a splendid new birth.

I have read that "man's best monument must be found in human hearts that swell at mention of his name, but speak not in a public place." How true is this. Can we receive a finer garland than is woven from the unremembered acts of kindness? Human sympathy is like the summer rain "which makes the fields it hastens to bright and green."

This young life is closed. We pause to-day to speak of the work he undertook, the tasks he accomplished, of his best endeavor. As the sketch is completed we invoke a benediction from the world beyond, turning to those tender words of Newman, which are held hopeful for the dead and helpful and worthy for the living:

Lead, kindly Light.

We stand dumb in deciphering the mystery of death—why this life was so soon and so suddenly abridged. It is not given to us to explain why this career, so well endowed by nature and so full of promise, should be thus early terminated. This problem for centuries has not been solved.

Our friend and colleague is no more. For those who remain the star of the future which shines in the horizon is Hope; there is never more night than day.

And now we leave him in his dreamless sleep. Farewell!

Sleep 'til the shadows take Their endless flight;
Until the morning break—
Good-night! good-night!

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I can not permit this opportunity to pass without paying my tribute to the memory of Melbourne H. Ford.

In reviewing the life of Mr. Ford, length of years—the allotted measure of existence—is not a part. Neither is his that fame which comes from long service, faithful ability, ripened experience, political sagacity—that tardy acknowledgment of great qualities. A sudden flash across the political horizon, then as suddenly eclipsed. Serving only in the Fiftieth Congress, yet in that brief time he made his name a household word. Mr. Ford's sympathies were not so much with the prosperous as with his fellow citizens in the more humble walks of life. His whole aim was to ennoble and elevate citizenship, to place it on that high plane which would insure permanency and safety to our institutions.

In the swarming millions flocking to our shores he saw danger unless the baser elements could be excluded. He sought a remedy, and was made chairman of a select committee "to inquire into the alleged violations of the laws prohibiting the importation of contract labor, paupers, convicts, and other classes." I need not say how well that work was done. The startling evidence disclosed was commented on by the press throughout the land. Almost with one voice a correction of the evil was demanded.

Elected to the Fifty-second Congress, he hoped to complete the work already so far advanced. But suddenly he dropped the burden of life; that work was left for others to complete, and when completed it will be a monument to him outlasting "storied urn or animated bust."

In Michigan Mr. Ford always possessed the confidence and regard of his party, and in 1889 they honored his courage and ability by making him their candidate for United States Senator. But few men have climbed higher in so short a time. The characteristic of Mr. Ford's public career was perseverance, an inflexible pursuit of well-considered policy. In the more intimate relations of life he was cheerful, uniformly kind, and generous. His friends were not only the prosperous, but there were many in the more humble condition of life who looked on him not only as their champion but their friend.

His sun had not reached the meridian; in his early manhood, at his home in Grand Rapids, in the forty-second year of his age, on April 20, 1891, "he was, and then was not."

Mr. Speaker, I have been impressed with that passage in Foster's Life of Goldsmith describing his funeral:

There were gathered in his rooms the most distinguished men of the age; but on the stairway leading to his rooms in Lamb's Court there was weeping and mourning by a crowd of the poor and unfortunate who had been recipients of his bounty and had lost their only friend.

So, too, at the funeral of Mr. Ford, distinguished men from all parts of the great and prosperous State of Michigan were assembled; but there, too, was many an humble friend mourning him.

It was so sudden. They had looked forward to a long and brilliant career; surprised and sorrowing that so early in life the "pale horseman" had crossed his path and beckoned him to enter the Valley of the Shadow, the opening of which is another morn than ours.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, through seven terms it has been my lot to watch the comings and goings, the daily walk, the success or failure, of those whom our sixty millions of people send to represent them in this Hall, and I can truly say that in all that time I have seen no young man come here who seemed more readily to comprehend the high responsibilities devolved upon him, or who more intelligently and more assiduously discharged those duties than did the noble Representative whom we mourn to-day. He came at that time of life when all is buoyancy, all hope, all anticipation.

As has just been stated by his distinguished colleague [Mr. YOUNG], he realized the dangers that threatened his country, and notwithstanding the trepidation in which others had shrunk from those dangers before him, and in which others might be inclined to shrink from them around him, he came boldly to the front, and determined to try if it were possible to enforce the laws of American citizenship so as to keep out that incursion of criminal and other classes against whom the laws had already set up barriers, but barriers which were being constantly overridden. His action in that regard is well known to the country.

I remember that again, when the tariff bill was up for consideration, he proposed to place upon the free list an important article of manufacture—German plate glass. He came here from the heart of a great manufacturing community. The beautiful city in which he lived had been originated and sustained and made prosperous by manufactures. I remember it was whispered to him that probably the course he was taking was not the best to commend him to those who believed in a system of tariff laws supposed to be inimical to his proposition.

In a conversation that I had with him he said: "I care not what the effect on me may be; I know that it is right and that greater prosperity will come by reason of such an enactment." His arguments were so cogent that they convinced his associates and his proposition was made a part of the bill of that year, and, although that bill did not become a law, if he were here to-day he would ascertain that within less than six weeks there have been petitioners to the number of 40,000 asking that this Congress do what he attempted to do.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who knew him well and knew him but to love him have lost much. His State has lost more, because to her he was not simply an associate, a friend, but one of her pillars and stays. But his country—the extent of which he fully comprehended, the importance of whose free institutions had a dwelling place in his heart and an intelligent dwelling place in his head—that great country which he served with such distinction here, has been also a sufferer in this common calamity.

I know not how his last hours were spent. I know nothing of those expressions concerning the future that have been commented upon by his colleague who first spoke [Mr. O'DONNELL]. But if a man is to be judged, as we are given to hope he will be judged, by every good deed done in the body—and of this I have no doubt—his lot will be a happy one in the hereafter. A passage that has struck me as very forcible and beautiful, is that between Ion and Cleanthe, where she asked him, when devoted to death, trembling before its uncertainties and moved by the sorrow of the coming separation, whether they would ever meet again. You remember that in substance he replied:

I have asked that dreadful question of the stars that are eternal, of the rivers that everlastingly flow, but they were all, all silent. But now, as I gaze into thy beautiful eyes and behold the depths of thy pure soul, I know there is that there which can not wholly perish. We shall meet again.

So, those who knew the honorable life of our departed friend, his intelligence, his soulful nature (if I may use that expression), his comprehension of every obligation that rested upon him, his high endowments in all those thousand elements that go to make man the greatest of created beings, must hope and feel that there was that there which can not wholly perish, and that we shall meet again.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to attempt to pronounce any eulogy in the ordinary sense of that term upon Mr. Ford, and even the perhaps necessary details upon these occasions may well be left to his State colleagues; but from the standpoint of personal friendship and in view of the high esteem and regard in which I held him and do hold his memory, I can not let the occasion pass without expressing my never-ceasing sorrow at his untimely death and paying a tribute to his memory.

We never met until we came together in the Fiftieth Congress, but owing to the facts that we were born and reared in the same locality, were connected by many associations in Michigan's history, and had a host of mutual friends and acquaintances we soon came together and became the closest of friends. After such friendship for over four years, I can well say of him that he was generous to a fault, noble in every quality and instinct, honorable always, and one of that rare class of men whose friendship never faltered.

From a public standpoint he had not only brains, but the courage of his convictions, indomitable will, ceaseless energy, untiring industry, and with a suavity of manner and force and eloquence in speech that made him carry his points. This combination of good qualities made his future a bright one for himself and full of promise to his people.

In his death his country, his State, his party, and his constituency suffered an irreparable loss.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, a year ago at this time the news was flashed throughout the State of Michigan that the Hon. Melbourne H. Ford was dead. It was unexpected, and in that great Commonwealth it produced a painful shock; and soon at his home, on the banks of the beautiful Grand River, the people of the State gathered together from all sections, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, men in official positions and men from the humblest walks of life, and there, amid the wailing of funeral marches, the tears of sorrow, and the flowers of affection, they buried him. They left him in the kindly arms of Nature—to the sunlight and the breezes, to mother Earth herself.

What manner of man was he who was consigned to the tomb on that day? He was alert; he was decisive; he was a man of correct thought and of correct methods in public affairs. He was a man of firm convictions; and it must be said to his credit, as it is to the credit of every man of whom it is true, that he did not stop to determine whether those convictions were popular, but only as to whether they were right. And so it happened that in his younger life when he became a member of the house of representatives of the Michigan Legislature he distinguished himself by an effort to restore capital punishment in that State.

That effort I did not approve of; but as to the learning, the ability, and the zeal with which he pursued it, there can be no doubt. It attracted a great deal of attention to him, for the reason that in that great Commonwealth there is practically but one opinion on the subject, and it is that the taking of a life for a life is still murder. So that he bravely opposed himself to the prevailing sentiment of the people and espoused a cause which he knew to be unpopular. This is true heroism in a public man ambitious of public preferment.

Long before he came to this House he was a consistent tariff reformer. Living in a manufacturing district, and in a manufacturing State, above all in a wool-producing State, he had the courage of his convictions, and never for an instant hesitated to pursue the path of tariff reduction to which his judgment impelled him. At that time Mr. Speaker, his position on that question, as it had been upon other questions, was not a popular one; but he clung to it bravely and steadfastly until he became a member of this House, when as you know, and as we all know, he still upheld the principle for which he was contending.

During his membership of this House he became interested, as has been said here already, in the question of immigration. The evils growing out of the coming of foreigners to our shores struck him as they have struck others, as being of a most serious nature, and while I do not believe that he had any prejudice against any man or any nationality, or any race who came among us, still he felt, and he felt rightly, that this great country should not be made the asylum for the halt, the lame, the blind, the vicious, and the criminal; in a word, of the classes which other nations desire to get rid of.

I am sure he felt that the honest, the healthy immigrant was a welcome guest among us, and his arms were spread out to embrace every such man in the folds of American citizenship. But he had none of the mawkish sentimentality—an instance of which has recently occurred in this House, which induced him to believe that there is any tie of brotherhood, that there is any claim of philanthropy, which demands of the hard working people of this country that they shall share with everybody who chooses to come to us, their means of subsistence, and in this way diminish the wages of their own labor and the comfort of their own homes.

There is a wrong idea abroad on this subject. We are told that we recently violated a treaty with China. Mr. Ford felt, as I feel, that there is no power, that there can be no power, whether it is called the treaty-making power or other power, which will permit foreigners in immense numbers to come into this country as mere denizens, as temporary sojourners among us, and pluck from our laboring people the appropriate rewards of their labor.

The idea is monstrous. No treaty ever meant that. No treaty ever could mean that. And while it is perfectly proper that the old law merchant recognized by the common-law writers should prevail, and be respected and enforced if necessary by treaties, there is no law, there can be no law, there must be no law by which we share our crust with any and every person, and any and every nation, without regard to their intelligence, their morals, and effect of their presence upon the general tone of mankind in this country.

He was unfortunate on that occasion, unfortunate perhaps in having entered upon the investigation carried on by the committee which took his name, because it led to misconception and subjected him to criticism which his motives did not justify. He was unfortunate, too, in that the measure which he brought into the House as the result of the investigation was not acceptable to the House; but in the main, in his noble desire to protect the workmen from improper and ruinous competition, he was right, and sooner or later he will receive the just meed of fame which belongs to being right upon a subject of so great importance.

It is among the mysteries, Mr. Speaker, why a man should live to the age of promise and be taken from us when he was taken. It is inscrutable, and we wonder what has become of the knowledge he has garnered, of the subtle machinery of his brain, of all the forces which made him what he was, and it is only with the certainty that in nature there is no cause without an effect, that there is no mistake and no accident in anything which nature orders, that we may find the solution, if we can find a solution of that enigma. We may ponder on what might have been. We may wonder what would have been the setting of this sun which rose with so great brightness if it had run its course to the twilight hour.

But after all this is mere vague speculation. We can know nothing, we can only hope. And yet, Mr. Speaker, in this season of bud, of sunlight, of bloom and of balm, of resurrected nature, we are taught that death is but the portal of another chamber of life. There must be a hereafter. Careers of such promise, cut so short, would be a mistake in the plan of nature if there is not. This knowledge garnered, these abilities so subtly fashioned, must have an expansion and a field somewhere in the limitless future.

And so it is not given to us to know whether death is the enemy of man, or whether it is a ministering angel, bearing him to vaster opportunity and to greater usefulness. But I humbly hope, Mr. Speaker, that that grave by the side of the beautiful river is not the prison house of our friend; that he has burst the earthly cerements of that tomb, and that in that other state where eternal opportunity must be given all men the virtues which characterized him here have brigher, greater, happier play, and that all that was earthly and all that was wrong in his character here dropped from him "like a worn-out fetter which his soul has broken and thrown away." Happy will be the man who can shed the dross of passion and earthly weakness and dwell in the realms of hope beyond the grave, habited in manly virtue and unclouded intelligence.

Mr. WHITING. Mr. Speaker, words can but feebly convey to the members of this House the real sorrow and appreciation of loss which the sudden death of Mr. Ford brought, not alone to the people of Grand Rapids and his district, but to the people of the State at large.

I believe that I speak within bounds when I say that a general sentiment prevailed throughout the State that he was the most promising young man in Michigan, and that a bright future full of usefulness and honor was before him. These facts, Mr. Speaker; intensify the sadness of his untimely death and remind us of the importance of the present hour.

My acquaintance with him was confined mostly to my associations with him as his colleague in the Fiftieth Congress. We often consulted each other upon public matters, and I can now clearly recall the honest earnestness of his manner when giving expression to his views, and his solicitude that a wise regard for all should govern his action. I recall his buoyancy of spirit, his fondness for public life, his ease and adaptability to work assigned to him, and his active participation in all that transpired upon this floor.

I recall the tribute of confidence and love so recently and so generously bestowed upon him by the people of his district, and the pleasure that was in store for him and his cheerful, loving wife, in again renewing the many cordial and happy friendships of the two short years before, and so to-day am doubly saddened in contemplating the change. His mortal career ended, his life work done, and his friends sorrowing; but with it comes the reflection and consciousness that an All-wise God, not man, judges the frailties and the virtues of mortals, and that His Son has said:

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me.

To his bereaved family we can give the assurance that we loved him and appreciated his worth; and we can offer the consolation that his love and fidelity to his fellow-men, exemplified in all his public acts, will stand as a legacy greater than riches and more valuable than length of days.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, Napoleon said: "All of us are needed a little; none of us are needed much." I might paraphrase this and say that each of us is needed but little in the great arena of the world, but there is a circle in which each one is needed very much indeed. And in the wider assemblage of friends who mourn the departure of our deceased colleague there is a small family circle that can never be the same again. There is a widow, and there are orphans, who will miss as long as they stay on earth the kind and affectionate love and companionship of the husband and father, and no trophy of flowers, no studied eulogy, and no honor that may be paid to our departed brother can ever atone for the loss which they have sustained.

Now, it is said of so many that they were born and they died. Unless more can be said of a man than that he was born and died, it were better that nothing should be said; but such is not the case of our departed colleague; and while it may be proper to note the principal facts of his life, we do it more for the purpose of calling attention to his life work than for the mere purposes of biographical data.

Mr. Ford was born in Saline, a small village in the county of Washtenaw, near the city of Ann Arbor, the seat of the great University of Michigan. At 10 years of age he removed with his family to Lansing, the capital of the State, then a struggling village in the wilderness, now the bright and thrifty capital of a great and prosperous State. He was educated at the agricultural college of that State, a few miles distant from the city of Lansing, and one of the proud monuments to the care which Michigan gives to the diversified interests of her people. Born too late to take a part in the rebellion, he enlisted near the close of the war in the United States Navy, and served for a brief period.

He was attached to the European squadron, which gave him the advantages of travel and that knowledge of men which is only gained by contact with them, and that love for American institutions which can best be strengthened by travel and observation among the people of other lands. As the years grew on he studied law with the firm of Longyear & Seager, in the city of Lansing; but he did not then undertake the practice of that profession. Later on he began the practice of the law, being associated with a leading firm in his home at Grand Rapids.

How well he studied and how closely and analytically he mastered the great principles of law is shown by the fact that while yet a student he prepared a work entitled "Ford's Legal Analysis," which may be found in the Library, and which shows a comprehensive and very clear understanding of the great principles which underlie the system of jurisprudence. He then turned his attention to the study of stenography and became one of the most expert in the State. He was stenographer of some of the principal courts of Michigan; and that is a very important calling, one requiring skill, honesty, and integrity in a marked degree.

In 1884 he was elected by the Democracy to represent the city of Grand Rapids, which then constituted the first district of Kent County, in the State Legislature. He was appointed upon the committees on private corporations and on the university, two very important committees. He was faithful in his attendance upon the sittings of the Legislature and especially watchful of local interests. A member of the larger house, the first occasion when I saw him was in that body. He then introduced a bill for the restoration of capital punishment in Michigan, which had been abolished many years, except for the crime of treason, for which offense it still exists on the statute book of that State.

That bill was introduced a few days after the beginning of the session of the Legislature, prescribing the punishment of death for murder in the first degree and one other heinous offense which, under our statutes, may be punished the same as murder. As one gentleman has well said, public opinion was believed to be against capital punishment, but that may be a misfortune, because I think the offenses named in the Ford bill can only be adequately punished, so far as they can humanly be punished, by death. The house of representatives passed the bill by a vote of 59 to 29, and with the sentiment of the State divided, perhaps more than one-half against capital punishment, the house voted for it.

This certainly was a signal triumph for a young member, serving his first term in the Legislature. The bill failed in the senate of the State, and did not become a law. He turned his attention also to the legislation for caring for juvenile offenders, a field which invites the serious thought of every statesman, who feels that the laws relating to young criminals, and their detention and punishment in our jails and prisons, as managed at the present time make them schools for crime rather than places for the punishment and reform of offenders.

The municipal courts of his own city also received his care and attention, and he succeeded in passing a bill which very largely added to their usefulness. Another law which he championed was one to prevent frivolous appeals to the supreme court when the amount involved was less than $100. Throughout the State of Michigan there is a number of abstract offices, who charged large rates for the abstracts which they furnished concerning titles to land. He recognized that these abstracts of titles should belong to the public, should be provided at public expense and furnished at cost to the people. To that measure his earnest attention was given; it was another move in the direction of relief for the people which they had a right to expect and which it would have been a pleasure to him to achieve. That is another thing that among the many acts of his life endeared him to everyone who knew him.

In this House I shall say but little with reference to his career. It is known to many who are still here. Many gentlemen who served with him upon his most important committee—the Ford Committee on Immigration—have already gone to their reward. A few days ago we listened to eulogies on one of them, Francis B. Spinola. A bright young man from Nebraska, the late Representative Laird, a Michigan boy, who had gone to the West and was returned here to represent his people, was one of his dear friends. Another bright and able gentleman, the very pink of courtesy in this House, Gen. William H. F. Lee, was also one of his near neighbors on the floor of the House. The able leader of this House, Mr. McMILLIN, has expressed himself so well in respect to the ability of Mr. Ford as a member of Congress that it would not become me to say anything further in that connection.

In the campaign of 1888, when Mr. Ford was a candidate for reelection, he met perhaps the most terrific opposition that ever was arrayed against any candidate for Congress. The Mills bill had operated with particular severity against Michigan, and in the campaign of that year the personal popularity of Mr. Ford and his personal following were not sufficient to stem the tide, and he was defeated, but in the succeeding campaign the same friends and the same following still stood by him, undismayed by the defeat, and he was elected a member of this body.

In 1889 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator against Hon. JAMES McMILLAN, receiving every vote of his party, an honor which he greatly prized. His last political service was to act as secretary of the State convention of his party.

Death came to him suddenly. He had spent the evening in communion with his family, and had retired to rest in his usual health; but before the next morning's sun arose, his lips were sealed forever. Here is one of the fatalities almost connected with the life of public men. They live at such a high tension, their energy seems taxed to the uttermost, so that when the death blow does come, it comes very suddenly. It came so to Adams, to Hendricks, to Chandler, to Windom, to Carpenter, to Beck, and many other gentlemen whom I might name.

Cicero said:

Some men make a womanish complaint that it is a great misfortune to die before our time. I would ask what time? Is it that of nature? But she indeed has lent us life as we do a sum of money, only no certain day is fixed for payment. What reason then to complain if she demands it at pleasure since it was on this condition that you received it.

It may be well for us to remember it, for it may come to us just as suddenly as it came to him; and we should be able to say with Hamlet, before the duel with Laertes:

If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all.

And so let us say of him as he said of another, Hon. Seth C. Moffatt, a former member of this House from the State of Michigan: His memory will not die. The friends who loved him in life will revere his memory in death; the acts of his life will be judged with clearer judgment than they could possibly have been in life.

Let me say, in conclusion, as was said by him in his conclusion of his eulogy of Mr. Moffatt:

Our friend will not be forgotten. His friends will ever keep his memory fresh in their hearts. And when the glorious summer comes and the grass grows green and beautiful and the Michigan roses blossom on his grave, although his lips will be hushed in death, yet the tender blades and the perfume of the flowers will speak of him, and to those who knew him best will seem to say, "Beneath here sleeps one who was kind and noble and true."

We can say this with all sincerity and truth of our departed colleague. It is a pleasing thing to know that he believed in the future. There is a remedy for all the disappointments of this life in the belief in immortality, and that the higher life of man is extended beyond this earth. And we can say of him who has solved the great mystery of life that we join with him in his belief in immortality, and we hope that he has gone to a better land, to that abode—

Where love hath put off in the land of its birth.

The stain it had gathered in this:

And hope, the sweet singer, that gladdened the earth,
Lies asleep in the bosom of bliss.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, we have set apart this day according to a custom that has prevailed from time immemorial in the House when one of our members has been removed by death, that the surviving members may pay just and proper tribute to the dead.

Melbourne H. Ford, at the time of his death, was a resident of the city of Grand Rapids, Mich. Born in Saline, Mich., June 30, 1849; was educated at the Michigan Agricultural College, and at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. He served in the Navy, enlisting there as an apprentice, September 10, 1864, and served on the Sabine and the Colorado, and was discharged May 7, 1867. He was then apprenticed a cadet at the Naval Academy, June 21, 1867, and resigned on the 8th day of January, 1868.

Returning to the State of Michigan, he became official stenographer to several of the courts, meantime studying law. He was in the year 1878 admitted to the bar, but did not practice law until a short time before his death, but continued the profession of stenography. In the year 1885 he was elected a member of the State Legislature for the term of two years, and was then elected a member of the Fiftieth Congress, and in that Congress served with fidelity upon the Committee on Territories and on Military Affairs, and as chairman of the Select Committee on Contract Labor. This committee was created to inquire into the violations of the laws prohibiting the importation of contract laborers, and it was in this work that he attained prominence.

The character of the immigration from all the countries of Europe to this country had become one of universal comment. The cities of the country, both East and West, were being rapidly filled with paupers and criminal classes of the countries of the Old World, becoming an unbearable burden upon the people of our land. They filled the charitable institutions of the different communities. The prisons were full of them, and the costly machinery of the courts rapidly became a burden too heavy for the taxpayers to bear. And not only were the cities infested with this undesirable class of beings, but the country districts were becoming unsafe on account of the tramps who roamed about robbing and often murdering the defenseless people.

It was a well-known fact that European governments by an organized system were sending their criminals to this country, and not only the criminals, but the idiotic and insane as well. The ship that came freighted with a thousand honest people would also contain a hundred others who at their very first step upon our shores became a burden and a menace to our institutions. Of this class many came here with no other design and having no other object in view.

It was this threatening cloud, this plague, that seemed to be surely undermining the people of our own country that brought Mr. Ford's energy to the relief of the Commonwealth. Quick to perceive the danger, he put the wheels in motion that are still turning. Starting slowly at first, like the wheels of a large engine, they have gained in speed day by day until it seems the problem whether our own people are to be enabled to enjoy this grand country is nearly solved.

Laws and rules have grown out of this agitation, this investigation, so that at the present time many of the undesirable classes are prevented from disgracing our soil by their presence.

'Tis said that Mr. Ford could not have lived to see the results of his work, to see the promise of the day when the ship coming to our shores with a thousand souls shall contain but law-abiding and self-sustaining people. He expressed a true statement, and one in the interest of all patriotic people when he said that immigration should be controlled by the General Government, and not by any one State. That the subject of immigration was one that affected all our people and was a fit subject for Federal control.

He was defeated for reelection in the Fifty-first Congress, and two years later was elected to the Fifty-second Congress, but was suddenly stricken and died at his residence in the city that delighted to honor him, on the 20th day of April, 1891. Never did people feel more keenly the loss of one of their own than did the people of the Fifth Congressional district of Michigan.

He was to them a brother. They had found in him a friend whose heart overflowed with generosity. His friends love to think of him and his genial ways. Those nearest to him will never lose the sad pleasures which come from the recollection of scenes brightened by the sunny side of nature he always presented. Personal characteristics drew friends to Mr. Ford: his individuality kept that friendship.

It was with deep sorrow and regret that the people of our State heard of the death of my friend and predecessor, and to-day the hearts of the people of the State are full of sorrow and sympathy for the bereaved widow and children, whose husband and father was cut down in the vigor of his manhood and in the midst of his activity and usefulness. His death is deeply deplored by his constituents and by the State which he represented in part with undoubted ability as a member of this House. But he is gone. Mr. Speaker, and how soon we will follow none of us know.

To all appearances one day before his death Mr. Ford might count upon a most enviable future public life. He had an admiring, unquestioning constituency; he had laid broad and deep the foundation for wide influence in the State. To the ordinary view few men had better promise of a far-reaching political career, but no man, Mr. Speaker, with whatever eagle eye he may have at the ocean of the future, can tell when his voyage may be interrupted. He of whom we speak to-day was suddenly taken from his high vantage ground, and in what we call his untimely eclipse went out whatever there might have been for him otherwise of glory and honor to come.

If he had a fault it was due to his generous nature, his warm heart. He studied to please men, not to displease them. He often wronged himself in an effort to satisfy those who called for his assistance. When a man has been standing for many years in the fierce storms and lights of political controversy it is generally forgotten that he has any individuality, private life, or character, except such as has been imposed upon him by political allies or opponents. But in the rough-and-tumble battle of politics and servitude to the people his most pleasing trait was his social, genial manner. Always cheerful and humorous, he tried to strew the pathway of his friends with flowers.

The best portions of a man's life are the little unnumbered acts of kindness and charity that one finds opportunity to bestow every day in the course of active life. Some men tire out, some men wear out, as the days fly and the years pass by; some men go backward, or drop behind in the race of life; some grow dull and prosy as they grow in years, while others grow young in action and in heart as the battles of life by day and month are met. But an intelligent people will never willingly let die the deeds, the kind acts, and the good words of an honest man. When a man's days are numbered there comes after his death a judgment.

Nature and society pass in a kind, yet in a just, survey upon each completed life. However, in this world we live in deeds, not years; we live in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not figures. He lives most who thinks most. He who acts the best feels the noblest. Our deceased friend counted life by the heart throbs, and not by the measured standard of months and years. To all appearance he had just reached the summit of his strength. He seemed equipped to undertake laborious tasks; never so well fitted to serve his constituents and his country. He did not perceive the enemy that was watching his every step and his every hour of life. To him the end seemed far distant. He thought to see the sun go down in the evening, the flowers to wither in the fall, the river to be frozen in the winter; not that the sun should go down at noon, and the flowers wither in the summer, and the stream of life frozen before the chill of old age.

Mr. Speaker, life is a golden ship, with sails of angels' wings. It comes to the shore freighted with an assorted load for man to select from. Youth going for the gifts may select roses with thorns, or the flowers of the fields, fragrant and sweet. He may select jewels, rare and precious, or he may load himself down with the baser metals, that will burden him through all his days on earth. Who is to guide the untrained hand that reaches for a share of the precious load? Someone has said that life is a casket of jewels, and that God holds the key. If this be true, and I believe it is, then God often unlocks the casket and gives to mankind many rare jewels. Not gifts to be kept and worn for all time, but gifts for a day, to adorn and light the paths of the universe.

The one day of life given to the insect of the air is a life of activity. The life of a season, or a brief year of a plant or flower of the field or forest, is a life of fragrance and usefulness to all mankind. The life of the birds of the air, brief in years, is a life of song, of love for its young, and of thankfulness to its Creator for the breath of life it is permitted to have.

The life of man is also but a span, but a brief atom of time; but he who makes the most of that brief space lives the most, and best returns to his Creator remuneration for the jewels out of the great and beautiful ship of life.

O, Death! Hadst thou but spared the life that we this day lament.

The sunset splendors, faded now and dead;
So have we seen the hopes of youth decay;
Oh, ruddy rose, that erst did blush so red!
Thou, too, didst have too brief a summer's day.

The thought, Mr. Speaker, leads me back to the day when he was a youth, and set out to hew his way to a place among men; and thus do I see him:

The sun had set.
Then beamed the evening star beyond the crags.
The evening wind sighed like a wearied child,
And night fell like a mist upon the earth.
He sank to sleep: before him in his dreams
Three radiant forms in moonlit beauty stood.
Love, Fortune, Fame, were they: the three most fair
His eyes had ever seen, or thought to see.
As, on the Mount of Ida years ago,
Three goddesses in goddess beauty stood—
Olympian in loveliness and grace.
And bade the shepherd make his choice
The while they bribed him enviously with gifts.
So stood those radiant forms upon the mount,
And while the moonbeams trembled on the steep,
As oft in ancient times on Latmos' heights
They trembled on Endymion's snowy brow,
Addressed him as he lay in sleep.

First Fortune spoke: "O youth, choose me," she cried,
"I know where gold is hid, whose sunny shine
Is loved by all men more than they can tell.
I know where gems await my favorite;
Pure, lustrous diamonds, glittering like stars.
Imperial rubies, red as blood,
And all the lesser jewels, which to name
Were tedious task."

Then Love, blushing like the dawn,
Addressed him words caressingly:
"Choose me," she said, "and happiness that lasts
Long as the constant stars shall be thy lot.
Sweet courtesy that makes one's life worth while;
That adds a grace to kings, and makes the serf
A mate for kings, shall brighten all thy days."

Then Fame took up the word, and with a smile;
"Choose Fortune, child?" she said, "she hath wings,
And flies away as lightly as she comes;
And if she stay, what profit doth she bring?
She gives no honor: 'tis gold that wins when Fortune takes her flight. Now tell me, pray,
Where be those cringing things of parasites
That fatten on a lordling's store?
Flown like a vulture when their feast is done.
And as for Love, I grant you she is fair;
So are the sunset days that fade to gray;
So is the wild rose that must wither soon;
So is the pebble shining in the stream;
Love is a dream, my child, a fitful dream."

"O Fame!" he cried, "I choose thee; thou art best."
And then he awoke. Pale star-shine on the crags,
And that was all. Such was the dream.
He climbed down the mountain side,
Unto the shores of the roaring sea,
Great billows with majestic onrush swept
Like a conquering army to the hostile shore.
Within a sheltered cove a pinnacle lay,
Equipped for sea, and lifting up her chain
He stepped aboard and set sail.
All day he sailed and fainter grew the land;
Night came, and one by one along the coast
The light-house beacons flashed their messages,
Then one by one faded from his sight.

So vale and forest, mountain side and sea,
Were traversed in a hopeless search for fame.
Whose form appeared not, save in fleeting dreams.
When, after calms and storms upon the main
His voyage had reached the ocean's utmost bound,
Upon the shore he met an aged man,
To him told the story of his search.
"O youth," the aged man low-voiced replied,
"There is one more noble than the 'mystic three,'
Though fair is Fortune with her yellow gold;
Though sweet is Love if she be true;
Though grand is Fame, and eloquent her voice;
Fame, Fortune, Love, less noble all than one
Whose name is Duty. Serve her day by day,
And happy if with chastened life and pure,

Thou quit thyself as knight of Duty ought;
Fame, Fortune, Love, and all that men hold dear,
Will follow surely as the azure sky.
For he who gives his life at Duty's call,
Lives while he dies, and conquers in defeat;
And he who loves the right more than all else,
Shall win at last the eternal crown of life."

Then can we say:

Cover the embers
And put out the light;
Toil comes with the morning
And rest with the night.
The book is complete
And closed like the day;
And the hand that has written it
Lays it away.

On motion of Mr. BELKNAP, the resolutions were adopted; and the House then, in pursuance thereof (at 4 o'clock p. m.), adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 11, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th of January, a list of unappealed awards and judgments for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, under act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, and acts supplementary thereto, which awards and judgments have not been paid nor provided for in former appropriations; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law in certain French spoliation claims relating to the brig Caroline and the schooner Phoenix; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law in French spoliation claims relating to the brig Friendship; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6788) to establish supports of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and at Ashland, Wis., in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5640) to increase the pension of Cassie A. Davis was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT announced his signature of the enrolled bill (H. R. 4534) to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise; which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, on the subject of the lands heretofore appropriated for the support of schools within the Chickasaw cession in said State.

Whereas Congress, by act of May 19, 1852 (10 Stat., 6), did authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi "to sell and convey in fee simple, or lease for a term of years," as the said Legislature might deem best, "all or any part of the" lands heretofore reserved and appropriated by Congress for the "use of schools within said State"—"with the consent of the inhabitants of such township or district, to be obtained in such manner as the Legislature of said State may by law direct;" and

Whereas many sales of such lands have been made under authority of the Legislature of said State, at their full value, the purchase money paid, and valuable improvements made thereon; and

Whereas no evidence of such consent on the part of the inhabitants of the district of country comprised within the Chickasaw cession can now be found; and

Whereas said district of country comprises many counties and parts of counties, townships and parts of townships, making it a matter of great difficulty to obtain the consent of the inhabitants thereof to any measure; and

Whereas the proceeds of such sales have always been held by the State as a sacred trust for the schools within the said Chickasaw cession, and are now so held; and the said schools have always received the full benefit of the interest thereon, and the people of said district of country, by so receiving and using said proceeds for many years without raising any question as to the entire validity of said sales of land have indicated their approval of the same:

This memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, respectfully begs your honorable bodies, in view of the premises and of the fact that good faith requires it, that an act be passed by Congress ratifying the sales of school lands heretofore appropriated for the support of schools in the Chickasaw cession, and authorizing the State hereafter to make disposal of such lands without the consent of the inhabitants previously had and obtained.

And your memorialists respectfully suggest the bill hereto appended as one which would be calculated to carry out the purpose of this memorial. An act to authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell or lease the lands heretofore appropriated to the use of schools within the Chickasaw cession, and to ratify and approve the sales already made.

Whereas Congress, by act of May 19, 1852 (10 Stat., 6), did authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi "to sell and convey in fee simple or lease for a term of years, as the said Legislature might deem best," all or any part of the lands heretofore reserved and appropriated by Congress for the "use of schools within said State" * * * "with the consent of the inhabitants of such township or district," to be obtained in such manner as the Legislature of said State may by law direct;" and

Whereas many sales of such lands have been made under authority of the Legislature of said State at their full value, the purchase money paid, and valuable improvements made thereon; and

Whereas no evidence of such consent on the part of the inhabitants of the district of country comprised within the Chickasaw cession can now be found; and

Whereas said district of country comprises many counties and parts of counties, townships and parts of townships, making it matter of great difficulty to obtain the consent of the inhabitants thereof to any measure; and

Whereas the proceeds of such sales have already been held by the State as a sacred trust for the schools within the said Chickasaw cession, and are now so held, and the said schools have always received the full benefit of the interest thereon, and the people of said district of country, by so receiving and using said proceeds for many years without raising any question as to the entire validity of said sales of land, have indicated their approval of the same:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all sales and leases of said lands heretofore made under authority of laws passed by the said Legislature of the State of Mississippi are hereby in all respects ratified and approved.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That sales or leases of said lands may hereafter be made under and by virtue of the laws passed by said Legislature, and that the consent of such inhabitants shall not be requisite for the validity of such sales or leases.

I hereby certify that the foregoing attached memorial was adopted by the house of representatives of the State of Mississippi, 31st day of March, 1892.

R. E. WILSON,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the foregoing attached memorial was adopted by the senate of the State of Mississippi, 1st day of April, 1892.

D. P. PORTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, praying that liberal appropriations be made to extend the usefulness of the Bureau of American Republics to the merchants and manufacturers of this country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Smithfield, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bills; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of 84 citizens of Hancock, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill to provide home rule in Utah Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of 78 citizens of Columbus, Ohio, praying for the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, signed by 205 citizens of Ohio, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sundays; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Hon. Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, praying for an investigation of certain circumstances connected with the refusal of the Government of China to receive him as American minister to that country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, a citizen of Manchester, in the State of New Hampshire, respectfully represents that he desires this communication to be considered in connection with the message of the President transmitting a portion of the correspondence called for by resolution of the Senate passed in executive session on March 14, 1892, "relating to the nonacceptance of Hon. Henry W. Blair as minister of the United States to China, with the Chinese Government, and between Mr. Blair, the President, and the Department of State." This correspondence was first called for in open session early last January, but the Senator who introduced the resolution evidently did not understand that perhaps the most important part of it so far as your memorialist is concerned was conducted directly between the President and himself. The more recent call was made quite specific, but that portion of the correspondence transmitted conveys the impression that the responsibility for the failure to present the views of this Government to China in an earlier stage of the proceedings rests upon your memorialist because of his "peremptory" resignation. Upon this and other accounts he feels compelled to submit the following to the consideration of the Senate:

Your memorialist respectfully shows that on the 27th day of February, 1891, he was appointed and confirmed to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States at Peking, the capital of the Chinese Empire; that on the 6th day of March following he accepted the office and began making the necessary preparations for departure to his post of duty; that while en route to Peking he received notice that the Chinese Government had objected to him as persona non grata, and on the 29th day of April, 1891, he was recalled to Washington by a telegram received by him at Chicago from the honorable Secretary of State; that immediately upon his arrival in Washington, on the 1st day of May, he notified the honorable Secretary, and was informed that the Secretary was obliged to leave the city for a few days, and that in any event the matter must await the return of the President, who was then in a distant part of the country; that the honorable Secretary did not return to the Department until late in the autumn following, and so far as your memorialist knows did nothing further in the case; that immediately upon the return of the President he notified him, and on the 25th day of May forwarded to the President the following letter, accompanied by a memorandum of law and authorities supporting the views set forth in the letter itself:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1891.

"To the President:

"On the 29th of April, while en route to China, I received at the city of Chicago a telegram from the honorable Secretary of State notifying me to return to the city of Washington, which I immediately did, arriving on Friday, May 1. I immediately informed Mr. Blaine, but he was unable to see me on account of the pressure of affairs, and on Monday, the 4th instant, wrote me that he must be absent in New York four days. His illness has intervened, and I have felt obliged to simply await the course of events. I am informed that the Chinese Government objects to my reception because I voted for the exclusion act of 1888, and because the press of my own country is opposed to me. I only quote what has been said to me, not having knowledge of the matter here in the State Department.

"The first reason is equivalent to a declaration of nonintercourse in principle, for the House of Representatives passed the bill unanimously and the Senate with but three dissenting votes, which action was approved by the Executive. It is just cause of offense for any foreign government to question the language of the President or of the debates in Congress.

"The second reason is one probably never before heard of, and, if acted upon, would exclude several men in the country who is fit for the position, from the President down to myself.

"As matter of fact the speeches and the motion I have made have been completely falsified by the press, and the Chinese Government has been placed in a wholly untenable position by its hasty action.

"I can find no trace of any like action in diplomatic history, and if China were a European nation there would be no excuse for failure on the part of the United States to demand an immediate apology, failing to receive which our minister should be at once recalled and diplomatic intercourse closed until the insult should be atoned for. It might be well to recall the minister anyway, but that it might make a friendly result less likely.

"The reception of the duly accredited minister of a friendly power can not be arbitrarily refused without offense. Reasons must be given; if not given they may be called for, and those reasons are open to discussion. They must be found to be true in fact and sufficient in their nature to justify a proceeding so extraordinary. If China was ever to resent the passage of the exclusion act she should at once on its passage have dismissed Mr. Denby. She would thus have shown her resentment to the President and Congress who committed the supposed affront.

"The facts in this case can not be allowed to ripen into a precedent if we are to maintain our respectability in the diplomatic world, and our prestige with China, if we have any, would be entirely destroyed. The Chinese minister has caused me several times to be informed of his regret at this occasion and of his strong desire that our Government would ask him to request of his the interchange of friendly explanations, which would enable him to be the means of setting the matter right.

"If Mr. Blaine is not to return to his post before long it seems to me that it is not improper that I should bring the matter more directly to your attention by a personal interview. An amicable adjustment of the affair will make our relations much closer than before, while any other will result in prolonged trouble at home and probably increased ill will between the two nations, of which our rivals will be glad.

"With me this or any other office has no longer any significance. I am obliged to be silent, although silence on my part has not prevented copious calumnies issuing from the press.

"If, however, the business can not be rectified ultimately through the State Department I shall place the truth before the country, if possible, in my own way. Meanwhile I am waiting, knowing that the matter is in the best hands that could have it.

"There are just now many more immediately pressing although intrinsically, I think, few more delicate and important affairs than this connected with our foreign relations. The impossibility of my presenting myself at the White House without provoking a mass of newspaper comment alone has kept me from tendering my warmest congratulations upon the wonderful success of your tour through the country and expressing the strong desire I feel for your personal success and happiness. I have the honor to be,

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"HENRY W. BLAIR."

Thereupon such proceedings were had that, having previously placed on file in the State Department a full reply to all the reasons alleged by the Chinese Government for his rejection, and, desiring that the President should be relieved of all embarrassment of a personal nature, on the 23d day of June your memorialist tendered to the President his resignation, expressing, however, his desire that the truth might be made known, in a letter of which the following is a copy:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1891.

"The President:

"I have the honor hereby to tender my resignation as minister of the United States to China.

"I have to-day placed on file in the Department of State the means of disproving the false and scandalous newspaper reports which have been cited by the Chinese Government as the reason of my rejection as persona non grata.

"It would be a source of gratification to me if the truth could be made known to the Chinese Government and to my own countrymen.

"With sentiments of the highest respect and most sincere personal regard, I have the honor to be,

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"HENRY W. BLAIR."

That on the 1st day of July the President informed your memorialist that he should accept the resignation without further action, but indicated that he would delay for about thirty days as your memorialist assured him that the Chinese minister resident here had the impression that his Government had been misled by false representations and believed the objections would be withdrawn when the facts were made known; that believing that the pendency of his resignation was likely to result in its acceptance without official denial or explanation or notice upon the record by the Government of the United States of the false and scandalous matter which had been made use of to mislead the Chinese Government and to secure the rejection of your memorialist, on the 9th day of July, in letters to both the President and the Acting Secretary, he withdrew the tender of his resignation, and on the 15th he filed with the Department a further statement in answer to the note of June 23, received from the Chinese minister, and on the 1st day of August he informed the President of the reasons for which he withdrew the tender of his resignation, including the fact that, under like circumstances, Mr. Krille did not tender his resignation until the conclusion of the controversy, and that he designed to pursue the same course with his own unless the President should earlier express a desire to accept it. (See Senate Ex. Doc., No. 4, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.)

That on the 7th day of August the President wrote to your memorialist in substance that he deemed it necessary to close the matter so far as your memorialist was concerned, and that he thought he must consider the question of another appointment, and on the 8th your memorialist replied by a letter of which the following is a copy:

"WASHINGTON, August 8, 1891.

"To the President:

"Your letter of yesterday in (presumed) reply to mine of the 1st instant is this moment received.

"The earlier a conclusion is reached in the matter of my appointment to China the better I shall be personally satisfied. I exceedingly regret any annoyance or embarrassment which my appointment has given you, and in this connection I can not help observing that there has been no moment since my recall to Washington which has not been full of mental disquiet to myself.

"The Chinese Government made certain charges of a personal and defamatory nature against me which are untrue.

"They are of such gravity that the public press, at home and abroad, has generally commended the action of that Government in rejecting me as persona non grata.

"It seemed to me that the international record, on which these false charges will be perpetual, should contain a denial and refutation of the same. Then the Chinese Government would be without excuse if it chose to persist in an unfriendly act.

"Under no circumstances could my reception be pressed upon China in the least, but with no facts left to justify my rejection the failure to apologize for the wrong that Government had done would become a serious international affront.

"Not to deny is to admit; and I believe that an efficient investigation would disclose a detestable conspiracy which should be exposed.

"I have placed the Department in possession of matter which entirely refutes the charges against myself, accompanied with a few suggestions which I hope will not be thought impertinent.

"(Signed, etc.),

"HENRY W. BLAIR."

On the 24th day of August your memorialist wrote a letter to the President, of which the following is a copy:

"WASHINGTON, August 24, 1891.

"To the President:

"Since you have had my case under advisement, with a view to final decision, many of the newspapers have contained articles and items to the effect that I am interested in alleged schemes to obtain privileges and concessions of supposed pecuniary value from the Chinese Government, to which I am the accredited minister of the United States.

"I recognize the necessity that some formal investigation should fix or remove the taint of suspicion thereby cast upon the national honor and the purity of our diplomatic service.

"Nor am I willing that my own good name be left in the uncertain status which would attend it without a finding upon evidence which shall establish either my guilt or innocence.

"If guilty, I am not entitled to that immediate and honorable release from the public service which for some time I have anticipated.

"If innocent, I ought at least to be permitted to close my public life without adding to everything else the loss of honor.

"It is now four months since the Chinese Government declined to receive me as the minister of the United States on account of words never spoken by me anywhere, but falsely alleged to have been spoken by me in the Senate, by scurrilous and malicious American newspapers, whose falsehoods were adopted by that Government as the truth.

"The correction of their error, I am informed, the Chinese Government has declined to receive.

"Congress will be in session within three months, and I desire that the whole matter be turned over to that body, unless there be some readier way to dispose of it which shall give opportunity for a thorough and open examination of all matters involved, both of a public and private character.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"HENRY W. BLAIR."

On the 30th day of September the President informed your memorialist that he had decided to accept the resignation without communication of denials or explanations to the Chinese Government, and thereupon to protest against the action of the Chinese Government in rejecting your memorialist and also to write to him a personal letter of the character which appears in the correspondence transmitted to the Senate under date of October 6, 1891, all which was accordingly done.

Your memorialist had done much, not herein or in the correspondence transmitted to the Senate set forth, and he believed that he had done or attempted all that it was proper for him to attempt in order to secure a reply to the charges of the Chinese Government before his resignation was accepted, and he does not feel bound to explain why it was considered essential by the President to postpone the expression of the still uninvited views of this Government, until, even if they produced their natural effect in the withdrawal of the objections which would thus be shown to be unfounded, that result would have been rendered unimportant by the prior ending of your memorialist's term of office.

Your memorialist has, however, become impressed with the belief that for some cause to him unknown the opinion of the Chinese minister expressed to him after the interview of June 15 with Mr. Wharton, an interview which had been arranged at the suggestion of the Chinese minister, who believed that the rejection was wrongfully secured, that the President no longer desired that he should continue to be minister to China, was correct; and as the letter of the President in accepting the resignation and the protest sent to Mr. Denby, the delivery of which to the Chinese Government so late as the 25th day of March ultimo was still uncertain, as shown by the published telegram of that date transmitted to the Senate, together with the then so recent indorsement by the appointment and confirmation of your memorialist, preclude the idea of a belief in his personal unfitness for the office, he feels that inquiry should be made to ascertain the reason, if there be any, for which his resignation was considered necessary before action could be taken which might have resulted in an immediate change in the person representing this country in China.

Your memorialist believes that his rejection was secured by false representations made by the Chinese home Government through the Chinese legation in this city while the minister himself was absent, and by other false and dishonorable means. That it does not depend upon the willingness of a nation making untenable objections to the accredited minister of a friendly power whether they shall be contradicted and repelled. But that, however that may be, from the facts in his possession he believes that the failure of the Chinese Government to invite explanations as the result of the interview of June 15, between Mr. Wharton and the Chinese minister, was the result of an incorrect translation of the mutual statements of the minister and secretary which neither understood except as rendered by the interpreter, and of other untoward and improper causes; and that said interpreter then was, and has been from the date of the appointment of your memorialist, interested by his relations with the capitalists and others who desired special influence with whoever might be the American minister to China, to secure the rejection of your memorialist, and to prevent the transmission of the truth between the two Governments. That your memorialist is in possession of facts that tend to prove that the difficulty originated, at least in part in, and has been fostered by the rivalry of business interests which, in their contention with each other, have employed methods and instrumentalities the nature of which should be ascertained by the Governments whose friendly relations have been thereby impaired if not endangered. Should the honorable Senate deem such investigation advisable your memorialist will, if desired, render every assistance in his power to promote its completeness and success.

HENRY W. BLAIR.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Keota, Iowa, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of James C. Taylor Post, No. 165, Grand Army of the Republic, of Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill giving ex-Union soldiers the preference in appointments in the civil service; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of E. J. Nichols and 28 other citizens of Nuckolls County, Nebr., praying for the passage of what are known as the Washburn-Hatch antioption bills; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PEPPER presented a petition of the Top-oka, Kans., Ministerial Union, praying for the enactment of such laws as will prohibit the sale of liquor at the National Soldiers' Home in Leavenworth, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCPHERSON presented a petition of the faculty and students of Mount Airy Theological Seminary, of Philadelphia, Pa., and a petition of the faculty and students of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, of Louisville, Ky., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. FAULKNER presented a memorial signed by 106 owners, masters, agents, mates, pilots, engineers, contractors, and clerks of steamboats plying on the Mississippi River and tributaries, of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1725, relative to the carrying into effect of certain recommendations of the International Maritime Conference, and praying for the passage of an amendment thereto excluding all vessels engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of citizens of Jonesboro, Tenn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of restoring John M. Goodhue, a citizen of that State, to the Army. I respectfully request the attention of my honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to the resolutions. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, in the year 1892.

Resolutions relative to memorializing Congress to restore John M. Goodhue to the Army, and to place him on the retired list.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of this Commonwealth in Congress are hereby requested to use their best efforts to secure the passage of an act restoring John M. Goodhue, a citizen of this Commonwealth, to the rank held by him in the United States Army at the time of his retirement, and placing him on the retired list.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the Senators and Representatives of this Commonwealth in Congress.

SENATE, March 23, 1892.

Adopted: Sent down for concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

Adopted, in concurrence. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 28, 1892.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE,

Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that this officer is personally known to me, and is a resident of the city where I dwell. He is a most meritorious officer, who rendered very great service in the early part of the war, being a thorough master of drill and discipline, although a volunteer officer. After the war he was appointed to the regular Army, and owing to a very peculiar family affliction, which it is not necessary to state more particularly, he resigned, when undoubtedly at that time he was fully entitled to be retired. If he had insisted upon the matter or had urged it, he would have been retired at that time of right; and now all that he asks is that the mistake made under those circumstances may be remedied by an act of Congress. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying that Maj. John M. Goodhue be restored to the Army and placed on the retired list; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of C. M. Tilton and other citizens of Boston, Mass.; the petition of A. W. Rice and other citizens of New Bedford, Mass., and the petition of A. J. Rice and other citizens of New Bedford, Mass., praying for the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the following petitions of Northboro and East Blackstone Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Massachusetts:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HISCOCK presented the petition of C. D. Hoag and 21 other citizens of Newburg, N. Y.; the petition of Rev. F. B. Savage and 72 other citizens of Newburg, N. Y.; the petition of W. J. Hallenback and 79 other members of the Presbyterian Church of Cortland, N. Y.; a petition of 700 members of the First Baptist Church of Cortland, N. Y., and a petition of 464 members of the Congregational Church of Cortland, N. Y., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of Rev. J. W. Ackerly and 65 other citizens of Peekskill, N. Y., and the petition of Stephen Brewer, E. A. Sheldon, and 250 other citizens of Ithaca, Oswego, and Brooklyn and vicinity, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Horatio H. Walker and 120 other citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying Congress to amend the laws relative to the immigration and naturalization of foreigners so as to prohibit the landing of criminals and paupers under contract, and also to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to prohibit any State from granting the right of suffrage to any person not a citizen of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of D. W. Braga and 3 other citizens of Oswego County, N. Y., and the petition of J. Emerson James and 16 other citizens of Oswego County, N. Y., praying for the passage of what are known as the Washburn-Hatch anti-option bills; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Eugene Barrett and 15 other members of J. R. Tappan Post, No. 215, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York, praying for the passage of the bill providing for the preservation and proper marking of the battle-lines at Gettysburg, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the following petitions of Hanover, Empire, Waterville, Highland, Ellington, Oatka Falls, Bartonville, Harmony, Lysander, and North Colesville Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of New York:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, containing 130 individual signatures and 3,069 representative indorsements, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of N. D. Chaffee and 27 other citizens of Southington, Conn., praying for the passage of more stringent immigration laws; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the petition of Francis H. Stafford and 46 other citizens of Ridgefield, Conn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the following petitions of Senexet, Cheshire, and Bethlehem Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Connecticut:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petition praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT. I present something more than forty memorials from citizens of various States in the Union, remonstrating against the passage of either the bill known as the home-rule bill or the statehood bill for Utah. I move that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRICE presented a memorial of 30 citizens of Ada, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of a general bankruptcy law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Ohio State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, signed by F. A. Akins, secretary, praying for the passage of what are known as the Washburn-Hatch anti-option bills; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Springfield, Ohio, containing 224 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a memorial of the Union Veteran League of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the removal of charges of desertion except where the person returned to duty after the charge had been recorded, or where it had been made through error or technicality; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Hough Avenue Congregational Church, of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against granting any loan or appropriation for the World's Columbian Exposition except upon the express condition that the Exposition shall be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the following petitions of German Excelsior, Milton, Poplar Grove, and Augusta Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ohio:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of citizens of Wakonda, S. Dak., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the following petitions of Monson Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Massachusetts:

Petition praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petition praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petition praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of citizens of Saco, Me., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Maine State Board of Trade, praying for the establishment of a department of trade and commerce, and for the appointment of a secretary thereof, who shall be a member of the President's cabinet, and also for the passage of Senate bill 1282, providing for the licensing of masters and mates of coastwise sailing vessels as pilots of the vessel of which they may be in command; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the petition of W. L. Heck and other citizens of Yell County, Ark.; the petition of R. L. Wright and other citizens of Arkansas, and the petition of J. M. Lester and other citizens of Lafayette County, Ark., praying for the passage of what are known as the Washburn-Hatch anti-option bills; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial signed by Hon. Samuel P. Sparks and other attorneys of Warrensburg, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of a general bankruptcy bill, and giving reasons therefor. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted at a regular meeting of Merrimac Farmers and Laborers' Union, No. 850, held on the 2d instant at Hollow, St. Louis County, Mo., in favor of the issue of fractional currency, and very strongly commending it. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also present a resolution unanimously adopted by the St. Louis Spanish Club April 2, 1892, in favor of the continuance of the publications of the Bureau of American Republics, which are translated into the English language and contain the tariff laws and customs regulations of the American republics and the colonies. This resolution very strongly commends the necessary appropriation for the continued publication of those documents. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, department of Sabbath observance, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday, and said to contain 39 individual signatures and 279 representative indorsements from Missouri. I move that the petitions be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Stringtown, Grange No. 1668, Patrons of Husbandry, of Illinois, praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Illinois, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purposes; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented the petition of Nancy Patterson, of Siloam Springs, Ark., praying that she be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of John Dobson and other citizens of Chehalis, Wash., praying for the passage of such legislation as will insure the early and economical building and operation of the Nicaragua Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Klickitat County, Wash., praying for the passage of the Butterworth anti-option bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the following petitions of Columbia and Mountain View Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Washington:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a memorial of citizens of Lawrenceburg, Ky., remonstrating against the passage of a general bankruptcy law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Alabama, signed by 336 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of citizens of Perry County, Ind.; a petition of citizens of Montgomery County, Ind., and a petition of citizens of Hancock County, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating speculation in fictitious farm products; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of the Steamboat Springs and Routt County Silver League, of Colorado, praying for the passage of legislation providing for the free coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Harrisburg, Colo., remonstrating against the passage of the bill providing for the ceding of arid lands to the various States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2503) for the relief of R. A. Spaulding, administrator of estate of Solomon Blue, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 107) authorizing the State of Wisconsin to place in Statuary Hall at the Capitol the statue of Père Marquette.

The message also requested the Senate to return to the House the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

A resolution to print 50,000 copies of the eighth and ninth annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1891 and 1892; and

A resolution to print 8,000 copies of the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 69) authorizing the use of the martello tower on Tybee Island, Georgia, for a signal station; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1987) for the relief of Samuel Collins, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2113) amending section 2139 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the sale of intoxicants to Indians, to report it adversely, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. I will state that the reason for the adverse report is that the Senate has already passed a bill upon this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 866) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail certain officers of the Army for special duty in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that after the bill to amend the act establishing circuit courts of appeals shall have been disposed of, I shall desire to call up this bill and a kindred measure in reference to the Court of Claims, so that the three bills which relate to the jurisdiction of the different courts of the United States may be considered in succession.

TRANSFER OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to accompany the bill (S. 67) to transfer the Revenue-Cutter Service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department. That bill is already on the Calendar, and I ask leave, in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina, to submit his report to go with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will accompany the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered. That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 additional copies of the report on the bill (S. 67) to transfer the Revenue-Cutter Service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2883) for the relief of Katherine B. Montgomery, administratrix; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2884) for the relief of Charlotte A. Von Cort; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2885) to authorize the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell or lease the lands heretofore appropriated to the use of schools within the Chickasaw cession, and to ratify and approve the sales already made; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2886) for the relief of Louis B. Kopp; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2887) for the relief of the legal representatives of James V. Bomford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2888) to provide for the survey and construction of a wagon road from Gold Hill Station, Jackson County, Oregon, to Crater Lake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2889) for the relief of Thornton A. Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands among several Indian tribes in the Quapaw Agency, in the Indian Territory, and for the sale of certain surplus lands of such tribes, and for the creation of the county of Cayuga in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2891) to increase the pension of Warren Hallett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2892) to remove the limitation in the payments of arrears of pensions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 2893) authorizing the construction of a free bridge across the Arkansas River connecting Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2894) to quiet title to certain lands in the State of North Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. VOORHEES. Some days ago I introduced the bill (S. 2693) for the relief of John H. Crane, of the District of Columbia, and had it referred to the Committee on Claims. I am satisfied that the bill ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I ask that that change of reference be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Chair hears no objection.

INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that Order of Business 381, the joint resolution (S. R. 55) to encourage the establishment and endowment of institutions of learning at the national capital, be indefinitely postponed. A similar measure has passed the other House and is now on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved. That the Committee on Indian Affairs have authority for the employment of a stenographer to report the hearings of March 5 and March 19, 1892, relative to allotments of lands in severally to certain Indian tribes before a subcommittee of said committee, the compensation of said stenographer to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I inquire whether the resolution must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH HAITI AND GERMANY.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their present consideration.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved. That the President is requested, if it is not, in his opinion incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate the items of taxation upon imports from the United States imposed by the laws of the republic of Haiti, upon which he has based his finding and proclamation that the tariff laws of Haiti are, reciprocally, unjust to the United States; and that he send to the Senate the correspondence with the Government of Haiti relating to reductions of taxation under the tariff laws of Haiti, that have been proposed by either Government to secure reciprocal justice in tariff taxation between the two Governments.

Resolved. That in like manner, the President is requested to send to the Senate any agreement made by him, on behalf of the United States, with the Imperial Government of Germany, and the correspondence relating to the subject of such agreement, in which it is provided that sugar, or any other German production or export, shall be admitted free of duty into the United States. And that he inform the Senate what articles of American production he has proposed or demanded that Germany shall receive free of duty or upon a schedule of reduced duties, as the fair reciprocal equivalent of permitting the import into the United States of German sugar, hides, tea, or coffee; and, whether such proposals, or demands, made by the President, have been accepted by the Imperial Government of Germany.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions?

Mr. HALE. Let them lie over for a day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will go over and be printed.

BUILDING OF WAR SHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. HALE. Has any action been taken on the two resolutions which on my request were laid over on Friday?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay the resolutions before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have examined them, and I have no objection to their being passed.

The resolution submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 8th instant was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the iron and steel shipbuilding plants along the Great Lakes of the Northwest exceed in combined facilities, in magnitude, and in capital the interests of all other shipbuilding plants of the country combined; and,

Whereas it is further alleged that these great inland shipbuilding interests have been denied an opportunity to bid for the construction of torpedo boats and the smaller class of warships which can be taken by the water route through the St. Lawrence to the sea; Therefore,

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether any bids for the construction of certain types of war ships have been received from any of said shipbuilding companies, and whether such bid or bids have been refused or rejected by his Department for any reason or reasons other than such as follow from the usual rule in accepting or rejecting bids for such class of work, and if so, the reasons therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL FORCE ON THE GREAT LAKES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 8th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the agreement entered into between the United States and Great Britain in the year 1817, covering the question of the naval force to be maintained by the two Governments on the Great Lakes of the United States is now held to be in force by the Department of State, and what, if any, action has been taken by our Government to revive or put in force the terms of said agreement, and if so, under what authority or action on the part of our Government such agreement has been held to be in force since the giving of the required formal notice by the President to Great Britain in December, 1864, of a desire on the part of the United States to annul said agreement at the expiration of the six months from the date of said formal notice, and of the ratification of said notice by the act of Congress of February 9, 1865.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what is the aggregate cost of the silver bullion and standard dollars coined therefrom purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, and now held in the Treasury, and what amount of Treasury notes issued for such purchase is now outstanding; and whether any of such notes have been received by the Treasury in exchange for gold coin or redeemed in gold coin; and what amount of silver coin there is now in the Treasury applicable to the redemption of such notes; and also whether, when such notes are received into the Treasury for customs, taxes, and other public dues, they are reissued or retained in the Treasury; and if any such notes have been retained in the Treasury, what amount has been so retained. Are persons selling bullion to the United States under the act of April 14, 1890, required to make immediate delivery and take the bullion so sold out of the market, or are they given time to make such deliveries after having made a contract to supply the United States and deprived others of that opportunity? Does the public have notice of the times, places, and amounts of silver bullion which will be purchased by the United States, or are such purchases made of brokers and bankers without such public notice? Is the business of purchasing silver bullion under the act of July 14, 1890, conducted with a view of depressing the price of bullion and obtaining it as cheap as possible, or with a view of carrying out the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals (gold and silver) on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio. And what amount of gold coin and gold bars is there in the Treasury, exclusive of outstanding gold certificates?

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I presume the resolution had better be printed.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a few remarks in regard to it.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that; but I should like to have the resolution printed before it is passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know that I understand the Treasury statement and the mode of making up the accounts. It seems to me that there is some doubt about the possibility of maintaining the gold standard under the theory of the Secretary of the Treasury. The last report—

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment? My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] gave notice that to-day he wished to submit some remarks, and I also gave notice that I desired to make some remarks to-day upon a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. Do I understand that the Senator from Nevada proposes to occupy the time with a speech?

Mr. STEWART. I propose to occupy about fifteen minutes. If that is not convenient, I will let the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON. I also gave notice that I should ask for an executive session this morning, and I do not want all the time consumed with other matters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is still in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know the purpose of the Senate in regard to the two days to be spent upon the Calendar. The bill for the amendment of the act to establish circuit courts of appeals is the unfinished business; but when it was made the unfinished business some ten days ago I said that I did not wish to interfere with the desire of the Senate to have two days spent upon the Calendar. I should like to have that settled now, if the Chair please. I desire to know what we can depend on.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not suppose the Senator from Massachusetts intends to interfere with the remarks which Senators gave notice they would like to make in the morning hour to-day.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that the Senator from Nevada was about to occupy the time on his resolution, and I thought I would ask him if he would not postpone his remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator to allow me to make a suggestion and I will then yield the floor. I will allow the resolution I offered to lie on the table for the present, and I shall occupy about fifteen minutes to-morrow morning, as Senators desire to have it in print before it is acted upon. Let it lie on the table, and I shall to-morrow occupy about fifteen minutes, not to make a speech, but to explain how I understand the statements of the Treasury Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

Mr. STEWART. I want it distinctly understood that to-morrow morning I shall occupy about fifteen minutes, not to make any speech, but to call attention to the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Chair understand that the order to spend two days on the Calendar is in force for to-day and to-morrow?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was the understanding of the Chair at the time, that when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was completed the next two days should be devoted to the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Then I give notice that I shall insist upon the observance of that order for to-day and to-morrow, excepting, of course, the opportunity for the Senator from Nevada to make his remarks.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts does not propose to cut off my motion for an executive session to-day.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2503) for the relief of R. A. Spaulding, administrator of estate of Solomon Blue, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims;

The bill (H. R. 6006) to admit free of duty bagging for cotton, machinery for manufacturing bagging, cotton-ties, and cotton-gins, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance; and

The joint resolution (H. Res. 107) authorizing the State of Wisconsin to place in Statuary Hall at the Capitol the statue of Père Marquette was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

RETURN OF CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to that body the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 50,000 copies of the eighth and ninth annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1891 and 1892; and, by unanimous consent, the request was ordered to be complied with and the concurrent resolution returned to the House of Representatives.

He also laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to that body the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 8,000 copies of the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, and, by unanimous consent, the request was ordered to be complied with, and the concurrent resolution returned to the House of Representatives.

NATIONAL SANITARIUM.

Mr. GALLINGER. In pursuance of the notice heretofore given by me, I call up Senate joint resolution No. 67.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 67) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for the establishment of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it may not be unprofitable for the Senate to pause for a brief time from the consideration of political and financial questions and give thought to a subject that deeply concerns the physical and moral well-being of a large class in every State of the American Union—a class of citizens environed by misfortune and rendered hopeless and helpless by disease. The statistics of mortality show that consumption destroys more lives than war, pestilence, and famine combined, and the individual sufferer is powerless to cope with this relentless enemy of mankind. In their utter helplessness these unfortunates appeal to the Congress of the United States for sympathy and help. Shall their appeal be in vain?

The joint resolution for the establishment of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases, which I had the honor to introduce on the 22d day of March last, reads as follows:

SECTION 1. That the President of the United States shall appoint a commission consisting of three persons, two of whom shall be physicians, whose duty it shall be to select a site, and make report thereon to the President, for the establishment of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases, said location to be in some one of the Territories of the United States and upon such of the public lands as may be unoccupied.

SEC. 2. That the commission so appointed shall, within six months after their appointment, report to the President of the United States where, in their best judgment, is the proper place to establish said sanitarium, together with the boundaries of the land whereon to establish the same, and also rules and regulations suited for the government of the same.

SEC. 3. That upon the receipt of such report the President shall by proclamation withdraw the lands described in said report from sale, and from preemption, homestead, or other entry or sale, and shall reserve the same for the purpose of said sanitarium.

SEC. 4. That the surveyors-general of the several Territories shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, make such surveys and render such assistance to said commission as the said commission may desire.

SEC. 5. That the traveling expenses, fares, and other expenses incident to the selecting and reporting upon such site shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, upon vouchers properly certified, and the said commissioners shall each be paid $10 per day for each and every day they shall be actually employed on such duty.

SEC. 6. That $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of said commission, their expenses, fares, clerk hire, and all other matters connected with or growing out of the selecting and reporting said site.

Two points are essential in the discussion:

First, can the Congress of the United States constitutionally and properly locate such institution upon the public domain; and, second, if so, is it desirable that it shall be done? I will endeavor, in the fewest possible words, to express my views on the subject.

When this matter was first broached one of the leading newspapers of the country declared it to be "paternalism run mad," doubtless meaning to convey the idea that it was asking of Congress an unusual and improper exercise of power. In view of the legislation already accomplished this surely is not so. The fact is, Congress has repeatedly recognized the principle that underlies this proposed legislation.

Under sections 4801 to 4812, Revised Statutes of the United States, foreign seamen who are sick or disabled are provided for in that great national charity, the hospitals for the relief of seamen, which are located in all the larger ports of the country, supported and maintained by the Government, admission to them being open to all seafaring men.

Sections 4825 to 4837, Revised Statutes, provide national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers, which, like the hospitals for seamen, are a nation's tribute to the sentiment of patriotism.

Sections 4838 to 4858 provide that—

There shall be in the District of Columbia a Government Hospital for the Insane, and its objects shall be the most humane care and enlightened curative treatment of its inmates.

Sections 4859 to 4869 provide for the deaf and dumb in the District of Columbia, by which deaf mutes in the several States and Territories have provision made for the amelioration of a terrible constitutional infirmity, and by kindly provision for such unfortunates is shown our national forethought.

Sections 1946 and 1947 provide for the setting apart of two sections of land in each township for public schools.

By section 2380 provision is made for the reservation of certain lands for town sites. Mines, salines, timber, and water are reserved under other sections for sundry uses.

By the act of June 3, 1887, John Chamberlin is allowed to erect and have a hotel on the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe.

The provisions for national cemeteries recognize the right of the Government to purchase or donate lands for national purposes, and the establishment of these cemeteries teaches the lesson that proper care for the living is the sacred charge the dead heroes left us in trust to perform.

The legislation concerning the Hot Springs of Arkansas is a recognition of the principle embodied in the proposed legislation, and it will be observed that by joint resolution of March 3, 1887, the Secretary of the Interior is required to furnish from the hot springs, for bath houses not on the Government reservation, hot water to private enterprises.

By sections 2474 to 2477, that vast territory known as the Yellowstone Park, with all its natural wonders, has been set apart, and provision made for its protection for "public purposes of pleasure." Here the robust, and those who can afford the expense of travel may enjoy the scenery and revel in the sunshine of this beautiful spot. Is it not proper that some space be reserved for the comfort and well-being of those whose conditions of health or of purse will not admit of the enjoyment of that national park? It should be borne in mind that "They who are whole need not a physician, but they who are sick."

There are other vast tracts of the public domain set apart for parks, among which may be named the Gen. Grant National Park, the Sequoia National Park, and the Yosemite National Park, all in the State of California. The Yosemite Park alone covers over 1,000,000 acres of land, and, as is well-known, is essentially a pleasure ground. In the act establishing the Sequoia

National Park provision is made for leasing small parcels of ground for building purposes, for the accommodation of visitors, a precedent that will be of use for those seeking health on the reservation that we hope to have set apart for health purposes under the provisions of this bill.

Again, by act approved May 29, 1884, establishing a Bureau of Animal Industry, means are provided for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals. Provision is made for a chief, a secretary, veterinarians, agents, and other officers, at large salaries, some of the per-diem employees receiving $10 per day. It is provided that transportation lines shall be subject to the direction of these officials, and the prosecuting officers of judicial districts are required to aid them in their efforts to stamp out pulmonary and other disorders in the cow, the horse, the hog, the sheep, and all manner of four-footed beasts.

The act placed $150,000 at the disposal of the Bureau for immediate use, and by the appropriation act of the next year $100,000 is provided annually to carry on the work. Nearly $1,000,000 has been expended by this Bureau in its beneficent operations. The question arises, will Congress, after making such liberal provisions for stamping out pulmonary diseases in domestic animals, hesitate to do something to prevent the spread of similar diseases among human beings? Or is it to become a byword that the American Congress is always ready to legislate for the protection of property, but rarely ever for the good of humanity, or the welfare of the unfortunate and unprotected?

Many other citations could be made if necessary, but surely enough precedents have been shown to conclusively prove that Congress can constitutionally and properly use the public domain for the purpose sought to be accomplished.

In attempting to show that it is desirable that the proposed sanitarium should be established, I will largely rely upon the observations and investigations of others—those who have given much thought, time, and money to the subject. It is well to suggest that this is not a new topic. Philanthropic and public-spirited physicians have been discussing it for many years, and societies are already formed to carry out as far as they can by private benevolence the work that it is hoped Congress may aid in doing. The American Health Resort Association of Chicago, of which Dr. T. C. Duncan, of that city, is president, and Dr. J. F. Danter, of Toronto, Ontario, is vice-president, has already done a great work in this direction.

At a meeting of this society held in Chicago October 27, 1891, nearly two thousand physicians were present, showing the great interest manifested by the medical profession in the welfare of the unfortunate class whom they are striving to benefit. Under the auspices of this society several physicians have made extensive tours of investigation through Colorado, California, New Mexico, etc., and much valuable information has been gathered.

The interest that Dr. Duncan feels in the pending legislation is expressed in the subjoined letter:

THE AMERICAN HEALTH RESORT ASSOCIATION.
Chicago, March 28, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I learn through the press that you have introduced into the United States Senate a joint resolution to set aside some of the public lands for a national sanitarium. That is a grand good move, and one that will be the means of saving thousands of lives. I hope the resolution will be adopted before Government lands adapted to that purpose are all taken up. Our association, having done work in that line, can appreciate the fact that land adapted to a sanitarium is being rapidly entered. I deem this a matter of the utmost importance, and trust you may find a ready response on the part of the Government. Certainly the masses of the people are with you.

Yours, most truly,

T. C. DUNCAN.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER.

Dr. W. T. Shepherd, in a communication to the Medical Visitor, thus writes of the climate of Albuquerque, N. Mex.:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., October 20, 1891.

Of a phthisical family, I found myself in poor health a few years ago, after quite a hard course of study, and came to New Mexico, where I shortly regained health and strength. Thinking the climate near the lakes too severe, I did not return there, but went into the northwestern corner of Iowa, near the Minnesota line, in the celebrated Southern Minnesota climate, and took up a country practice. After two years' work I found my old trouble returning—indigestion, cough, a little hemoptysis, etc.—and so went to Prof. Arnulphy for examination. He reported slight deposit in left apex, and remembering the family tendency, I left at once and arrived in Albuquerque in August, 1888, after looking quite thoroughly over Western Kansas, Colorado, and New Mexico. My cough soon stopped, hemoptysis ceased, and by the beginning of the new year I seemed entirely well in every respect.

This improvement, while not so marked in all cases, is observed in nearly all coming to this climate in the incipency, and in those where no softening of the lungs has taken place is quite the rule, even though there may be considerable deposit.

The cases of pulmonary difficulties most benefited by a removal to this climate are those of chronic pneumonia, or such as are known as consumption following pneumonia, asthma, and the early stages of tuberculosis. Those cases of chronic pneumonia which so much resemble tuberculosis are benefited even in quite late stages, many becoming entirely well—the only limit I would put upon this class of cases being the time when so much of the lung tissue has been destroyed by suppuration that shortness of breath is constant and troublesome even in a lower altitude. People here must take deeper breaths to get the required amount of oxygen.

Asthma is always relieved almost immediately and completely upon reaching these high, dry plains. Barring cases dependent upon organic diseases of the heart you can not go amiss in sending asthma to New Mexico. I do not know a single case existing in the Territory and only one case which has required a month to complete the cure.

As to tuberculosis, our great disadvantage and the patient's distress result from the general practice among Eastern physicians of keeping their patients on hope and cod-liver oil until the curable stage has passed, and the patient comes to us as a last resort before going to his long home.

Patients should be sent here just as soon as the diagnosis can be made. Do not let them put it off one day. They must come on at once, and straighten business matters afterward by mail. They must fly as they would from the cholera. Hundreds are killed by that one or two months to arrange business matters.

Before softening has commenced the patients have a fair chance of recovery—perhaps as good as an ordinary case of typhoid fever or pneumonia, and their chances decrease with every day of delay.

It is another mistake of Eastern physicians that cases having hemorrhages should not come here. This seems not to be true at Albuquerque, for cases having hemorrhages do unusually well.

I have made considerable study of the native people with a view of finding whether or not they have tuberculosis, and although they live in the most unsanitary surroundings no case of the disease has come to my knowledge. I have yet to find a case of tuberculosis developing in this climate even among the adult children of those who came here years ago with the disease.

Dr. A. Petin, a distinguished physician, educated in Europe, makes the following contribution to the Journal of the American Medical Association:

LAS CRUCES, N. MEX., October 16, 1891.

DR. T. C. DUNCAN,
President American Health Resort Association.

DEAR DOCTOR: In conformity with my promise, I send you my report, at last. Ever since 1872 I am a resident of the United States, but every other year, and sometimes every year, I take a trip to Europe, where I attend clinics. Three years ago I had the opportunity of listening to several lectures by some eminent professors of Paris. Their subject was phthisis.

After several meetings with some of these gentlemen, I was entertained with a proposition to find a more suitable climate to establish a sanitarium for consumptives, at an altitude of from 4,000 to 5,000 feet above the ocean, not too cold, not too warm, without much rain, neither fog, and especially avoiding snow. The object of finding such a climate was to permit the patients to be out of doors as much as possible and even to have them sleep in the open air seven or eight months of the year. In Germany a great many patients are kept in pine forests, and some of them find relief by the emanation, but lately a great many prominent physicians of all nations found that it was not only the pine emanation, but the pure air which benefited them the most. It was also with the same belief that a French medical society was formed to rescue the consumptive children from that deadly disease.

For over two years I traveled most of the time in North, Central, and South America. I have found a great many good locations, with finest scenery, but almost everywhere there is some objection, either too much moisture in the atmosphere, fog, cold, snow, or excessive altitude. After traveling all over the Pacific coast, Nevada, Arizona, and Colorado, I had the good fortune to meet Mr. H. F. Grierson, of the Santa Fe Railroad, and traveling together for several months we came to see every place of interest in New Mexico, Texas, and Old Mexico. In the Territory of New Mexico we found numerous good places, but some rather too cold, some too high altitude, and others too much snow for certain classes of patients. By gathering a great deal of information from old residents I found malaria existing more or less all along the Rio Grande, and another objection to the valley is the dust brought by the river, which is so fine as to fly at the smallest breeze; but altogether the best climate with the most sunshine is to be found in Southern New Mexico, although some difference must be made on account of temperature.

In fact I was never satisfied until I found the San Augustine plains, with an altitude of 5,000 feet above the sea, surrounded by mountains from 1,300 to 1,500 feet higher, with unsurpassable drinking water and also mineral waters, one spring containing a great quantity of peroxide of iron and manganese, and others containing sulphate of lime in enormous quantities, etc. But the grandest of all is the level plains, 170 miles long and about 80 miles wide, all covered with palms, cactus, saponaria, Panama plant, soapweed, etc., and every kind of flower all the year round, giving the best opportunity for riding, either horseback, or in any kind of vehicle. The temperature is the most even, the thermometer all the year round at an average of about 62°, with scarcely any snowfall, and when it does snow it does not last more than an hour or two; no dust, no malaria, and the soil is the most porous that can be found anywhere.

There are some samples of consumptives cured residing here who, when they first came, were not capable of walking alone, and who are enjoying good health ever since. There is a peculiarity in this country. As soon as one gets here he feels happy! The amount of rain for three years was an average of about 4 inches a year. Fogs are entirely unknown, and very seldom is there great wind. There is an abundance of game of all kinds, good fishing, and beautiful shade trees grow at the foot of the mountains. There any patient can sleep out of doors eight months of the year without fear of catching cold.

I hope to see you soon and to have a trip over there where you will judge for yourself if there is any other place to compare with the one I refer to. Having no other interest than a philanthropic one, I am of the opinion that a great resort can be built there.

Dr. J. F. Danter, of Toronto, who made an exhaustive investigation of the subject of climatology, with reference to the treatment of consumption, at the instance of the American Health Resort Association, thus writes to the Medical Visitor:

TORONTO, CANADA, August 31, 1891.

To the American Health Resort Association:

I have the honor to report as special commissioner appointed by your president, T. C. Duncan, M. D., to visit New Mexico and investigate its claims as a health resort for consumptives, that I went through the whole Territory, from Raton to El Paso, and spent most of August in my investigations.

That country is divided by the Rocky Mountains almost in the center from north to south. On the west side of the mountains is the Rio Grande River and its many tributary streams that make the land broken and undulating with wide valleys and plateaus. Between Santa Fe and Albuquerque the range is cut through by a tributary to the Rio Grande. This break in the mountain chain is a most important one in moderating the climate there-about. The streams in the eastern half of the State trend to the southeast almost from the Raton range on the north. This spur of the Rocky Mountains doubtless shunts the "northerners" farther east. The country east of the main Rocky Mountain range is more undulating and well adapted to grazing and will be beneficial to those cases of incipient consumption who can play the cowboy or farmer. Good farms can be had by irrigation, and this locality will be beneficial to many consumptive families.

Las Vegas.—The mountains seem broken into many spurs as we approach Las Vegas, which is a smart city of some 6,000 people, with fair accommodations. The Hot Springs are the great attraction. I tested them in every way possible. There are hot and cold springs and baths of all kinds. The bath attendants are experts, and I can report that this is a delightful place. The hotel affords the most elegant accommodations; cheaper places can be had near by. The air is very bracing. I met there consumptives who had hemorrhage in Boston and the East; they were improving. I met others with special diseases, all doing well. For rheumatism, syphilis, blood diseases, it is an excellent place to go. I was surprised to see consumptives who had had hemorrhages there and improving. The altitude, over 7,000 feet, I should fear was too trying; still, if they do not exert themselves much, take the baths and drink the water, they will doubtless continue to improve.

The rare air doubtless aids rapid healing of diseased surfaces. Some had been there before, went back East, were worse, and returned to remain. Recovery the second time is not so rapid as at first, showing that going East was a mistake. This is a fact that people are slow to learn.

Santa Fe was my next stop. This is a quaint old town of some 7,000 people. One forgets himself among the many things of interest here, which fact alone would be helpful in many cases of consumption.

It is situated in a valley opening and widening to the south, with mountains east and west, and broken peaks to the south. It was not hot, and can not be very hot in summer nor very cold in winter. This location is well ventilated, and at times may be too raw and severe for the very feeble. The altitude is 7,000 feet, and the air very stimulating. The hotel accommodations are good, and the people most hospitable.

I was greatly entertained when my errand became known. It is the capital city, and the governor, judges, merchants, editors, and physicians vied with each other to show me all the special merits of the city and Territory as a health resort.

The old Government military reservation with fort and barracks in the center of the city they hope to have set aside for a national sanitarium. It would make an excellent one. I was feasted with the finest fruits I ever tasted, apricots, peaches, apples, etc. There are some fine springs, and the Santa Fe River seems ample for irrigation as well as to supply the city.

Albuquerque was my next point. The country between this place and Santa Fe seemed to me favorable for invalids.

The valley here is wide and well watered by the Rio Grande, which is a broad, shallow river, and the fall is ample for effective irrigation. On the river bottom are good crops and rank vegetation. The best place for consumptives here is on the mesa. I met here many consumptives, some improving, some holding their own. Most of the people I met came for their health. The necessity for being active and out of doors to get the benefit of the climate, was the testimony of nearly all of the physicians.

The Commercial Club entertained me, and I was driven out to the springs and to Camp Whitcomb over the mountains. Camp Whitcomb is a good place for resort during the very hot days of summer. The water mostly used is melted ice, manufactured in this city. This is an active, bustling place. It is 2,000 feet lower than Santa Fe, and hence warmer. The railroad divides here, one line goes to California and the other down the valley and on to Mexico. Invalids who must go on to California, I learned, stop here to advantage.

I recommend that consumptives sent here or to any other point should as soon as possible be distributed among cottages, with a nice plot of ground to occupy their time and attention.

El Paso.—The most southerly point I visited in the Rio Grande Valley was El Paso. It is a city of about 10,000 people and is situated at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, where the Rio Grande cuts through on its way to the Gulf.

The valley here is not very wide. It was very hot the day I was there, and, except for the winds that I fear must sweep through in winter, will be a good point for consumptives. The altitude is 3,900 feet, the lowest point, I believe, in New Mexico. I ascertained from the physicians that the city was very healthy. The accommodations are good.

Las Cruces was a place of which I expected much. I met Dr. Petin and was entertained by Prof. Hadley, president of the Agricultural College, which is located here, affording free tuition. We went over the Organ Mountain, where Dr. Petin had selected a place for a sanitarium, but before he could secure the land squatters had taken possession. It certainly was a nice, secluded, fertile valley, and its only drawback is that it is 25 miles from the railroad. This is a town of some 3,000 people, half of whom are Mexicans. I saw here large flocks of Angora goats, which are very profitable, I was told. The altitude is about 4,000 feet. The valley is wide here and very fertile when irrigated. Dr. Petin thinks that it will equal France as a grape country; it produces the finest grapes I ever saw. His opinion of it as a health resort is that it is the best in the world. The low altitude, the southern latitude, and the dry, warm winds coming from Mexico, are its special features, adapting it to severe cases of consumption. As a winter resort it has special advantages for feeble invalids, but the accommodations are not very extensive. The water here is good. I also met here Dr. Frazier, of Toronto, and Judge Newcombe, formerly of Nova Scotia.

San Marcial was my last stop on my return to the Rio Grande Valley. It is a small town and has an old, abandoned fort and military reservation that would make a good sanitarium, but I learned that a man had laid claim to it. This is also a good point for fruit and herds.

There are many other small towns in the Rio Grande Valley that I did not stop at, but all have the general merit of being warm and dry, which will commend them as good points for consumptive colonies.

I think that New Mexico surpasses any locality for consumptives I have yet visited, and I have been all over California, Colorado, and the South, Sandwich Islands, and Europe.

I stopped off at Cimarron and Hutchinson, Kans. They are both in a comparatively dry section, and the lower altitude renders this a good intermediate point to get acclimated and to test the climate before going to higher altitudes; therefore the merits of Southwest Kansas, with its medium altitude, should not be overlooked by the profession.

In conclusion, I am decidedly of the opinion that the region visited is for consumptives superior to any other part of the United States or the world of which I have any practical knowledge.

I will next quote from Dr. W. P. Roberts, his views being found in a communication to the Health Journal. Dr. Roberts is now traveling through New England, interesting the medical profession in the work of the Health Resort Association, and is about to organize an aid society in Boston for the purpose of securing funds to send indigent consumptives to a more favored clime. Dr. Roberts writes as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., September 20, 1891.
To the American Health Resort Association:

Pursuant to the appointment as Special Commissioner by your honored President, I visited Kansas, Colorado, and New Mexico, going as far South as El Paso, Texas, and across the river into Old Mexico, and beg leave to present the following report:

Allow me to premise that I had to leave Maine on account of consumption that was a family inheritance. I was given up by five physicians to die with the awful scourge that carries off almost 30 per cent of the whole people who die on that coast. I was advised to make a change of climate as affording a possible chance of prolonging my life. I reached the upland prairies of Illinois in the lovely autumn weather, and began to improve at once in the dry open air. I thought, like many others, that because I was almost well I could safely return, but the disease again became active and I was obliged to return, this time to the prairies of Iowa. I fully recovered and have had no trouble with my lungs since; but, while vigorous looking, I feel I am not the man I would have been had I come West sooner, while in my growing teens. Therefore I am anxious to urge young people whose parents succumbed to consumption to leave New England.

In going to Denver we cross the divide beyond Colorado Springs. The streams here flow northeast. This north and east exposure has been against Denver as being a desirable residence for consumptives. Many, however, have been benefited and many have died as I found by the mortality records. There is a feeling that the air at times is being contaminated by the smoke and gases from the massive smelting works, containing, as they do, volatilized galena (lead), arsenic, antimony, etc., although an effort is being made to condense these from the smoke, as is done in other smelters. The same objection is increasing against Pueblo and El Paso. I collected much valuable data for our association.

Colorado Springs (a city without a single spring) is more favorably located. I collected here facts of interest from the mortality records and the leading members of the medical profession. This is without question the best point in this section of Colorado for consumption. I learned that pneumonia was often prevalent, severe, and fatal. Their most disagreeable weather is during March and April. Sufferers with pulmonary hemorrhage, unless complicated with organic heart disease, need not feel barred from going to any of these cities.

I found, in searching the mortality records of Colorado Springs, that a few cases of young and middle-aged persons raised in that climate had died from consumption.

Pueblo is several degrees warmer than either of the other cities visited. In fact, it was hotter than any place in New Mexico when I was there. Except for the smelters already noticed, it is a good health point for those with weak lungs. I met many people who were given up as hopeless in Chicago and other Eastern cities, but who are now well. I have no doubt that a few miles away from this city, in a lower altitude, is the "Beulah land" of Colorado for those with weak lungs.

At La Junta, in the extreme eastern border of Colorado, I met several witnesses who were willing to swear that the climate would cure them. Singular testimony is at hand in Trinidad, and, in fact, in all of the places in Colorado I visited. What a golden, glorious health record for the Centennial State!

The Raton Spur of the Rocky Mountains is crossed by plunging through a long tunnel. Here I was informed asthmatics, no matter how severe, lose their difficult breathing as they emerge into the pure air of New Mexico. From Raton, which is quite a town, to Las Vegas, there is a gradual descent. Here is the famous Maxwell grant, where are vast herds of cattle. Irrigation is making it productive. In this section many a consumptive young man years ago got well while "roughing it" as a "cowboy." It is high (6,500 feet), warm, and dry—too dry, perhaps, and dusty.

Las Vegas and the hot springs are both a curiosity and a revelation. It is a surprise to find such an elegant hotel among the mountains, and hot and cold springs side by side. One can get all sorts of baths. I witnessed a mud bath. The bath, hot mud with the soft, hot mud, which is here strong and impregnated with valuable mineral ingredients, then thoroughly bathed or steamed, cooled, and wrapped to rest. Fresh mineral earth is at hand. The effect of this bath on certain skin affections is wonderful. The water shows many valuable ingredients. It is a Carlsbad, but it is also wonderfully strong in lithia. For rheumatism, syphilis, and skin diseases generally the waters have made wonderful cures. The Rocky Mountains here are broken, and the source of these springs suggests volcanoes and liquid available mineral ingredients of reliable medicinal value. The reputation of these waters extends back many years. There will be a great flock of visitors when they become better known.

Santa Fe I approached with dread on account of a weak, irritable heart that followed an injury to the spine some months ago, but was agreeably disappointed. I could breathe with greater ease and slept better than in any place visited.

I will not stop to describe my visit to this quaint old town of crooked streets, adobe palaces, small fruitful gardens, and wonderful buildings, especially the oldest assembly hall, decorated with ancient war weapons; nor my reception by Governor Prince and many citizens; nor how I was feasted with the choicest of fruits (apples, peaches, apricots, pears, small fruits, etc.).

My stay was most pleasant, and I did not see an insect or reptile to render the life of the most helpless invalid a burden. The altitude of this city is about 7,000 feet; it is sunny and warm, with cool nights. The air is very dry. The rainfall is only about 14 inches, or one-fourth of that of my old New England home. The mountains surround it on all sides, and hence the air is very free from dust and must contain much ozone. The summer is very pleasant. In the winter it may be trying for the very feeble, but I saw many cases cured, and the mortality is very low.

At Albuquerque we are in a lively, flourishing city, with a most delectable climate, on the mesa. On the river bottom the doctors informed me that they sometimes have intermittent fever to deal with, especially below the irrigating ditches. The roads are fine after getting on the mesa leading into the mountains, where are springs of pure water and soda springs. Here can be taken desert claims (320 acres), and in the mountains mining claims. I was shown many people who came for their health. It certainly is a good point for consumptives.

We pass on to Las Cruces, another Mexican town, where the finest grapes are raised. A 20-mile ride over the pass of the Organ Mountains, we come to the spot selected by Dr. Pettin for a sanitarium. The road is not a difficult one and the air most invigorating. At a ranch affording all the comforts of civilization we spent the night. The young ladies, who have been here sixteen years, are models of health. At the foot of the mountain are many springs and a natural bathtub worn out of the rock. Here is a most desirable place for a sanitarium.

El Paso is the "alopolis" of the Southwest—a great business center. The climate is fine, and a sheltered location on the east slope among the foothills promises to be a good retreat for invalids.

As to the climate of Southwestern Kansas and Eastern Colorado, I submit that it will be preferable for a certain class of cases, such as incipient phthisis, with organic heart trouble and catarrhal complications.

To sum up all my observations, from South to North, we have in Western Texas, all of New Mexico, part of Arizona, Southeastern Colorado, and Southwestern Kansas, especially the high ridge upon which the Arkansas flows, the health-giving climate in latitude, longitude, and altitude possessed by no other scope upon the earth. This whole section is equal to supporting the present population of the United States. That this is the sanitarium section of this country, especially for persons with weak lungs, let those who doubt my statements go see for themselves, and become convinced.

The next witness I will call in this interesting discussion is Dr. Frederick W. Seward, of Goshen, N. Y., who seems to have had exceptional opportunities for making an intelligent investigation. Dr. Seward says:

To the American Health Resort Association:

Agreeable to your instructions the writer visited Western Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Western Texas, and herewith submits his report upon the climatic conditions of the same.

Passing westward beyond a line drawn through Kansas at its center from north to south we leave the rain belt and reach the eastern boundary of the dry or arid region, which extends westward to within a few miles of the Pacific coast, within this arid region a marked difference in soil and conditions of the atmosphere prevail from South to North.

The soil of the prairie section is dry, porous, and impregnated largely in places with alkaline matter.

Limestone and sandstone are underlying rock foundations in most of Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico, while in New Mexico and Arizona volcanic rock is also abundant. From the character of the rock foundations, the soil, and the extreme dryness and purity of the atmosphere, it is evident no acid or noxious gaseous emanations prejudicial to health can arise from the earth's surface.

Atmospheric conditions are much the same in their chief characteristics in all this region, differing mainly as to the temperature in different latitudes and at different altitudes. These, however, are of great importance, bearing upon the invalid. The summer season is admirable in all parts of the West except in the extreme southern portion of New Mexico. North of New Mexico the winter months are objectionable and not well suited to the sensitive invalid. Take it all in all, New Mexico offers the best climatic conditions throughout the year of any of the continent. The soil, as has been stated, is dry and porous, yet, as a rule, well covered with grass, sandy wastes being infrequently found.

The air is dry and pure. Dry because the rainfall is lower than in any other portion of the country of equal altitude, from 12 to 18 inches; and again, because the precipitation is very rapid when it occurs, being principally in the form of showers, and the relative humidity is extremely small.

Dry again because of the inventory of the sun's rays and absence of cloudiness. From tables compiled from observations taken at various Government posts during a long series of years, we find the following conditions to obtain at points widely separated and which give accurate knowledge as to their principal climatic attributes:

	Cedar Keys.				Santa Fe.				San Diego.
	Spring.	Summer.	Autumn.	Winter.	Spring.	Summer.	Autumn.	Winter.	Spring.	Summer.	Autumn.	Winter.

Precipitation (inches).....	29				44				12

From the foregoing it will be observed there is a marked difference in absolute humidity between Santa Fe and El Paso on the one hand, and the other four stations on the other. Also in the former the rainfall is largely during the summer months, occurring as before stated in showers, while in San Diego three-fourths of the precipitation occurs during the winter months, and in the three remaining stations is about evenly distributed among the four seasons. In explanation, the wide difference in percentage of absolute humidity and precipitation at San Diego is due to altitude, sea-level air carrying much more moisture without precipitation necessarily occurring.

By the physician climatologist it is to be studied from the hygienic rather than the therapeutic standpoint, and the effort to do the latter has probably given rise to much of the misinformation upon the subject, and is responsible for much of the disappointment resulting from changes made by invalids, acting under advice given from false premises. Those attributes of climate which tend to the preservation in its integrity of organic life, or to the restoration of vital energies, if impaired, and which have become well recognized as essential to this end, are:

Dryness of air; dryness of soil; abundant sunshine; intensity of sun's rays; purity of atmosphere; altitudes of 3,000 to 9,000 feet; diminished air pressure; absence of noxious gaseous emanations; absence of long-continued extremes of temperature.

The above attributes give rise to another condition which to my mind is of importance and deserving of further study. I refer to the increased electric tension of the body, which is experienced in dry atmospheres. Lessened induction of electric fluid gives rise to a more positive state of the body. A positive state is one of energy, functional activity, and, consequently, of increased nutrition and strength. It has been demonstrated within a comparatively recent date that men employed about electrical works, and particularly on electric street cars, or where there is a large induction of electric fluid, have experienced immunity in a large degree from chronic ailments.

The atmosphere immediately about them is heavily charged with electricity, hence that within does not flow from them. "Virtue" has not gone out of them. It is a question if the enervation we experience from warm, damp weather is not largely due to the rapid outflow of electric current, or, in other words, to a more negative state of the system. Contrast with this enervation the stimulating influence of a cold, clear, crisp atmosphere, where the humidity is congealed and the air becomes a less perfect conductor. In studying the climatology of our country from this standpoint, and admitting the value of the above-mentioned attributes, as we must, I am ready to affirm that in no other section will the perfection of these be so nearly found, or approached, as in New Mexico. With rare exceptions these attributes are to be sought for in the selection of a climatic change for the invalid. It is a common error to suppose that an even temperature is more conducive to health than frequent changes. Extreme changes, I admit, are not well borne by the invalid, but these are not the rule in the arid region, except at points contiguous to the snow-capped mountain peaks. While an even temperature means a moist atmosphere, long-continued extremes of temperature exhaust the system, and herein lies the explanation of the unfavorable effects of the climatic influences of the health resorts of the South at sea-level altitudes, and at the North, in regions of continued cold, such as Minnesota. In the North, which is much dryer than in the South, the long extremely cold winter saps the vitality of the invalid and he sinks under the exhaustion. In the South he dies, not from inability to keep up the waste from rapid combustion, but from inability to supply compensation for, or stay the rapid disorganization of, lung tissue, which is augmented by the moist, warm air.

The consumptive in the South dies easily but very rapidly. In New Mexico the days are warm, but not oppressively so, while the nights are always cool. There being no dews the night air is never damp nor in the least injurious. One can sleep on the ground with no haunting dread of rheumatic pains or lameness on awaking. An actual observation demonstrates the fact that this applies as well to the invalid as to the robust individual.

On this point of "variability vs. equability" I wish to quote Dr. Denison, of Denver, a recognized authority. He proves "by comparing twenty-five dry and twenty-five moist prominent stations and health resorts in the United States, and the fifteen moist and the fifteen least variable signal stations in the United States for 1883, how uniformly variability goes with dryness and equability with moisture.

Variability is quite a uniform constituent of dry, high climates, and that as the dryness predominates, the marked variability is less felt, and is less, if at all, objectionable. On the other hand, marked atmospheric equability, wherever found, is prima facie evidence of excessive humidity. It is too easy to fall into the mistakes of medical antiquity for equability to be any longer insisted on as a constituent of the best climate for phthisis. It is all right and essential for humid climates, but for dry, cold, and elevated resorts it is out of the question.

Besides the quality of stimulation which is associated with variability, there is an important consideration in the purifying of the atmosphere, which variability indicates. This happens through the alternate expansion by heat and contraction of the air by cold, together with the nightly chilling and sometimes freezing, which regularly renders it inimical to germ life. The purity of atmosphere which is represented by warm, moist, and equable climates, is not to be compared with that purity which is represented by the opposite attributes. The first is where the temperature so continuously hovers within the limits of the microbe's needs, where sound as well as heat is smothered in a short distance, and the sun's rays give a dusky red glow.

The second, indicating a comparative absence of germs, is where food, meat can cure and not spoil; where far-distant objects appear near and the unobstructed rays of the sun give nearly as white a light as does an electric lamp. These characteristics of high climates New Mexico has to the full in common with other places. In the Rocky Mountain region the clearness or transparency of the air is a decided indication of its purity. So a large area, having throughout a similar atmosphere, through which one can see most remarkable distances, and besides probably be deceived as regards the same must indicate as does its coldness, rarefaction, and dryness, that the purity is approaching the absolute.

This purity of air, dryness of soil, and warm but not oppressive days, together with intense but genial sunshine, has the desired effect to keep the invalid in the open air constantly—one of the most essential points in the treatment of the chronic invalid.

Be the cause of consumption what it may, whether as Koch and Cornet contend, always due to contagium, or as others assert, to heredity, the truth is, depreciation of vitality from whatever cause has a direct and positive bearing upon its development within the human organism.

Those characteristics of climate, then, as before stated, which tend in the largest degree to the building up of the depreciated system, offer the most positive assurances of relief from the existing disabilities.

This is not a matter of theory. One has but to visit most any section of the arid region of our country to find ample confirmation of the statement. So rapid has been the development throughout all this section that thousands of settlers, the majority of whom were doomed to chronic invalidism in the East and South, are to-day living examples of the beneficial effects of the climate.

From weaklings they have been made strong; from a condition of helplessness they have been transformed into beings of power; from a life of discomfort and wretchedness they have been issued into the blessed sunshine of healthfulness, contentment, and thrift.

Also, in further confirmation, we have but to glance at the death rate from consumption in different States:

Vermont, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island—25 in 100.
Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, New Jersey, New York—20 in 100.

Maryland, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Washington—16 in 100.

California, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Wisconsin—14 in 100.
Dakota, Iowa, Oregon, Tennessee, Virginia—12 in 100.

Illinois—11 in 100.

Nebraska, Missouri, Montana—9 in 100.

Colorado, Kansas, Louisiana, North Carolina—8 in 100.

Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Utah—6 in 100.

Arkansas, South Carolina, Texas—5 in 100.

New Mexico—3 in 100.

It must not be supposed the remarkably low death rate in New Mexico is due to imperfect or too brief observations. We have abundant and reliable testimony to the contrary, and the bearing of all this testimony is emphatically in favor of New Mexico as a resort for the consumptive; but it is not the consumptive alone who is warranted in seeking this genial climate with the expectation of finding relief from his sufferings.

The writer has personal knowledge and experience as to its wonderful invigorating effects upon the subject of nervous prostration, or "Americanitis," as it has been aptly termed. That state of the system which results from overtaxation, and which has become so common in our day by reason of the severe strain put upon us in the endeavor to keep pace with the demands of business and social duties, and which state, by reason of its extreme prostration, so surely invites the development of any latent or hereditary form of diseases.

Malnutrition and insomnia are the prominent features of such cases, and their prolongation must inevitably result in a fatal termination.

However, under the stimulating effects of such climatic conditions as are found in New Mexico, enabling the invalid to be much in the open air and basking in the genial warmth and vivifying influence of the sunshine, the dormant or suppressed functions of digestion or assimilation are awakened and called into a new activity; the blood, freighted with normal cell-producing material, is sent coursing through the tissues of the body, and repair instead of waste becomes the order of the hour. Then the starved nerves, satisfied with their new diet, as the hungry man with his meat, go to rest and give sweet sleep, the chief of all restorers, to the wearied and diseased brain and body. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, scrofula in all its forms, in short all conditions of heredity or of malnutrition are favorably impressed here.

The subject of organic heart disease should not be sent to an altitude of more than 1,500 feet or thereabout, and the consumptive whose normal breathing capacity has become impaired to the extent of 50 per cent should not go beyond an altitude of 2,500 feet at first.

The hemorrhagic may be sent with advantage to 5,000 or 7,000 feet at once. The opinion that diminished air pressure contraindicates high altitudes has been abundantly disproved by actual experience. Rather high altitude is now regarded as a reliable preventive.

While perhaps enough has already been given to show the advantages that the Rocky Mountain region offers for those suffering from weak lungs, I can not refrain from incorporating an exceedingly interesting paper received a few days ago from Dr. George M. Kellogg, of East Las Vegas, N. Mex. The only hesitancy I feel in giving this paper, is that it relates wholly to New Mexico, and the fear that so much testimony in behalf of that Territory may arouse the suspicion that the case is prejudged. Such is not the fact. If the Commission is appointed a thorough examination will be made of every available place, and the decision reached will be upon the best obtainable information. In sending his contribution Dr. Kellogg writes as follows:

EAST LAS VEGAS, N. MEX., March 29, 1902.

DEAR SIR: People of this Territory have remarked with interest that you have introduced a bill into the Senate concerning the sanitary claims of the Rocky Mountain country. Much has been published on this subject, written by tourists who interviewed the country only from a car window, but I have been moved to give you the views and observations of a physician, based on several years of experience and the study of climatology throughout the length and breadth of the Territory. If there is any matter in the paper that you may wish to make use of you may depend upon it as reliable, justified by observation, careful statistics, and by human history.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE M. KELLOGG, M. D.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER.

Dr. Kellogg's theme is "New Mexico as a health resort," of which he writes in the following entertaining and instructive way:

The Rocky Mountain region, especially the mountains and upland plains of New Mexico, is a land lifted by nature into the pure serene, for the general invigoration of the race.

New Mexico, with a portion of Arizona belonging to the Rocky Mountain crest, and its eastern slope, has, perhaps, the most equable climate known. There are no extremes of winter-cold or of summer-heat while there is a notable absence of dampness in air and earth. Little moisture is left for this region after the hot winds of the Southern Pacific are wrung dry by the coast ranges. The elevation of this country—from four to eight thousand feet—is just sufficient to mitigate that oppressiveness from summer heat which otherwise would be seriously felt in these latitudes from 37° to 32°. The winter months throughout this region, owing to the ever-present sunshine and the positive shelter of the mountains themselves, afford the most satisfactory retreats yet proposed for invalids.

The purity of the air is shown in the absence of atmospheric dust and disease germs. Its notable clearness over the plains has been remarked for many years. Objects are distinctly visible miles away, which in the average atmosphere would be hidden by fog and dust.

With a sun visible nearly every day in the year, and often for months without a cloud-fleck to obstruct its direct rays, the sun heat is yet really grateful instead of oppressive. The native, when enfeebled by illness or age, basks in the sun. It is the best medicine that he knows. It renews his youth by quickening life at its springs.

The invalid and valetudinarian feels at once this mild stimulus. Simply to breathe the air seems a luxury and a delight.

A noted peculiarity of this upland country is the coolness of the nights even in the extremes of summer. The earth, heated by the continuous sunshine, freely radiates at night its surplus, there being no blanketing clouds to confine or intercept. Uninterrupted and balmy sleep is thus insured, bringing healing upon its wings; while the absence of noxious insects to torture is an additional security.

It is certain that change of climate as a curative measure, promising though it be, requires means in abundance to secure its best effects. But as though nature were willing to bestow her best resources on the poor as well as the rich, the benefit of this climate is open to all at a minimum of cost. The least expensive structures afford ample shelter and security at all seasons.

Nourishing food can be obtained on the average at its cost in our great population-centers; fuel, too, is largely unnecessary where the sun's largess is ever-present and grateful.

Not to mention the beautiful and abundant building stones the Mexican adobe houses of sun-burnt brick are delightfully cool in summer and warm in winter. These may be built of materials at hand, or, by larger outlays, can be made as luxurious as could be desired. Along the leading routes of travel such might be conveniently located, and nowhere be more than an hour away from skilled physicians and needed supplies.

While the elevations of New Mexico, from four to eight thousand feet, pos-ness the same essential climatic features, each altitude has some special desirable quality.

The plains are more uniformly dry and their winters less rigorous than in or near the mountains. In all these sections the atmosphere has the characteristic clearness, save for occasional dust storms.

The mountains catch the greater part of the rain and snow and furnish the chief water courses and supplies for irrigation in the Territory.

The summer rains, from the middle of July to September, are chiefly observed in the mountains and are quite transient. In the plains these are uncommon and there is an almost entire absence of dew.

Nature, as though to confound the wise, shows vegetable life in hundreds of native species, flourishing on the plains with wondrous healthfulness—unvisited by that mold or fungus so conspicuously inimical to plant life in damp regions. The cryptogamous plant world, which elsewhere sends its spores and disease-producing germs across the world, is almost unrepresented in the dry plains and mountains. Fungi, mosses, ferns, lichens, and liverworts, which thrive so signally in the damp and dark, find small encouragement in the Sunshine State.

The experiments of Tyndall to demonstrate the purity of the atmosphere in the Alpine glaciers can be repeated even in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, at an elevation of from four to seven thousand feet. On the plains, at four to five thousand feet, putrescence is almost impossible. The ordinary ranchman knows that he may with impunity hang his venison or beef under a tree or shed for weeks, even in summer.

The manifold vermin of the infusorial and of the insect world are not tempted to climb or fly to this region from their eastern homes.

Most men believe that in the general upbuilding and economy of the earth "some steadfast purpose runs." Have not these mountains been pushed up in accordance with a plan which involves the general good of being?

The genius of modern civilization may be maritime, but that of the most ancient periods certainly was not. The early home of the Caucasian race was in the uplands of Asia. The shepherds on the oriental mountains studied and named the stars ages before the first frail shallop was launched from the shore. The early Phœnician navigator had learned elsewhere to trust the stars before he ventured himself and fortunes on the waves.

The Aztec and Peruvian civilization originated in the mountains and plains of the western continent. It may well be, then, that those influences which led men to cultivate religion, art, and science in the early period still remain as an earth heritage to future mountain dwellers.

History in certain broad senses repeats itself. It is at least certain that nature has upreared these mountains in order to diversify the conditions of mankind, to vary their industries, their resources, and character. The physical well-being of the race, as well as its moral and intellectual nature, may here again find its highest expression. It is certainly possible for such as can not have the privilege in crowded and stifled cities to live clean and healthful lives in the mountains.

Even in the most prolonged summer heats sunstroke is unknown in New Mexico. Diseases associated with malaria are excessively rare. Acute rheumatism, pleurisy, and pneumonia seem incident only to special and unnecessary exposures to cold night air and subterranean damp, peculiar to a miner's or cowboy's life. The diseases for which the mountain climate may be claimed as a prophylactic are, first, those deadly disorders of infancy, "summer complaint" and cholera infantum. Abdominal disorders are rare. Typhoid and typhus fever are but feebly represented by the dreaded "mountain fever," which is neither so deadly nor so common as those diseases in the East.

There are some neuroses, like chorea, which seem to be aggravated in this country. On the plains, however, neuralgic disorders, with due avoidance of night air, are, as a rule, benefited. But of all diseases incident to humanity, lung troubles, like tubercular consumption, bronchial consumption, and asthma, are the most uncommon among the native population.

Invalids with lung diseases seem to be greatly relieved and often positively cured.

It is almost certain that where there is simple tuberculous cachexia the mountain climate will eradicate it. It is only in the late stages of phthisis that improvement is not at once experienced on change to New Mexico. Bronchitis and asthma are generally greatly relieved and are often cured by simple residence. But where the lungs are riddled by disease and tied down by adhesions the very rarity of the atmosphere becomes a disadvantage.

The striking feature of the mountain country is the diathermancy of the air. Less heat is absorbed by the atmosphere than in the lowlands; this obviates, in great measure, the oppressiveness of the air. Moreover, there is on this account an immediate and great difference between temperatures in sunshine and in the shade.

This difference has been calculated as 1° Fahrenheit for every 230 feet of vertical ascent. This gives for elevations of 6,000 feet above 20° Fahrenheit difference. But the effect on the sunshine of the absence of aqueous vapor in overcoming its direct depressing influence is something for which there is no accurate measure. Perhaps at the crest of the continent there is an electric or other earth aura which ameliorates the sunshine and causes it to invigorate and quicken the pulses of life.

Statistics have proved that the West India Islands and all the shores of our Gulf States are unfavorable for most lung diseases and rheumatic fevers. They are known also as hot-beds of malaria and of abdominal disorders generally. The same is true of the climate of India.

The boasted climate of Nice and Mentone, save for a short period of the year, is found a signal failure. This is true of all the islands and shores of the Mediterranean. Except the parched land of Egypt, no region has been admitted by English authorities as especially favorable for lung troubles. The exception is probably due to the dry though hot atmosphere. Egypt is, however, the home of the plague, cholera, of abdominal diseases, of ophthalmia, and a thousand discomforts.

Great Britain in her ambition to possess the earth has accomplished one important matter at least, though at great expense of life and treasure. She has tested many climates by means of her army. Her published health and death rolls have established the extreme unhealthfulness of Gibraltar, of the islands and shores of the Mediterranean, of the Black Sea, of India, China, the valley of the Nile, the West Indies, Central America, and Demarara, Canada, Australia, and her own foggy shores have given the best returns of salubrity as shown in England's army reports—a sad record at best.

The Kirghese steppes, near the Caspian Sea, though below the sea level, owing to its extreme dry air, has been observed, as in the valley of the Nile, to be favorable for tuberculous disease.

In the elevated plains of Persia and Armenia, at elevations of from six to seven thousand feet, phthisis is much benefited.

In the Alps, at St. Moritz on the river Inn, in the valley of the Upper Engadine are spas and winter cures, where some happy results have been experienced, despite harsh air and inclemency. Davos at an elevation of 5,300 feet has, of late, been much lauded as a health resort for consumptives.

The elevated plateau of Anahuac, in Mexico, has borne for several centuries a reputation for salubrity. The plain of Quito, though directly under the equator, at an elevation of 9,000 feet, has a well-established claim for general healthfulness, as have Montana and Potosí, at still greater elevations.

New Mexico, with its clear, dry air, affords a great contrast to many mountain regions, particularly to the Alps. These, placed between near and sharply-contrasted seas, the superheated Mediterranean, the fierce, cold Baltic, and the storm-swept Atlantic, have ever been the cradle of storms and climatic excess. The mountain tops are eternally capped with snow and glaciers; their low valleys are hotbeds of miasm and dampness, where consumption and cretinism prevail.

The cold sides of the Alps are to-day, however, lined with hotels and pensions for invalids, who try to imagine themselves benefited by gazing on ice-clad peaks and mountain torrents.

There is this to proclaim, and it is of higher importance than the story of lands of matchless fertility, or of hills seamed through with precious metals, in the Rocky Mountains there is an area of 1,000 miles by 300, with a climate the most serene and invigorating of all that have been tested or in any proper sense demonstrated.

In pursuing my investigations on this subject the fact has been developed that one of the earliest and most intelligent advocates of a national sanitarium was Dr. W. Thornton Parker, of Beverly, Mass. Dr. Parker was for a considerable period a United States army surgeon at White Earth Indian Reservation, Minn., and subsequently was stationed in Texas, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory. Dr. Parker made a special study of lung diseases and climatology and has written much on the subject, both for the newspaper press and magazines, an article from his pen appearing in Treat's Manual for 1891. At the Ninth International Medical Congress Dr. Parker read a paper in which he said:

If there be any class of sufferers who have endured more from many physicians, that class comes under the head of consumptives. Dragged about the world from the ice mountains of Switzerland to the swamps of Florida dosed with nauseating cod-liver oil and countless medicines more or less debilitating, tormented with the outrageous Bergen's method, then hoping that oxygen inhalation would be the thing; shut up in cabinets, nearly baked to death in ovens; surely the record is a pitiful one.

This physician scouts the Koch method as only another installment of torture and delusive hope for the consumptive, and urges as a substitute for all of these things the "climate cure," which, he asserts, can be found in the great plains of Colorado and New Mexico. There, he says, can be found "pure and life-giving sunshine, the rational cure for consumption."

Dr. Parker points out the fact that England has given this method of cure a fair trial with satisfactory results. The Government, some years ago, located for this purpose a consumptive's hospital at St. Lawrence, Isle of Wight. The hospital is built on the separate-cottage plan, no communication existing between the houses except by a subway running from end to end, by which each house is supplied direct from the kitchen. After citing the methods practiced at this retreat and commenting upon their beneficial results to this class of patients, Dr. Parker urges upon the United States Government the propriety of establishing a national sanitarium in our great Western health section.

With the mass of testimony above given little need be added to show the desirability of the legislation proposed. It matters little whether or not consumption is contagious—a view firmly held by a large majority of educated American physicians—the startling fact remains that it is a fearful destroyer of human life. Whether the disease is always hereditary, or whether the bacteria of tuberculosis, the identity of which the microscope of the medical scientist has established, can be communicated from patient to attendant, consumption is a tremendous fact, and the Government can well afford to make a liberal outlay to lessen its ravages and stay its deadly work.

With a death rate of 25 per cent in New England from this disease, of 20 per cent in the Middle States and at the capital of the nation, and a gradual reduction until it reaches 3 per cent in New Mexico, it surely is the dictate of wisdom for the Government to lend its aid in the beneficent work contemplated by the legislation under consideration. Private individuals have done much and will do more, but private means are not sufficient to accomplish the best results. The aid of the National Government, intelligently administered and economically used, will inspire the heart and nerve the arm of those now engaged in this blessed work, and from all over our land, from the homes of despondency and distress, prayers of thanksgiving will be offered for help that may save life and restore to robust manhood and womanhood those who are now battling with inherited disease under adverse and unequal conditions.

After all, the highest and noblest purposes of government are to secure the happiness and prosperity of the people, and surely no legislation can be thought of that promises so much for the well-being of a large class of our citizens as that for which I plead. All over our land the Macedonian cry is heard, and with anxious heart and earnest hope the stricken ones plead for national sympathy and national help. Surely that cry will not go unheeded; surely that help will not be withheld.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to what committee his joint resolution has been referred?

Mr. GALLINGER. The joint resolution has not yet been referred. I presume the Senator from Oregon thinks that it should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know about that.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will make this suggestion. This joint resolution merely provides for a preliminary investigation, and I think it should go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases in the first instance. If the joint resolution should be reported back favorably and a bill formulated, that would probably go, I suppose, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be so referred in the absence of objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I merely wish to say that I heard some reference made by the Senator to a suitable location for the purpose proposed being secured before the public lands are all sold. I wish to suggest to the Senator what he probably already knows, that the President of the United States has the power to withdraw any part of the public domain from public sale, and to continue its withdrawal until Congress shall act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am obliged to the Senator for that suggestion. I had not thought of it at the time.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have taken up the joint resolution which is now on the Calendar, introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], providing for the election of United States Senators by the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 37) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of Senators by the people.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the text of the joint resolution may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read as soon as a copy of it can be procured.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the joint resolution is not at the Secretary's desk I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be done, in the absence of objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall become a part of the Constitution:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the people thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote.

"Electors for Senators in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, by resignation or otherwise, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

"At any election for Senator the person receiving the highest number of votes shall be held to be duly elected."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 12, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 11, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War for the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRIG FRIENDSHIP.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the French spoliation claims arising out of the seizure of the brig Friendship; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, for this week, on account of public duties ordered by the House.

To Mr. POWERS, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. WOLVERTON, for two days.

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

PIER AT MOUTH OF CHICAGO RIVER.

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being a bill (H. R. 4330) to repeal House resolution No. 104, first session, Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That House resolution No. 104, first session of the Fifty-first Congress, passed June 12, 1891, entitled "Joint resolution to permit the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to use a pier as petitioned by vessel-owners of Chicago, Ill.," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be some explanation of the bill, or at least that the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. GEARY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4330) to repeal House Resolution No. 104, first session, Fifty-first Congress, granting to the Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at the mouth of the Chicago River, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The growing needs of commerce have caused a revolution in the method of handling lake shipping and the transfer of freight upon the Great Lakes of this country. The transportation of lake freight at the present time being accomplished by steamships or tugs, with tows of from one to five barges.

The facility with which tows may be made up at this pier is very apparent, whereas if the pier was leased it would be necessary to secure tugs to tow the barges into the lake and make up the tow in unprotected waters and at great cost.

Remonstrances from vessel-owners, the Board of Trade of Chicago, and persons, firms, and corporations doing a large business in shipping and receiving grain, lumber, and general merchandise, protesting against the leasing of this pier have been so effective that up to the present time the Secretary of War has not leased said pier.

The provision that the license shall be a revocable one was perhaps intended to be a restriction in the interest of the Government, but it is well known that it is almost impossible for the Government to regain possession of valuable property or eject the tenant without great cost and vexatious delays.

The necessity for the repeal of the resolution by the passage of bill H. R. 4330 consists in the fact that a future administration, not conversant with all the details, might execute said lease without notice to interested parties and thereby greatly interfere with shipping interests centering in the port of Chicago.

The committee recommend that the bill (H. R. 4330) do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW] that this bill be now considered?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until I can hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. DURBOROW. This bill is to repeal a resolution passed in the Fifty-first Congress, giving the Secretary of War the right to lease a pier at the mouth of Chicago River. It was strongly protested against at the time and the lease has never been executed, and the repeal of the resolution is now petitioned for by a number of the largest vessel-owners, shippers, and forwarders of the city of Chicago, who have sent me two very strong petitions on the subject.

Mr. GEARY. I understand that the powers conferred under the joint resolution have never been exercised.

Mr. DURBOROW. They have not; but if the joint resolution is allowed to stand the remonstrants fear that the power may be exercised and the lease executed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I remember the case now very well, and I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURBOROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBPORT OF ENTRY, WEST POINT, VA.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That West Point, in said collection district, be, and hereby is, constituted a subport of entry in said collection district, and that a deputy collector and such other officers of the customs as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be appointed to reside at said subport, and that, subject to the supervision of the collector of customs at Richmond, the deputy collector at said subport is hereby authorized to enter and clear vessels, receive entries, collect duties, fees, and other moneys, and generally to perform the functions prescribed by law for collectors of customs.

SEC. 2. That the salary of the deputy collector at West Point shall be — per annum.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there is objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would explain the measure. As I gather from the reading from the desk, it proposes, in the first place, to leave the salary of this proposed customs officer blank; and, in the second place, unless some amendment is intended, it leaves an absolute, open, unrestricted power in the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint any number of officers there he pleases.

Mr. WISE. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is an amendment proposed by the committee, striking out the second section, which relates to the salary of the collector. We already have a customs officer at that point, and this bill will involve no additional expense whatever, as the report will show, if the gentleman will allow it to be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, we have been unable on this side of the Hall to hear the gentleman from Virginia, but I should like to know what necessity or reason there is for the establishment of this port of entry.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va., have considered the same and report:

West Point, Va., being the terminus of the Richmond and Danville system, and the head of navigation on the York River, is becoming an important point for the shipment of merchandise and the products of the farm to foreign countries.

The object of the proposed legislation is to enable the customs officer stationed at West Point to perform those duties which are now required to be performed at Richmond. The masters of vessels entering the port of West Point are now required to visit Richmond, which is distant 30 miles, to comply with the laws and regulations governing custom-houses. As the proposed legislation would involve no additional expense and would facilitate the movements of commerce, it is respectfully recommended that the bill be passed, the second section being omitted, as suggested in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication dated the 3d instant from your committee, with which was inclosed for an expression of my views thereon a copy of House bill No. 4004 (to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va.), and in reply to say that inasmuch as a customs officer is now stationed at West Point and that the establishment of that place as a port as proposed would involve no additional expense, there would seem to be no objection thereto. I would suggest, however, that section 2 of the bill, making provision for the salary of the deputy collector to be located at said port, be struck out.

Respectfully yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

HON. GEORGE D. WISE,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the Clerk read again the second section, the one proposed to be struck out.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was so much confusion during the reading, I ask that the whole bill be read again.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If this matter is going to take up so much time, I think I shall have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. WISE. This will only occupy a moment.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WISE. I wish it distinctly understood that the second section fixing the salary for this deputy collector has been struck out by the committee. There is no new officer to be appointed, because one is already there, as stated in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. My friend from Virginia [Mr. WISE] will observe on rereading the first section that it gives authority, as I have already stated, to appoint additional officers; and this is not remedied by striking out the second section. I ask the Clerk to read the beginning of the first section.

Mr. WISE. There is already an officer there.

The Clerk read as follows:

That West Point, in said collection district, be, and hereby is, constituted a subport of entry in said collection district, and that a deputy collector and such other officers of the customs as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be appointed to reside at said subport, etc.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, I suggest to my friend from Virginia that the phraseology of the first section should be changed so that instead of authorizing the appointment of new officers it shall simply authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail for the performance of this duty officers now in the service. That will obviate my objection.

Mr. WISE. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee, as I have already done several times, that there is already an officer at this place, and the letter from the Treasury Department so states. The object of the provision in the first section is simply to constitute this officer a deputy collector and enable him to perform duties as such. Without the provision contained in the bill he would not have authority to act as deputy collector.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to such a provision as that.

Mr. WISE. I assure my friend, and the letter from the Treasury Department so states, that if this bill be passed it will require the appointment of no additional officer for West Point.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then let us not give authority to make such an appointment.

Mr. WISE. The bill now gives no authority except to enable the officer now there to perform the duties of a deputy collector for that port.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman and I read the bill very differently. I do not know that the Secretary of the Treasury would exercise this authority if given; but it can not be doubted by any one who reads the bill that it does give the Secretary authority to appoint new officers in his discretion.

Mr. WISE. The bill was drawn in the Treasury Department by the Customs Division in accordance with law.

Mr. McMILLIN. We want it drawn here in such a way as not to create any new offices.

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to a change which will meet the gentleman's objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well. I suggest an amendment striking out the word "appointed" and inserting "designated from the officers now in the service."

Mr. WISE. Very well; I will accept that amendment. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on giving unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If consent be granted, it is with the understanding that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] shall be made.

Mr. WISE. I will accept that amendment.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out section 2 was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will please send up his amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. McMILLIN as follows:

In line 7, section 1, strike out "appointed" and insert "detailed from the officers now in the service."

Mr. WISE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] accepts the amendment. We want no authority given for the appointment of additional officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road," approved March 24, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, extended, revived, and declared to be in full force and effect from and after March 24, 1892. Section 12 of said act, which provides that said act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years from date of the approval thereof, shall be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which said bridge is required to be commenced shall be within two years from March 24, 1892, and the time within which it is required that said bridge be completed shall be within four years from the 24th day of March, 1892.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERMANN, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The corresponding House bill will be laid on the table in the absence of objection.

JOHN R. BLANKENSHIP.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1342) for the relief of John R. Blankenship.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I can not let everybody in this morning.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill. It is a mere confirmation of a homestead entry.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have been already asked by three gentlemen to let them in.

Mr. BLAND. If this leads to debate I will withdraw it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entry of Wallace Mefford, of lot numbered 1 of the northwest quarter of section numbered 30, in township numbered 31 north, of range numbered 9 west, of the fifth principal meridian, in Texas County, Mo., as shown by final receiver's receipt numbered 2476, on application numbered 5912, issued by George H. Crum, receiver of the United States land office at Ironton, Mo., on January 22, 1884, is hereby approved and confirmed, and the President will cause the patent to be issued thereon.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLAND, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXECUTION OF DECLARATIONS IN PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2713) in relation to the execution of declarations and other papers in pension claims.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I give notice that having given way for these requests on both sides of the House, I will be compelled to call for the regular order after this bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That declarations of pension claimants shall be made before a court of record, or before some officer thereof having custody of its seal, or before some officer who, under the laws of his State, city, or county, has authority to administer oaths for general purposes; and said officers are hereby fully authorized and empowered to administer and certify any oath or affirmation relating to any pension or application therefor: Provided, That where such declarations or other papers are executed before an officer authorized as above but not required by the laws of his State to have and use a seal to authenticate his official acts, he shall file in the Pension Bureau a certificate of his official character, showing his official signature and term of office, certified by a clerk of a court of record or other proper officer of the State as to the genuineness thereof; and when said certificate has been filed in the Bureau of Pensions his own certificate will be recognized during his term of office.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Pensions may accept declarations and other papers of claimants residing in foreign countries made before a United States minister or consul or other consular officer, or before some officer of the country duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes, and whose official character and signature shall be duly authenticated by the certificate of a United States minister or consul or other consular officer; and declarations in claims of Indians may be made before a United States Indian agent.

SEC. 3. That any and all declarations or affidavits now on file in the Pension Bureau which are considered informal by reason of not having been executed in conformity to the laws heretofore in force covering such, and in which it is shown or may be hereafter shown by proper evidence that the same were executed by and before an officer who was duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes at said date of execution, shall be accepted as formal as from date of filing such declarations or affidavits.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will ask that the report be read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the language of this report and especially the clause in the last section of the bill which provides for the repeal of all laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, I hope that the bill will be again read. The measure is a very important one, and my impression is that it is one that should pass, but is so important that it should be carefully considered before being allowed to go through under a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It seems to me that a matter of this importance can not be passed without consideration and debate, and I shall feel compelled—

Mr. RAINES. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will say that this bill has been carefully drawn by the law officers in the Pension Bureau, and is simply a modification of existing law. I can explain in a few moments so that I think the gentleman will see that the bill is entirely unobjectionable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow the bill to be again read.

Mr. RAINES. I did not know but that a brief explanation might avoid that necessity.

Mr. HOLMAN. For I do not think the last section ought to be adopted without understanding exactly what it proposes to do.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there is any discussion I must object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before a bill of this character goes through we ought to know something of what it is to accomplish.

Mr. PICKLER. Let the gentleman from New York have five minutes to explain the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. With the understanding that it is to be withdrawn if it creates discussion I will not object. Is that the understanding?

Mr. RAINES. I do not think it will lead to debate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If it does it will be withdrawn.

Mr. RAINES. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will certainly object to the consideration of the bill without a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will demand the regular order and that will settle the matter.

Mr. RAINES. Let me say to the gentleman that this involves the interests of a large number of soldiers—

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, there is too much in it to be considered in this way.

Mr. RAINES. It will not take five minutes. If it takes more time than that I will withdraw it.

Mr. KILGORE. But you undertake to cure defects in affidavits in pension cases.

Mr. RAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to give a brief explanation?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, go ahead.

Mr. RAINES. This bill probably involves the interest of some 30,000 to 40,000 soldiers who have filed their declarations, which have been improperly executed in the Pension Department in this particular, that is to say, that they have neglected to execute them before a court of record or a clerk having custody of its seal. This bill provides what we intended by the act of June, 1890, that is, to allow a man, where he files a new declaration, simply to get the certificate of the county clerk that the notary public or other officer before whom the paper is executed was authorized to take such an acknowledgment. And on filing that it cures the defect of the original declaration. Unless we do this, the man is now compelled in many cases to travel from 50 to 100 miles, more or less, to go before a county clerk and make an absolutely new declaration, which amounts to nothing except to identify the man.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, let me ask you, were the declarations to which you refer and which are intended to be cured by this bill taken before notaries public, and were seals used?

Mr. RAINES. They are taken before officers authorized to take acknowledgments and affidavits.

Mr. HEARD. In their respective States?

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] whether it changes for the future the method of certifying to these pension claims?

Mr. RAINES. It applies to all declarations in the future the provisions of the act of June, 1890, which authorized the declaration to be taken before any officer authorized to take an affidavit or acknowledgment, and in addition to that to attach the seal of the clerk that he is authorized to take that acknowledgment.

Mr. McMILLIN. It would authorize Indian agents to make these certificates.

Mr. RAINES. That does not change existing law at all. That is the old law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why are you reenacting old laws?

Mr. RAINES. That was included as a codification, by the officials at the Pension Office who drew this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is a codification of laws, then?

Mr. RAINES. The first three sections.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think a codification ought to have a little more consideration than this, and I will ask the gentleman to hold it until to-morrow, and I will look at it and see what the provisions of the bill are.

Mr. RAINES. I have been trying to get recognition for three weeks on this bill that affects some twenty or thirty thousand soldiers in the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not yield to any man in my desire to administer whatever is just to the soldier, but I will not consent to inconsiderate action on anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that after the reading of the Journal tomorrow this matter may come up in the same situation in which it now is.

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet given its consent to the consideration of the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, it be before the House in the same situation in which it is now.

Mr. RAINES. With that understanding I will withdraw it.

THE LATE HON. JAMES GILLESPIE.

Mr. GRADY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the old Presbyterian cemetery in Georgetown, D. C., has been sold to private parties, and the remains of persons interred therein are being removed therefrom; and

Whereas among the remains of persons interred in said cemetery are those of Hon. James Gillespie, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Carolina, who died on January 11, 1895: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be removed from the said cemetery the remains of the said James Gillespie and have the same reinterred in the Congressional Cemetery, in the District of Columbia, or in some other public cemetery located in said District.

Resolved, That the expenses incidental to the removal of and the reinterment of the said remains be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GRADY. I am informed that the expense will not be more than ten or fifteen dollars at the outside, and I hope there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECOMMITMENT OF A BILL.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on Military Affairs the joint resolution (H. Res. 97) to fill vacancies which occur in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this order will be made, recommitting the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the regular order the Speaker will submit some personal requests of members.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TURNER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROOKSHIRE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw the demand for the regular order until I can submit a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, non-concurring in the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill, and asking a conference.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If it takes any time I shall have to object.

Mr. PEEL. It will take no time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] submits a report on a bill the title of which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report the bill back to the House with nonconcurrence in the Senate amendments and to ask that the report be adopted, that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will ask if this is unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. PEEL. It is unanimously reported from the committee.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, have these amendments been considered in the Committee of the Whole in the House?

Mr. PEEL. No.

Mr. BURROWS. I think I shall object. The amendments ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEEL. None of them are very material. There are a good many amendments, but most of them are small.

Mr. BURROWS. I think for the present I will object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT GAY HEAD, MASS.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1631) to establish a life-saving station at Gay Head, on the coast of Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TELEPHONE LINE FROM CAPE CHARLES TO ASSATEAGUE ISLAND, VA.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 7727) to authorize the construction of a telephone line on the coast of Virginia from Cape Charles to Assateague Island, in aid of the preservation of life and property; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and concluded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the concurrent resolution "providing for the printing of the eighth and ninth annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1891 and 1892."

Also, concurrent resolution to print the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On the 7th instant:

An act (H. R. 4631) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888," as amended by act approved February 21, 1890;

An act (H. R. 5176) to change the time of holding the courts in the eastern judicial district of Texas; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 115) amending the joint resolution to regulate licenses to proprietors of theaters in the city of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes, approved February 26, 1892.

On April 11:

An act (H. R. 3867) to amend an act concerning officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. 6214) to increase the pension of William Burrough, of Crawford County, Ark., veteran of the war of 1812.

REFORMATORY AND HOUSE OF DETENTION FOR WOMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, of the business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia at the last day District business was under consideration there was before the House the bill (H. R. 5097) for the erection of a reformatory and house of detention for women charged with and convicted of crimes and misdemeanors in the District of Columbia and for other purposes, which was postponed until to-day. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over until the next District day, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

VACATION OF MADISON AND EXTENSION OF Y STREETS, IN BURLEITH, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 6658) to vacate Madison street and extend Y street, in Burleith, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to condemn and vacate Madison street from the west line of Back street, westwardly to the west line of Beatty & Hawkins's subdivision as recorded in "county" numbered 8, page 14; and to open and dedicate Y street eastwardly from the west line of said subdivision to Back street: Provided, however, That the ground in the street so condemned and vacated shall accrue and belong to the abutting property: And provided also, That the ground needed to extend Y street, as aforesaid, at its present width shall be donated to the District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the substitute reported by the committee be now read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to abandon and vacate that part of Madison street, Georgetown, from the west line of Back street, westwardly to the west line of Beatty and Hawkins addition to Georgetown; and to open and dedicate Y street at its present width eastwardly from the west line of said addition to Back street: Provided, however, That the ground in the streets so abandoned and vacated shall accrue and belong to the abutting property: And provided also, That the ground needed to extend Y street, as aforesaid, shall be donated to the District for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman that this is wholly private property. The property was originally dedicated from a plat that the gentleman had, and he simply wants to straighten a street.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. It does not involve a quarter of an acre; and then I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to object.

Mr. HEARD. I will state for the benefit of the House that it is simply, as stated by the chairman of the committee, a proposition to straighten a street. Madison street is an extension of Y street, and the outer line of the two streets do not agree. One gentleman owns the land on both sides of Madison street, and he proposes to grant the land on one side of the street to straighten the street if we allow the ground, which is abandoned on the other side to revert to his property on that side. It does not cost the Government a cent, but simply gives a straight street.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does it extend the street?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It just straightens the street in the same direction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I did not correctly apprehend the bill, as it was read in the midst of much confusion. My attention was called to it for the reason that the taxation of this city is based on the idea that we own the streets, and that people are bound to pay for them, but encroachments are continually made on the streets belonging to the Government. It was to that thought I expected to call the attention of the House; but after the explanation of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The first amendment will be to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert what the Clerk has read, as a substitute offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend that the title of the bill be amended so as to read:

"A bill to vacate that part of Madison street, Georgetown, west of Back street, and extend Y street, in Burleigh, in the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the title will be amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

METROPOLITAN STREET-CAR COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up House resolution (H. Res. 108) extending the time in which certain street railroads compelled by act of Congress approved August 6, 1890, to change their motive power from horse power to mechanical power for one year.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the street railroad companies availing themselves of the privileges granted by the act making appropriations to provide for the expense for the government of the District of Columbia, and approved August 6, 1890, is hereby extended for one year from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I want to ask for the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee first, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "ninety" insert "so far as it applies to the Metropolitan Railroad."

Mr. HEMPHILL. This simply limits the operations of the bill to that one road. The other road does not ask it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Can we have the resolution read? The resolution and amendment were again reported.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to take charge of the bill. This amendment simply asks that the resolution be confined to the Metropolitan road only.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What are the termini of the Metropolitan road?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It runs from Georgetown to East Capitol street, and is known as the F-street line.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And on Ninth street.

Mr. HEARD. The original bill would have included the Georgetown and Washington road, but they say that they do not want the extension.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Do you not think that if this railroad were not granted that extension of time they would be able to complete this change within the time required?

Mr. HEMPHILL. We will come to that in a moment.

Mr. HEARD. This is confined to the Metropolitan road, and after the adoption of the amendment we can discuss the matter.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will raise no objection to your amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], who is familiar with the subject.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has an amendment that he desires to offer, but I shall be obliged to him if he will let us have the report read before offering that amendment, so that the House may understand the proposition better. As to this resolution, which has been introduced at the request of the officers of the Metropolitan road, the committee considered this question and reported thereupon, and on the same day, I believe, on which their report was filed the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] introduced a resolution relating to the same subject, whereupon the president of the road came before our committee and said that, in view of the introduction of that resolution, he would take it as a favor if the members if the committee would go and personally inspect the work which the company had done and were doing.

A part of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. POST, Mr. BUSEY, myself, and, I think, one or two others, went and saw the work. After that personal inspection the members of the committee who had made it asked the officers of the road to have their engineer prepare a statement in detail of the work that had been done by the company, and also of the reasons why it was claimed that they would not be able to complete the work within the time fixed by law. That statement is here, and in order that the House may have a full understanding of the whole question I ask that the report of the engineer giving that detailed information may be read. After that is done I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to offer his amendment.

The report (by Mr. HEARD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 108) to provide for extending the time within which certain street railroads in the District are required to substitute for horse power the power specified in the third section of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District," etc., approved August 6, 1890 (Stat. L., vol. 26, p. 311), have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

The act of Congress referred to contains a provision requiring the street railroads therein described to substitute for horse power the power therein provided for within two years from the date of the act, and further provides that in case of failure to make the required change "such company shall forfeit its charter."

The joint resolution referred to is by its terms applicable to the Washington and Georgetown Railroad, as well as to the other road or roads therein mentioned, but from what transpired at the hearing before the committee, and from the statements made by the president of the Washington and Georgetown road to different members of the committee, as well as from statements made in the public prints of interviews with the president of said road, your committee finds that no extension of time within which to make the change prescribed by law is required by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad. The committee therefore recommends that the resolution be so amended as to make it applicable in terms only to the Metropolitan Railroad.

Upon full investigation your committee is satisfied that the officers of the Metropolitan road have been diligent and energetic in their efforts to obtain and put in practical use the power specified in the act of Congress, and that it will be practically impossible for that company to complete the work of substituting the new power within the time mentioned in the act.

The delays that have occurred and will necessarily occur in completing the work of change, are caused by the difficulties that are unavoidably incident to the use of storage batteries as the source of motive power. The use of cables on said road was demonstrated to be impracticable by reason of the numerous and severe curves in the lines, and the use of overhead wires as conductors of electricity is prohibited by law, and therefore said company is absolutely confined to storage-battery power.

The following letter from the president of the company gives, with some detail, a statement of what the company has done and is now doing in respect of its motive power:

"[Office of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, near F street bridge and Rock Creek.]

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1892.

"SIR: I beg leave to submit to your honorable committee some reasons why the accompanying resolution or the substance of its provisions should receive your support:

"Prior to the passage of the act of August 6, 1890, concerning street railroads this company had been investigating the different methods of traction other than horse power, and when the act became a law it at once secured the services of two cable engineers, who thoroughly examined the road with a view, if practicable, of adopting the cable system. After a careful survey, both engineers advised against the cable system, as they considered it impossible to be operated successfully, owing to the number of curves encountered, there being forty-nine each way, or a total of ninety-eight on 5 miles of road. The company was therefore obliged to abandon any consideration of the cable system. Electric traction by trolley wires we were also precluded from considering on account of the prohibition by Congress, and there was only left us to examine the independent electric motor, or storage-battery system, which we have investigated most thoroughly from the date of the passage of the act.

"This system we have now every reason to believe will be ultimately successful. It is hardly necessary to say that we have met with many obstacles that have taken much time to overcome, but continued tests made by us at considerable expense resulted in the successful operation for nearly two months of a car propelled by storage-battery motors. Upon that test we settled upon a pattern of a car and propelling mechanism, and have now in process of construction, the woodwork of which is entirely completed, thirty ledge standard-gauge cars. It would be utterly impossible, no matter how much money might be placed at our command, to have these cars provided with the necessary electrical machinery and in operation by August 6, but we are confident that within a short time thereafter we shall be able to complete them and put them into regular service. To provide for these cars and the expected increased and heavier traffic upon our road we have almost entirely relaid our tracks with heavy grooved rails. The expenditure already incurred to enable us to comply with the laws referred to is in excess of $242,000.

"We have erected all the necessary buildings for the system on our east and west lines, have all the machinery in place, such as boilers, engines, etc., and are only waiting for the electrical machinery to enable us to proceed to equip our east and west lines, and after that is accomplished we shall proceed to equip our north and south line.

"We should be glad if your committee could find time to examine our road and the improvements described, as we are satisfied you will be convinced that our company has done all that could be done to comply with the act referred to, and that the relief asked for by the resolution inclosed is reasonable and just.

"GEO. W. PEARSON,
President of Metropolitan Railroad Company.

"Hon. JOHN T. HEARD,
Chairman Subcommittee on Street Railroads of District Committee, House of Representatives."

It seems to your committee that to deprive the company of its franchises while it is actually engaged in the work of construction and change in motive power would be of no benefit to the community, but on the contrary would subject the community to great inconvenience and deprive a great number of the inhabitants of the District of requisite facilities for transportation which they are accustomed to and greatly need.

It can not be doubted that the provisions of the law referred to, which require work to be completed within a period plainly too short for the completion of the work, under penalty of the forfeiture of its charters, operates injuriously on the company, and creates apprehensions as to its future success, and has a tendency to injure its credit, and thereby retard the prosecution of the work in which it is engaged.

The committee recommends the passage of the joint resolution as now reported, extending the time limited in the existing law for one year from the date of the passage of this act, so far as it applies to the Metropolitan Railroad.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Ohio offers his amendment, I desire to say that the report of the engineer of this company is on the Clerk's desk, and may be read if any gentleman desires. It gives a detailed account of the work done by the company in preparation for the change of motive power. It also states that the expenditure on the part of the company in carrying on the work has been without stint; that he has been left entirely unrestricted as to all necessary expenditures; that from the beginning the company have simply directed him to secure for them the best plant and appliances that could be obtained, regardless of cost, and that every expenditure so far made has been in the line of procuring the best possible plant without regard to cost.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I do not care to have the report of the engineer read, but I would like to know whether he reports that on that line a cable is impracticable?

Mr. HEARD. He does.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Then I would like to know whether he has ever ridden over the cable system of San Francisco?

Mr. HEARD. I would say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] that the president of the company stated before our committee that upon the passage of the law limiting the time in which the company should make this change to two years, he felt somewhat uncertain about the success of the storage-battery system. He had been at work for more than a year, as I know of my personal knowledge, trying to perfect a storage battery, and when that law was passed, in view of the uncertainty which appeared to exist as to the practicability of using the storage-battery system, to which the company appeared to be absolutely limited, because of the law prohibiting the use of overhead wires—in view of the uncertainty as to whether storage-battery cars would be practicable, he called in, not merely one cable engineer, but two different engineers, to examine the route with reference to the adoption of a cable, and the conclusion they came to after inspecting the route was that a cable system was not practicable thereupon.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Will the gentleman give me—

Mr. HEARD. I trust the gentleman will permit me to conclude my statement. It is in response to his question, and I hope he will hear me through.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I certainly will.

Mr. HEARD. The president of the company said that as it was uncertain whether a storage-battery system could be made practicable, he had called in two engineers to inspect the route with reference to the question of the practicability of adopting the cable system, and both those engineers, men of reputation and ability, reported that it was not practicable upon that route. The statement of the president was confirmed by Mr. Truesdell, the president of a rival road, himself engaged in operating storage-battery cars. The report of the engineers was that in view of the fact that there were forty-nine curves in the double track, making ninety-eight single curves in the 5 miles of road, it would be impossible to construct a cable line upon that route that could be operated without absolute loss.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Will the gentleman give us the names of the engineers?

Mr. HEARD. I have not got the names. The president of the road made the statement which I have quoted, in the presence of the committee, and the opinions of those engineers as to the impracticability of adopting a cable upon that line was fully borne out by the president of the Eckington road, who was present at the time by request of the committee, and not at solicitation of the Metropolitan Company.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And you did not even ask the name of the engineer?

Mr. HEARD. I did not even ask the name of the engineer. Perhaps the gentleman from New Jersey considers the name of the engineer important, but—

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I do; because there are engineers and engineers.

Mr. HEARD. Well, I have no doubt whatever of the truth of the statement made by the president of the Metropolitan road, for I know to my own personal knowledge that before the law requiring the change of power was passed the company had spent a good deal of time and money in trying to perfect a storage-battery car. Now, if after having set out upon that plan, they afterwards called in the services of engineers to pass upon the question of the practicability of adopting the cable system, I take that as evidence that they were acting in good faith.

Mr. Speaker, from the statement made by the president of the company, and from the facts which appeared during the investigation, which are borne out by Mr. Truesdell, a very practical railroad man, I do not believe it possible to put cable power on that road without an absolute loss. The fact is, Mr. Pearson stated in the presence of our committee that he asked one of these engineers to state the minimum sum which he could guarantee as the cost of operating the cable system on that road; and the amount fixed (I think about twice as much as was estimated by those supposed to be familiar with the work) was so high as to preclude the introduction of the cable system.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they are now working on the line of storage batteries?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Do you not think they had better take more time? Will it not take at least five years to get anything definite?

Mr. HEARD. These gentlemen believe that they will be able to reach a result within a very few months. Storage battery cars are now being operated, as the gentleman knows, on the Eckington road. I will state, however, a fact which the gentleman may not know—that the company on whose line they are being operated accepted that system only upon a bond of the company manufacturing and putting on the cars, that they would protect the railroad company against proceedings for infringement in the use of those storage batteries, and also a bond that the company manufacturing and putting on the cars would operate them successfully for a certain time. And while this Eckington company now pays 12 cents a mile for every mile over which those cars run, which, added to the cost of the motor man and the conductor, makes the expense greater than the traffic to-day will justify; yet we are told by the president of the road that the company which furnishes those cars is probably suffering a loss to-day in doing so; in other words, 12 cents a mile does not pay the cost of their operation.

Now, Mr. Pearson, the president of the road, has stated to our committee that the difficulty is in getting batteries for their cars, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUSEY], and myself saw some thirty or forty new cars ready for these batteries and motors in their factory—it is stated that the company can get the motors, that is, the simple mechanical appliances for making application of the power, but the difficulty has been to get batteries which could be used without the danger of an injunction from some company or other; in other words, the difficulty was in getting a company to furnish an efficient battery which they would be permitted to use. They claim that they now have an engineer at work under a contract for the manufacture of batteries under a patent which seems to be entirely free from liability to the charge of infringement; and the company manufacturing them promise to be able to begin to give the company the first of their product, by probably, the 1st of May; and they promise that, as fast as practicable, the cars already built and in the factory awaiting these mechanical appliances, shall be equipped and put into use.

These people, as they show, have spent about a quarter of a million dollars, which is wholly unproductive until they get those cars running. They have every interest in common with the public; indeed, they have a much larger interest than the public in perfecting the work at the earliest practicable date. From the investigation which the committee has given—and we went and inspected the work—we believe they are proceeding in good faith, and will perfect that work quicker than anybody else could do it for them.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Do you mean to say that they have spent two hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars on electric motors?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How much have they spent in actual experiments in trying to develop a practical motor?

Mr. HEARD. I will state to the gentleman—

Mr. WASHINGTON. Have they expended anything?

Mr. HEARD. These people claim that they had spent $15,000 of their own money before they were compelled by law to make any expenditure. Since that time they have spent a much larger sum. The $242,000 of which we speak in our report embraces the expenditure they have made in securing a plant, which is three times larger than any similar plant in the world. They have to-day the very best plant of the kind in existence.

As stated just now, the engineer tells us over his own signature that in the construction of this work the injunction of the company to him has been to make it the best that could be made regardless of cost; that the company has never withheld from him for a moment the money necessary to do this work, and that he has expended their money just as fast as any competent engineer would or could prudently spend it.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Is it the intention of this company to use the storage system?

Mr. HEARD. It is.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Is there a street railway company in the United States whose cars are to-day run by itself with the storage system? Are not the roads in all such cases run under lease?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know about that.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. It is the fact.

Mr. HEARD. These people have erected a power plant which probably cost—well, I would not undertake to estimate the cost—it has been immensely large, probably $150,000. A large part of the money invested by this company, of course, has gone into this plant at Georgetown, in the construction of their power house, boilers, engines, and other equipment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. HEARD. But the suggestion I wish to make is this, and it is brought up by the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL], that the work done will be available to a large extent for their purposes in case the storage battery system should prove to be a failure and they should be permitted to resort to the system of overhead wires for the propulsion of the cars. In other words, they can use the plant for furnishing the power by means of overhead wires if they should fail in the storage-battery system. But in view of the large amount that they have already invested in this storage-battery system, and the interest they have in its success, in order to save what has been invested, they will be induced to make further and costly developments in that line.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Of what value will the overhead-wire system be to them, when the law prohibits the use of overhead wires?

Mr. HEARD. Of course it can not be done without a modification of the law; and these people ask this extension of time so as to allow them to endeavor to comply with the law as it is, without resorting to the other method. Your committee did not believe it possible; the railroad company does not believe it possible; in fact, their engineer states that it is absolutely impossible, on account of the delays already encountered, and not of their fault, in making these developments to complete their equipment by the 6th of August, at which time the present law requires it to be done. The gentleman will remember that their line extends not only from Georgetown by way of F street and up beyond the Capitol here, but that they also have a line on Ninth street almost as long as this. They are preparing to put on their storage batteries, the first available ones that can be procured, on the line between the Capitol and Georgetown, and will supply the other line as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I have no objection whatever to the extension of time to enable them to experiment with this kind of motor and storage-battery power. I think they will not only need this extension of time, but a very vast extension in addition, before making that a success. But I am not convinced, notwithstanding the elaborate report of the nameless engineers, that a cable is not a possibility on that line, and for the reason that I have ridden over these lines and know the character of the road, and have also ridden over a cable system in San Francisco which has more and sharper curves and works like a charm.

Mr. HEARD. Yes, and so have I, and I have no idea, for I believe I know this road pretty well, that there are anything like as many curves on the road in San Francisco to which you refer as on this one. There are probably not half the number. There are sudden curves on the road in San Francisco as well as in Kansas City, but not so many. You take a road having ninety-eight curves and the friction on the bearings of a cable running over a length of 5 miles would be something tremendous to overcome. In fact, as the gentleman must see, it would be almost destructive of the entire power employed to stretch the cable and leave no surplus for the propulsion of the cars. This will be recognized as true when it is remembered that the entire power available for the propulsion of cars in the ordinary system is only about 15 per cent, there being about 85 per cent wasted on stretching the cable itself.

That is the case on the ordinary road where the line is comparatively straight. But where there are ninety-eight curves, as on this road, you must see that it is practically impossible to make it succeed. The cable could not be driven and leave any surplus power for the cars. For that reason they have not attempted to try the cable system, knowing that its success would be exceedingly doubtful, if not certainly a failure, judging from its working in other places where they are not subjected to such an extreme tension as it would be here in overcoming curves. They do not want to take the chances of a failure which would be a very disastrous one. And I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any court on earth which would forfeit their charter under this law, even if we did not extend its provisions, with the showing which this company makes of having diligently tried to comply with the provisions of the law, but which they are unable to meet.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then what is the use of passing this bill?

Mr. HEARD. For this reason, as I will explain to the gentleman in a moment. As I have just stated, I do not believe that any court of law would forfeit their charter. It would be easy for them to show that they had properly exerted themselves, and made the attempt to comply with the law in every possible way; and in view of the large amount of money that they have expended and their efforts in that direction, I assert that I do not believe the charter would be forfeited.

But in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois let me state that they have got to borrow money to carry on this work, or raise it upon their securities in order to do the work, and if there is a cloud on the title to their property or their franchise it will be very destructive to their efforts in the matter of raising funds. If we have no case against them to compel them to forfeit the charter, or if there is no good to be gained for the people by doing so, if we believe in the honesty of their efforts and that they will do the work if anybody can do it (and the very large investment they have already made in that direction is not only proof that they are anxious to do it, but is an inducement to continue), I do not see why we should refuse to pass this bill, and thus impose a burden on the company, while it gives no corresponding benefit to the public.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of line 9—

"Provided, That within sixty days after the passage of this act the said Metropolitan Railway Company shall increase its service to such an extent that it will be no longer necessary for any of its passengers to stand up; and no fares shall be collected from any passenger in any of its cars unless furnished a seat therein."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the president of this road in the conclusion of his letter, embodied in the report of this committee, speaks of the relief requested here as "reasonable and just." The amendment which I have offered is certainly reasonable and just. It provides that this road, within sixty days from the passage of this act, shall have such service that it will not be necessary for any of its passengers to stand up.

That is the first provision. It gives them ample time to secure the necessary equipment, cars and horse power if they have not such an equipment on hand. They can supply a few extra cars such as they ought to have anyhow within sixty days, and every passenger on this road will be obliged to Congress for some such provision as this. I have seldom been permitted to ride seated, from this Capitol to my home during this entire winter, because of the crowd of passengers allowed to get on the cars, and chiefly ladies. The House adjourns about the time the Departments let out, causing a very large influx of lady passengers, and of course under such circumstances when ladies are standing no gentleman can keep his seat.

I have been on the cars at the times when the working people of the city are moving to and fro, either morning or evening, and I have observed that they are crowded in the cars as closely as it is possible to pack them in, and I have been on the cars at the time that the Departments close and the crowds were seeking some mode of finding their way to their homes in different parts of the city. Upon damp, close days and on such occasions I have seen these cars crowded until the air is stifling almost to suffocation. I have ridden on these cars when the theaters were out at night, and I have been on them when the congregations of the churches were dismissed. But late at night or early in the morning I have found it usually the same—passengers crowded in the aisle, jostling against each other.

Now, there may be, perhaps, periods in the day in which the service is sufficient. I have occasionally seen an opportunity for all the passengers to ride seated the full length of the trip. But it is a rarity.

In order to enforce this condition this amendment further provides that they shall not collect any fare from a passenger until that passenger may have a seat provided by the company. That is necessary, Mr. Speaker, for this reason: The railway companies claim that it will be a great injustice to them to say that they may take no more passengers than those who can be seated, because possibly at the end of the next block some of those occupying the seats may get out and leave room for those who have been compelled to stand. Very well, if that be true let the railway companies take the risk of taking on a few more than are necessary to fill the seats in the car, so that if three or four get out those who are standing may take their places and the company can then collect their fare.

But to crowd into an already crowded car fifteen, sixteen, or twenty people to stand is an injustice not only to the people who have already paid for their seats, but to those who are forced to stand. It is an injustice which the people ought not to be compelled to endure. I have ridden on these cars as late as 10 o'clock at night, and have observed the register showing that five hundred and eighty passengers had been in the car since it started upon its day's run, which shows an income for that car for that day's service of $24. Twenty-four dollars a day for a car ought to be a sufficient income to induce this company to put on enough cars to serve its passengers who are so liberal in their support of its business.

The committee seem a little bit anxious that this charter shall not be forfeited, so that great inconvenience shall not result to numbers of inhabitants of the District who travel upon them, and that these people shall have the requisite facilities for transportation, which they are accustomed to or greatly need. Well, I do not think it would be any great favor to the people of the District of Columbia to extend the franchise unless this restriction is inserted. I do not think the franchise should be extended, allowing them longer to run horse cars unless this condition is inserted which would require them to put a sufficient number of cars on this road, drawn by horses able to pull them, to accommodate the traveling public. It is a fair proposition, and there should be no opposition to the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I want to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Such time as he requires.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish very much that the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio were embodied in a general bill and made applicable to all the street-railroad companies in this city. Ever since I have been a member of this House the complaint made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has been heard here and throughout the city. Again and again during this period these corporations have come here for amendments to their charters. New organizations have come in for new charters and new lines have been built. This same complaint was iterated and reiterated in this House, and yet no committee of this House has ever yet reported to this body a proposition to correct this evil.

Mr. HEARD. I am sure my friend will not do injustice to the committee. Instead of the fact being as the gentleman has stated, since the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and myself became members of the Committee on the District of Columbia there have been great changes for the better. When we came here the bobtailed horse car was upon all the roads but one. We compelled this very road to take those cars off and to put on two-horse cars; and we have also compelled the Georgetown and Washington Railroad to perfect its equipment, and have compelled the roads generally to improve their service until only one now uses one-horse cars. I will go with the gentleman from Georgia in anything that is practical, so as to make these companies put on an increased number of cars to meet the average condition and necessities of the road; but the gentleman knows that no company can put on such a number of cars that it would prevent there being some time or other when the cars would be full. If you prohibit people getting onto the cars when they are full, then you inconvenience the people as well as the company.

I will go with the gentleman and make it apply to all alike; that the Commissioners shall prepare a schedule for these people regulating their equipment, and compel them to put on cars enough to as far as possible accommodate the people.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's response does not meet the situation to which I adverted. My allegation was that ever since I have been a member of this House the members of this House and the traveling public have complained that sufficient facilities have not been granted to furnish seats, as indicated by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HEARD. The service is better than it ever was before, and improving.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish the gentleman would allow me to proceed. On the contrary, I say that it is the other way. The evil is greater now than I have known it before.

Mr. HEARD. The population has increased.

Mr. BLOUNT. The population has increased, and the receipts of the road have increased, and they have restricted the facilities given.

Mr. HEARD. Oh, no, they have not. They have been extended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust the gentleman will allow me to proceed. This is a matter of argument—he arguing one way and I another.

Mr. HEARD. Oh, yes, a difference of opinion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am stating the facts and I trust the gentleman will appreciate that in discussing this matter with him I do what is parliamentary in the argument.

Mr. HEARD. Why, certainly; I beg the gentleman's pardon, and shall not interrupt him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust that my friend will adhere to that determination, for he has interrupted me frequently. The gentleman from Ohio has stated that he has not been able to get a seat in a street car in going from this House to his home during this winter.

Mr. TUCKER. I live near him and have had the same fate.

Mr. BLOUNT. And my friend from Virginia, who says that he lives near him, has suffered the same inconvenience.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Put me in the same category.

Mr. DICKERSON. I would like to testify, too.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Poll the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. The great body of this House, I think, will be able to say the same thing. I think we have proved it. I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will consider that the House has demonstrated what its opinion is, and that members want this evil corrected. I need not couple my own experience, although that to me is a strong incentive for what I have to say in this connection. I hope the amendment of my friend from Ohio will pass; and if he had made it thirty days instead of sixty days the better it would have been for the public. These people ought to be compelled at once to remove this evil.

Sir, it is easy for these gentlemen to come forward with their ex parte statements and get legislation through the Houses of Congress. It is not the business of everybody to watch over the advantages that may be obtained from the public while we have this special committee. I trust that this amendment will be adopted, and that it will be a short time before the gentlemen composing the Committee on the District of Columbia of this House, for the benefit of this House and the traveling public, will report appropriate legislation that will regulate these roads, so as to compel them to give the public the accommodation they are bound to afford by reason of their charters and exclusive rights.

Mr. HEMPHILL addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is recognized.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I merely want to say, in response to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], that the Committee on the District of Columbia, so far as I am concerned (and I am sure the whole committee) will quite agree with him and with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] in trying to compel better service, as we have been trying for some years to do. These people have now some thirty or forty cars which they expect within sixty days after the passage of the act to equip with storage batteries, and that therefore I do not think it would put any hardship on them. I think they will comply with the law. I only want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to this fact, that whenever a provision is adopted that no more people shall be allowed on a car than can be seated that it will inconvenience the public more than it will the railroad company.

Mr. BLOUNT. But suppose the railroad company are required by proper legislation to provide sufficient cars for the public; then how will the public be inconvenienced?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know that it would be possible for any Congress, or for any commissioners or other authorities to provide accommodations that would guard against every sort of contingency; but I will admit that they can do better than they are doing now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was about to ask the gentleman if he does not think it possible for them to do very much better than they are doing now?

Mr. HEARD. I do think so, and I have been trying to get them to improve. I want to go with my friend on that.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says he wants to go with his friend. I want to say that I have no opportunity of leading in these matters and my friend has, because he is on that committee.

Mr. HEARD. I mean that I am willing to vote for the purpose sought to be accomplished by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not my friend think the other roads should be included?

Mr. HEARD. I think it ought to be applied to all the roads alike.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would be very glad if my friend from Missouri, so familiar with all the affairs of the District, and especially with these inconveniences, would give us relief so far as it can be given, by a report from the committee recommending legislation to correct these evils.

Mr. HEARD. I can only say in reply to that that we will do the best we can, and shall welcome any suggestion any gentleman has to offer in that line.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yielded to my friend for a reply to a question. I did not wish to be understood to be yielding the floor.

Mr. HEARD. I only want to say that the Georgetown road will, within a few months, begin the use of the cables and the Metropolitan Company the storage-battery system, which is the best they can do under the limitation shutting out overhead wires. I therefore think that within the time limited in this resolution these two roads will be giving the public as good service as is practicable. If the gentleman from Ohio and the House think the amendment proposed is the proper way to secure an improved service, the committee will go with the gentleman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think the amendment should be adopted. I could name other inconveniences to which passengers are subjected. Passengers going home from church or from the theater at night are compelled to get off the car out here at the Capitol, and wait eight minutes until another car comes along, standing there in any kind of weather, instead of there being service enough to carry them on home. The cars that come into the Capitol grounds put them off here and compel them to wait eight minutes until the next car comes along.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we understand the evils of the system now, and I will yield to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who I hope will say something good.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I only intend to occupy a moment. I doubt very much the wisdom of allowing this extension to the railroad company. Under the original rights granted to the company it had two years in which to furnish these extra facilities for the public, and it seems, from the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill, that they have been experimenting with the storage-battery system instead of adopting the other methods that are used in other great cities where these roads are largely in operation. The gentleman knows, or at least he ought to know, that the storage system is not a success. There is not in any city in America an independent line where the storage-battery system is in successful operation. The system is in an inchoate condition to-day. The best electricians in the country are experimenting and endeavoring to develop it so that it can be put to some practical use for the transportation of passengers.

I do not believe that if this extension is granted it will amount to anything under the showing that is made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD]. I am willing, for one, so far as my vote goes, to grant that, if it is coupled with the proviso of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] admits that this company has in the past disregarded, and is to-day disregarding, the rights of the public, that it has subjected the people of this city, the residents as well as the transients who are here visiting, to ride upon these bob-tailed cars until they were compelled to change them either by the affirmative legislation of Congress or by the solicitation or commands of this committee of the House. Now, will a company that shows such utter disregard of the public rights—

Mr. HEARD. Will my friend allow me—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Not just now. It seems to me that if they are asking for additional privileges here, that those privileges should be coupled with such conditions as will protect the public. I agree with my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that I would have been better pleased if this amendment, which is offered here, had limited this company to thirty days instead of sixty days for putting on these extra facilities for the public. These privileges are granted, not for the benefit of private enterprise, but for the good of the public.

It is only upon the principle of the good of the public that these rights or privileges can be granted to these corporations by Congress. That being so, the Legislature should be careful that these privileges are hedged about in such a manner as to give the greatest possible benefit to the public. Now, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] is willing to approve of this amendment and will insist, when this bill goes over to the Senate, that no privileges of the character set forth in the original bill shall be granted to this company unless this amendment goes with them, then I, for one, am willing to drop all opposition to the bill. But I do not want the amendment adopted here, only to be stricken off in the Senate, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], who will probably be on the committee of conference, to submit to that action and thus give to this company these privileges without securing to the public the necessary protection.

Mr. HEARD. I am perfectly willing, as I have already said, to accept the amendment if this House thinks this is a practical way of settling the question. My own view is, however, that the adoption of the amendment will inconvenience the public fully as much as it will the company. I will not further resist, however, the amendment, and I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that if I am appointed on a conference committee to consider an amendment which this House puts upon the bill after full discussion, I will never agree to its being given away without the direction of the House, for my view is that an honorable man going into a committee of conference by order of the House for the consideration of an amendment which has been discussed here, and which reflects the sentiment of the House, either upon this or any other question, he is bound to stand by it until the House permits or instructs him to surrender.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The statement of the gentleman is satisfactory to me, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall cease opposition to this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to submit an amendment?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 8, by striking out "one year" and inserting "six months." After line 9, add, "provided that overhead wires may be used in propelling the cars by electricity, on a plan to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to delay the House or impede the action of the Committee of the District of Columbia, but I was very anxious awhile ago to get the floor to say almost what has since been said by my friend from Illinois who spoke a few minutes ago, that for two years we have been endeavoring to force the Metropolitan Company to adopt an electric motor which is not a practical success. We have had on the statute book for two years a law to compel them to adopt the storage-battery system.

Now, there is no line of street railway in successful operation by that system anywhere in the Union, or anywhere on the face of the earth to-day, and in my judgment there can not be for perhaps twelve months or two years longer. Why, then, go through the farce of extending for twelve months the time of this company to do an impossible thing? It is conceded by all that we need better facilities for traveling and transportation over the streets of this city. Everybody who patronizes these street railroads, whether he be a member of this House or one of the general public, knows that fact. Why, sir, hardly a day passes that I do not have to stand all the way from here to Nineteenth and N streets, and it takes nearly forty-five minutes to go there with these poor old horses that the company uses.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You have to stand up because you are so polite that you give your seat to the ladies.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Well, if I did not do that I would have to let the ladies stand while I was sitting, and that is contrary to my rearing.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It is contrary to all our rearing; but I simply wanted to bring out the fact.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield for a correction. He says there is not in this Union or anywhere on the face of the earth a storage-battery system successfully operated. That statement requires some qualification. In this very city, on G street, there is a storage-battery system which, so far as the public is concerned, is an unqualified success, for it furnishes the best service in the world. The fact is, however, that it is not profitable to the company.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman know that that line runs only ten blocks, and that they can make only seven trips without the battery becoming exhausted?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; I do not know that.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I hope gentlemen will not interrupt me any more, as I am speaking by the courtesy of the gentleman from South Carolina. The statement of my friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] substantiates my assertion. He concedes that the only storage-battery line of which he knows is run at a loss, and the fact is that it is run under a guaranty from the manufacturers of that motor that the railroad company shall not be sued for the infringement of a patent.

Mr. HEARD. But I say that so far as the public is concerned, it is a success. The service is excellent.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, are we to extend the time for the Metropolitan line another twelve months, and then have them running their road under a guaranty bond that they shall not be sued for the infringement of a patent? That is folly. Let us adopt something that is practical. I understand that the only objection to the overhead-wire system is in the Senate. Almost every city in the Union has adopted that system. The city of Nashville has sixty and odd miles of electric street railroads on that plan, and when you start from one end of that town to the other you go; it does not take you all day to do it, as it does on the Metropolitan line or the Pennsylvania line of this city, both of which are, I believe, the richest and most profitable street-car corporations in the country.

Now, I am not reflecting on the Metropolitan Company. I do not wish to reflect on the company, but they are not going to do any more than we make them do, and this is a case where we ought to put the fire on the terrapin's back and make him crawl. [Laughter.] Let us make the time six months instead of twelve months, and authorize them to adopt the overhead system, on a plan to be accepted by the Commissioners of the District, and then we shall have a successful street car line on the Metropolitan road.

Mr. HEARD. They would be very glad to do that, if possible.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I have no doubt they would, for it would be much cheaper than the other.

Mr. HEARD. And they could accomplish it much more quickly with overhead wires if permitted by law.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Yes, I have no doubt they could do it within the six months.

Now, I think the amendment offered by my friend from Ohio ought to be adopted, because if we have an electric system we are just as liable to have that abused as we are to have a horse-power system abused; we are just as liable not to have a sufficient number of cars run to accommodate the public. Adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and then adopt my amendment, and I think you will have solved the problem of transportation on this road. So long as we grant extensions of twelve months at a time in order to enable this company to experiment with the storage system, so much longer we must endure this horse-car line in the capital of the nation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think the House now understands this question thoroughly; and we have all had a chance to abuse the railroads; no doubt they deserve a good deal of it. There are but two questions involved in this matter. One is, whether you will adopt the amendment requiring that the company shall furnish a seat for every passenger, or otherwise shall not be allowed to collect fare; that is the question presented in the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. The other question is whether this company should be allowed additional time in which to perfect their system. They do not want the overhead wire; they are not asking for it. They are convinced that they can get along with the storage battery. They have spent between two hundred and three hundred thousand dollars to get ready for it; and if we give them this additional time, they say they will certainly be able to introduce it. I trust we shall now come to a vote.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], I understand, simply wishes to suggest an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty days" and inserting "thirty days." I have no doubt the necessary horses and cars can be purchased and put on within that time; and I see no need that the public shall wait sixty days in order to accommodate the railroad company.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman will allow me to state, as I stated before, that this company now has in its car shop at Georgetown from thirty-five to forty new cars waiting for this electric equipment. Why compel them to buy more horse cars under these circumstances. I believe that within sixty days these new cars will be equipped; or if it be demonstrated that they can not be, then they can be changed accordingly.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the company chooses to keep the public waiting for sufficient accommodations I do not see why the public should be compelled to pay.

Mr. HEARD. There is only a difference of thirty days between us.

Mr. BLOUNT. That may seem a small thing to the gentleman; but if this amendment be adopted and the company compels the people to stand it, it makes no money for them. That is all there is in it. I think the company ought to be required to settle this matter within thirty days. The argument of my friend would apply just as strongly in favor of an extension for longer than sixty days.

Mr. HEARD. I do not so apply it.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the argument does apply.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri rose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I will wait until the gentleman from South Carolina gets through.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. If the gentleman proposes to try that sort of tactics, I tell him right here and now that he will not reach a vote on his bill to-day.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am not to be bulldozed in that way—

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. And you can not bulldoze the House, either.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not try to bulldoze the House or anybody else. I simply asked the gentleman what time he wanted. That was a very simple and polite remark.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I suggest to the gentleman in all fairness that there has been no time allowed except on behalf of the committee. The gentleman has taken the floor and held it and parceled out his time—

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Missouri had asked me for time, it would not have been refused.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Why should I ask the gentleman for time? Should we not have the privilege of discussing a bill of this kind on this floor freely and fairly? Does the gentleman mean to tell me that a corporation bill of this kind can not be discussed? This is not a "unanimous consent" bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not say that it is. But I was entitled to an hour; and I gave time to every gentleman who asked it. The gentleman from Missouri did not ask me for time, and I did not give him any.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I only want my right under the rules to speak on this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman has a perfect right to do it.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. If the gentleman, at the end of his hour, which has been absorbed by the committee, proposes to move the previous question, let him try it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Missouri states what he knows not to be true when he says that the time has been consumed by the committee. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is not on the committee; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is not on the committee; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is not on the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. In whose right did they speak?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They spoke in the time which I controlled.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But the time was not "consumed by the committee."

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. They occupied a part of the gentleman's time. Mr. Speaker, under a strict construction of parliamentary law, when a gentleman gets through speaking he should not be allowed to control any time, but should take his seat and let others speak, if they want to. It is an abuse which has grown up in this House to allow a member, because he is recognized, to control an hour, whether he occupies it himself or not; and the sooner that abuse is stopped the better.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If any reason can be stated why this bill should not be passed, I am perfectly willing the House should hear it. If the gentleman from Missouri wants time, so far as I am concerned, I am willing he should proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. You have not time enough left that would enable me to do justice to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do, until the gentleman finishes.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I came here to-day under the impression that this being the day appropriated to the local legislation of the District, there would be presented a good many important bills affecting the welfare of the people here. As one of their common council I thought it my duty to come here and help them out.

I do not believe that the first bill to be considered should be a bill of this character, for the benefit of the Metropolitan Railroad Company. There may be in the city of Washington enterprises that are entitled to some consideration and sympathy, but this is not one of them. If there are any monopolies that the people of this city have groaned under it has been the street-railroad monopolies. They have ignored the humanities even of life; they have ignored the comforts and conveniences of the traveling public, thoroughly regardless whether it was a matter of right or not, or even whether it was a matter of life or death. I am one of the victims of this road. [Laughter.] This is my fourth term here, and I am somewhat familiar with its methods.

A MEMBER. Have you paid your fare?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Yes, I have paid my fare; and I tell you, my friends, that there is no man, even after paying his fare, who does not come very near working his passage as well on that road. [Laughter.] Stand up! Why, sir, there is not a member on this floor, I believe, but knows that day after day at some hours of the day, in fact nearly all hours of the day, these cars are almost invariably packed as full as they can hold. It is not, as some gentleman has suggested, that it is the traveling public at night, as the people are returning to their homes from their labor; but at all hours of the day the people are packed in them like sardines in a box, black and white, hanging on to the straps, platforms full, and this "poor company," one of the most wealthy corporations in the city of Washington, comes before this House as a mendicant and says: "Gentlemen, this F street car line, we do not believe, is going to be such a great bonanza and we want you to extend the time for completing the cable on that road." They should not be allowed one minute. If they do not complete the road they ought to forfeit their charter. Supposing it does not pay, what is that to us? I should not care if they struck an Irish dividend on that road in the shape of an assessment. [Laughter.] Let that "poor" line go with the others, and let them carry that road along and distribute a part of their enormous earnings from their other line over the system.

They will now cheerfully accept an amendment compelling them to put on more cars. You postpone action on this bill and they will put them on to-morrow. They will put sleeping cars on if you want them to, and then take them off the moment it is passed. [Laughter.] They will compel you to stand up in the cars all the same, pack you into the box, and make you stand in the rain at the meeting place up here near the Treasury and at the monument waiting until the next car comes up or compel you to get out and walk a block away from the line if you propose to take another, or let you wait there at the Treasury to get a transfer ticket from the poor, unfortunate individual who has to stand out there in all weathers to attend to that business.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. You are talking about another line.

Mr. HEARD. You are on the wrong road. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. It is all one system, is it not?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no, it is not.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. The Georgetown line.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no, it is not all one system.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Will you kindly tell me how many lines there are in this Washington system?

Mr. HEARD. I will state to the gentleman that the Washington system, to which he refers, owns the Georgetown and Washington line, running on the avenue, and the Fourteenth street line, and the Seventh street line, but that is not this road.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Who owns the F street line?

Mr. HEARD. The Metropolitan Company.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. That is the company that wants this extension?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Well, that is the one I am talking about. I believe they are all under different names one concern. The F street cars are packed and packed the same as the others.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Could the gentleman tell which was the worse, if he tried?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Well, the F street line is worse, because the cars are smaller and the space in which they pack the passengers is smaller. Now, I want to tell these gentlemen who are talking about cable systems being impracticable, that there is nothing impracticable about cabling that F street road. Gentlemen talk about the forty-eight curves. It would be immaterial if there were ninety-six of them. It only involves divisions of the cable. It might also involve a difference in the location and number of the power houses, but nothing more and nothing less. It is absolutely certain that if you refuse to extend this franchise to that railroad company, they will have that cable in and have those cars running.

Mr. HEARD. Does my friend think it possible for any company to put in a cable between now and the 6th of August on five miles of line?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Why, yes, it is possible. It is possible with men and money to do anything.

Mr. CARUTH. It is in this country.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Yes; and it is not our fault if they have not been at it already. Who is to blame for it? They go right along, trusting in their blind confidence, to the assurances of the gentlemen on this Committee on the District of Columbia that "there will be no trouble, you know;" and here is the ditch they have landed them in.

Between now and the 6th of August, if this extension was asked for in good faith, there might be something done; but every statement so far emanating from that road is: "We are experimenting with a storage battery. We do not think it is possible to have a cable system on that line of road." In other words, they do not intend to put a cable system on that road, and until they find some way that will suit them, they propose to deprive the people of the benefit of rapid transit. They are perfectly willing to go right along in the old-fashioned, slow methods, packing the cars, trusting that Congress will help them out. When they came before Congress and asked for this valuable franchise for their main system, they knew whether or not they could extend it over this other road.

I do not believe they were in good faith to begin with. In my city of St. Louis we have cable systems. Nearly all of the lines there are operated either by cable or overhead wires. I do not share in the opposition raised by some parties to the overhead wire system. It is true it disfigures a street to a certain extent; but it can hardly be called a disfigurement where, as on the Eckington line, the posts are between the two tracks and the wires are carried on the projecting arms. I do not know but it looks like an ornament; but in the cases where we are using overhead wires perfect service is obtained. And aside from the occasional stopping, which comes from the breaking of the cords of the cable, the service on our cable systems is perfect.

We have had cable lines in that city running for years and years that had as many turns as this F street line would have and they have run successfully for years.

The proper thing to do with this bill is to postpone action upon it. In the first place compel these gentlemen to give us decent service. They are gradually allowing their car system to run down to prepare for the other, and they will be packing you on top of the cars before they get through unless you adopt some method of curbing them.

Compel them to furnish a seat to each passenger and they will provide the cars. Compel them to give the exchange tickets on the cars, and to hold the cars until the transfer is made, and not allow people to stand like tramps in the rain until the next car comes. We might at the same time put in a provision requiring them to run cars during the night. There are some gentlemen who stay out later than 12 o'clock. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. My friend from Massachusetts here [Mr. LODGE] says he finds it would be an economizer.

Now Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not grant this extension. I do not think this company is entitled to any consideration at our hands. I think they should be compelled to live up to the contract they made when this privilege was granted them; and whether it pays or not is not a matter that concerns Congress. If it does not pay them, they will not run it; but it will pay. We ought at the same time look after the rights of the people along the line of this road and see that they get the benefits of rapid transit as soon as possible.

I reserve the balance of my time, and as I have time now [laughter], I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d day of March, 1891, Congress passed the following act:

And the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia shall pay to the District of Columbia within eighteen months from the approval of this act the full amount of the judgment that was rendered against the said company by the supreme court of the District of Columbia at the suit of the said District in cause numbered 22458, at law, on the docket of said court, with the cost of said cause and interest on said amount from the date said judgment was rendered until paid, and that upon the failure of the said company so to pay said amount, costs, and interest within the time aforesaid, the charter of said company shall become forfeit, and all its rights, privileges, and franchises as a body corporate shall cease and determine.

That amount has not been paid. The time has not expired. But there is a bill now pending before this body to relieve the company from the payment of this judgment. It was obtained for the cost of paving alongside the tracks of this road. Since that act was passed the Supreme Court of the United States have reversed this judgment, and they reversed it upon the ground that the disregard by the supreme court of the District of Columbia of the statutes of limitation applied to that case was erroneous, and because that company pleaded the statute of limitations against the District of Columbia the Supreme Court of the United States have held that that judgment must be reversed. The fact remains that the District of Columbia was compelled to do the paving which, by the laws of the United States, should have been done by this company. Now, until the company shall come into this House with clean hands and not hide itself behind the baby act of the statute of limitations I, for one, am in favor of giving them no further privileges.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from New Jersey permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Does not the gentleman know that in the last Congress a provision was inserted in the appropriation bill which requires them to pay that money notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I have just read it.

Mr. HEARD. Then they are under the necessity of paying that amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. But they have a bill here to relieve this company of the payment of that judgment.

Mr. HEARD. I have no knowledge of any such bill. [To Mr. HEMPHILL.] Do you know of such a bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I have such a bill here, which was introduced in the Senate.

Mr. HEARD. There is no such bill before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does the gentleman dispute the existence of such a bill? I will give him one.

Mr. HEARD. I will say that there is no such bill before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it seems to me it would be the committee to which it would be referred.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. But their attorney has appeared before our subcommittee and pressed the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEARD. It is before the Committee on the Judiciary, then?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Precisely.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we are prepared to vote upon this bill. The railroad company has certainly got a great deal of abuse, and everybody knows that it has not done what it ought to have done; but the only question is shall the railroad company have the additional time to carry out what Congress has required them to do. If Congress does not consent to give this additional time, its securities will be valueless, for it will not be able to sell its bonds when it is known that it is liable to forfeit its charter. If the charter is forfeited what better off are we? The public will not have any advantage. We will have a railroad and nobody running it until some one else builds a new railroad; and it is simply a question as to whether the road shall be compelled to give a seat to every one who applies for it, and so far as that is concerned, I have no objection. So far as this House itself is concerned it has to pass upon the question, as to whether or not the additional time shall be allowed.

I will suggest, further, in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, that sometimes in occasions of bad weather, if they are not permitted to take in more passengers than they are able to give seats, it will amount to a very great inconvenience to the people, who will be compelled to stand upon the sidewalk and see three or four cars go by them without being able to get a seat because they are already filled. Members of the House must take that into consideration.

Mr. BLAND. Would it not be well to compel them to accommodate all who apply for seats?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That will correct itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add at the end of line — "provided that within thirty days from the passage of this act said Metropolitan Railway Company shall increase its service to such an extent that it will no longer be necessary for any of its passengers to stand up, and no fare shall be collected for any passenger in any of its cars until furnished a seat therein.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to understand this amendment. In going home from here I use the F street cars out to the neighborhood of the Church of the Covenant, a distance of nearly two miles. When I get on a car here in the Capitol grounds I nearly always find it crowded, but if I wait or go down to the corner and take a car that comes from the eastern section of the city I can, in most instances, get an opportunity to sit all the way home.

Now, I do not understand how this matter is to be regulated under this amendment, or how you are going to require the company to accommodate every passenger with a seat unless you can at the same time distribute the applications; otherwise one car will go by crowded and the next one perhaps empty.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is a very difficult question. It is one which has been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia on former occasions and also by the House, but the House heretofore has never been willing to adopt such a rule as this amendment contemplates.

Mr. DICKERSON. In nine cases out of ten I find that if I take the car here I have to stand all the way home; whereas if I take a car coming from the east, I am quite likely to get a seat.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We all agree that it is a great hardship for passengers to have to stand, as they are often compelled to do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. A hardship which would be remedied in this way: the railroad company would have a few more cars standing out here about the time the House adjourns, or else they would run the risk of having their charter forfeited the next time Congress met.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I wish to inquire whether, under this amendment, the conductor and the driver are authorized to decline to let a passenger get upon a car unless they can give him a seat.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suppose the amendment implies that. It provides that no fare shall be collected from any passenger unless they can furnish him a seat, and I presume that would be construed to mean that no passenger shall be permitted to get upon the car and ride unless there is a seat for him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then the effect would be to give my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON] and myself and other gentlemen the option of finding a car with a vacant seat which he could occupy or walking home.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. An option which you have now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. We have now the option of walking or of riding standing up; but in that case we would simply have the option of walking or standing on the street corner until a car came by in which we could find a seat.

Mr. DICKERSON. Would this amendment, if adopted, have the effect of clothing the conductor with the right to refuse a lady admission to the car when all the seats were already occupied by gentlemen, and to leave her standing on the street, perhaps in the rain?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think that would be the effect of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. It looks to me as if the effect of the amendment would be to prevent gentlemen from riding on the street cars at all at certain hours of the day, for if a gentleman gets into a car and finds a seat and a lady comes in and he surrenders his seat to her, then, as no passenger who is without a seat is required to pay fare, he will be turned out of the car and will have to walk. The effect, therefore, would be, as I have said, that at certain hours all gentlemen would have to walk. Now, for my own part I confess I would rather have the car carry me, even standing up, than carry myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. The reasonable expectation would be that the company would try to provide sufficient cars to accommodate the entire public patronizing them, and I have no doubt they would do all they could to do that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Kentucky describes the present situation very well indeed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Yes. But at certain hours of the day, when ladies are out in large numbers and are returning home tired and they come into the car no gentleman would be willing to keep his seat and let them stand, so the effect would be as I have stated. Now, the sole question, it seems to me, is, whether we shall have the privilege of paying our fare and riding standing up or the privilege of keeping our nickels and walking. [Great confusion in the Hall.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The House must be in order. It is impossible to transact business until order is restored. Several gentlemen are speaking at once.

Mr. ALLEN. That is all right. They are speaking in different parts of the Hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the effect of the amendment exactly as it is understood by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. My understanding is that if this amendment were adopted a passenger would have the right to ride standing up, but the conductor would have no right to collect fare from him.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That can be best settled by having the amendment read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the amendment as offered read "sixty days" instead of "thirty days," as has just been read by the Clerk.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Georgia offered an amendment making the time thirty days.

Mr. HEARD. But it has not been acted upon.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I accepted it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio had a right to submit an amendment naming thirty days, and he did so.

Mr. HEARD. I did not know he had done so.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. OUTHWAITE, it was adopted; there being—ayes 70, noes 26.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. As I understand, the amendment just read requires the conductor not to charge fare for any person who is not provided with a seat. Would it not be well to amend by adding "except at the option of the passenger?"

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment would not be in order at present.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Of course, anybody can pay if he wants to do so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. For myself I should object to being compelled to get off. I would rather pay my fare, even though not provided with a seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two amendments pending. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "one year," in line 8, and inserting "six months."

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not urge that amendment for this reason: The bill now provides for an extension of one year from the date of the passage of the act. If this bill be passed within a reasonable time the company might get an extension of eight or nine months beyond the time fixed by the present law, the 6th of August.

If this amendment be adopted the company might get only two or three months in addition to the time now allowed. The engineer of this company has told the committee (and I believe he speaks truthfully) that while they hope to be able to equip the F street line, the one in which we are more particularly interested, within the time originally specified, it would be impossible for them to equip the whole line, embracing the Ninth street branch, inside of a year. I think, therefore, the gentleman ought not to insist on putting in this limit. The money which the company has invested and which is now unproductive makes the strongest possible incentive to their facilitating the work in every practicable way.

Mr. WASHINGTON. What the gentleman has said does not break the force of my amendment at all. This company has now had two years in which to attempt what is conceded by all to be an impossibility—the equipment of its line with a storage electric system. The present amendment, taken in connection with the other which I have offered, will give this company as much time as they ought to be allowed. The amendment next to be voted on provides that this railroad company may put up an overhead system of wires, to be accepted by the District Commissioners; and no man will say that it would take over six months to introduce the overhead system on the entire Metropolitan line, including all its branches.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest that we vote first on the amendment with regard to the overhead system; and if that be adopted we can then vote on this six months' amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] to the fact that as the text of the bill now stands the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, will provide for an extension of six months from the passage of the act, not six months from the 6th day of August.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Well, I am willing the company shall have six months additional from August 6. Then we will vote on the other amendment, which is of far more importance even than this, because I would be willing the company should have an extension of twelve months if we were assured that at the end of that time we would have a system of electric cars on the F street line. I think if the House will emphasize the fact that it wants an overhead system on the Metropolitan line, gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol will waive their objections. I understand that there are but two of the large cities in the Union, New York and Washington, where the overhead system is not used. We are behind the time, we are standing in our own light, if we refuse to insist upon the overhead wires on such a car line as the Metropolitan.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest that we take the vote first on the amendment with reference to the overhead line.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Very well; I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee requests, as the Chair understands, that the amendment last offered by him be first voted on. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WASHINGTON. In that case the amendment will have to be modified so as to come in after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment now to be voted upon will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 9 add—

Provided, That overhead wires may be used in propelling cars by electricity, on a plan approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the other amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "one year," in line 8, and inserting "six months after August 6, 1892."

The question being taken, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. WASHINGTON)—ayes 14, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask now a vote on the joint resolution as amended.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, the question being upon its passage.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 23, noes 22.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri and Mr. LONG. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. LONG and Mr. HEARD were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 24.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. No quorum.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 75, not voting 153; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman's name is recorded.
Mr. DOCKERY. I have a pair with the gentleman from Iowa, and have just come into the Hall. I do not know what the proposition is, but vote in the affirmative.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
On motion of Mr. HEARD, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BUILDINGS IN ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a joint resolution which I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time. I will state that it is not reported from the committee, but I will be glad to inform the House as to the necessity for its passage as soon as it has been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 118) to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in the District of Columbia.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby instructed not to issue any more permits for buildings intended for human occupation in alleys in the District of Columbia, until further provided for by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that we passed a law providing that no more dwellings should be constructed in alleys of less than 40 feet width. The Senate committee, I am told, have proposed to amend this by making it 30 feet. While the bill is pending in the two Houses everybody in the District of Columbia who happens to own property of this character is running down to the Commissioner's office to get permits so that they can have the right to commence the construction of these buildings before the law goes into effect.

The joint resolution directs the Commissioners not to issue any more such permits until Congress shall pass finally upon the matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. I wish to know where the permits are obtained; what compensation is given for the streets or portions of streets that are occupied by these alleys?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think they occupy any part of the alleys.

Mr. HEARD. This is for the construction of buildings on alley lines—on the sides of the alley.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, if they are on either side of the alley to whom do they belong?

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is private property. It belongs to the individuals.

Mr. HEARD. This is to prevent their building houses in there until the street is opened through and they have light and gas, and to prevent their building where the alley is not 40 feet wide. It makes a den of vice now that is too difficult to police, and it is impossible to cause the observance of proper sanitary regulations.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that immediately upon the passage of that bill through the House the Commissioners, without waiting for any law, refused to give any more permits?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know how that is.
Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I am reliably informed that that is the case.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This will protect the Commissioners. They are being besieged by persons who wish to get in before Congress can act on the matter. This is simply to stop action until Congress shall decide what width of alleys they will allow.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SQUARE 206, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 7081), confirming title to lands in the subdivision of square 206, in the city of Washington, D. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the subdivision of square 206, in the city of Washington, D. C., made by C. P. Patterson and recorded in book R W, page 102, in the office of the surveyor of the said District, be, and the same is hereby confirmed so far as the said subdivision embraced any part of the original alleys in said square, and the title of the persons claiming any part or parts of said original alleys under the owner of the original lots in said square at the time said subdivision was made is hereby confirmed: Provided, That the area dedicated to the public in the subdivision made by said Patterson is at least as great as that of the alleys in the said original division of said square into lots.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would say that this simply provides for the confirmation of this subdivision, which was made in 1856, and upon which houses have already been constructed. There is no objection to it on the part of anyone, so far as I know.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INSPECTOR OF PLUMBING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up the bill (S. 1492) to authorize the appointment of an inspector of plumbing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and their successors be, and they hereby are, authorized and empowered to make, modify, and enforce regulations governing plumbing, house drainage, and the ventilation, preservation, and maintenance in good order of house sewers and public sewers in the District of Columbia, and also regulations governing the examination, registration, and licensing of plumbers and the practice of the business of plumbing in said District; and any person who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the requirements of the provisions of said regulations after ten days' notice of the specific thing required to be done thereunder, within the time limited by the Commissioners for doing such work, or as the said time may be extended by said Commissioners, shall upon conviction thereof be punishable by a fine of not more than $300 for each and every such offense, or in default of payment of fine, to imprisonment not to exceed thirty days.

SEC. 2. That the said Commissioners and their successors be, and they hereby are, authorized and empowered to require every person licensed to practice the business of plumbing in the District of Columbia, before engaging in the said business, to file a bond in such amount and with such number of sureties as the said Commissioners shall determine, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all work in compliance with the plumbing regulations, and that the District of Columbia shall be kept harmless from the consequence of any and all acts of the said licensee during the period covered by the said bond.

SEC. 3. That the said Commissioners and their successors be, and they hereby are, authorized to establish and charge a fee for each permit granted to connect any building, premises, or establishment with any sewer, water, or gas main, or other underground structure located in any public street, avenue, alley, road, highway, or space; and also to establish and charge a fee for each permit granted to make an excavation in any public street, avenue, alley, highway, road, or space for the purpose of repairing, altering, or extending any house sewer, water main, or gas main, or other underground construction. The fees authorized by this section shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia and their successors be, and they hereby are, authorized and empowered to appoint an inspector of plumbing and such number of assistants as they deem necessary, which may be authorized by appropriations made by Congress, not exceeding four, in and for the District, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of said Commissioners, and they are hereby empowered accordingly, to inspect or cause to be inspected all houses when in course of erection in said District, to see that the plumbing, drainage, and ventilation of sewers thereof conform to the regulations hereinbefore provided for; and also at any time, during reasonable hours, under like direction, to inspect or cause to be inspected any house in said District, to examine the plumbing, drainage, and ventilation of sewers thereof, and generally to see that the regulations hereinbefore provided for are duly observed and enforced.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and they hereby are, repealed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to amend section 4, line 12, after the word "direction," by inserting "on the application of the owner or occupant, or on the complaint of any reputable citizen."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will do so. In the mean time I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 4 down to and including "duty," in line 6, and insert:

"That the inspector of plumbing and his assistant shall be."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon this amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. We do not know what is stricken out, and we would like to have some explanation of it.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the bill provided that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and their successors are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint an inspector of plumbing and such number of assistants as Congress may from time to time appoint. I understand from the Commissioners that they already have an inspector of plumbing and two assistant inspectors. This bill simply provided for the appointment of one more. They can get along without this additional inspector, and this will simply comply with the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the other day, who objected to the appointment of any more officers. This will strike out that power, and simply provides that the inspector of plumbing and his assistants shall do what these new officers would have done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be reported again. The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The first part of section 4 provided that the Commissioners of the District were authorized and empowered to appoint an inspector of plumbing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest this amendment, to strike out the section down to line 6, including the words "in and for," and inserting simply this:

That the said inspector of plumbing shall be under the direction of said Commissioners.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is exactly what my amendment is. It says that the inspectors and assistants shall be under the direction of said Commissioners. I will ask the Clerk to again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, after the word "direction," insert the words, "on the application of the owner or occupant, or on the complaint of any reputable citizen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, these salaries, of course, are permanent, and paid out of the general funds in the Treasury. The provision of section 3 is as follows:

The fees authorized by this section shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Now, in this really private business of plumbing, the matter concerns the citizens of the District more than it does the general public and the United States; and it seems to me that under no circumstances should the compensation of these plumbers be paid out of the public Treasury. That work ought to be paid entirely out of the funds paid into the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia. As it stands now the Government pays one-half of the amount and the District one-half, and the District of Columbia gets the benefit of all the fees.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no, the Government only pays its half.

Mr. HOLMAN. That provision is not in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is not in any bill of this kind. This bill does not fix any salary; does not provide compensation for anybody; and it does not provide for the appointment of anybody. There are already in the District of Columbia one plumber and two assistants, who are provided for in the District appropriation bill, of which the committee of the gentleman from Indiana is chairman has charge, and whatever regulation that committee makes will govern.

Mr. HOLMAN. Conceding that, we will let the present arrangement stand, under which one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia are charged to the Government, and the other half to the revenue of the District, still the effect of this bill, as my friend must see, is this: Assuming now that the appropriation bill provides for these three officers, an inspector and two assistants, and the appropriation is made for it, one-half of it has to come out of the District fund and the other half to come out of the Government Treasury. Now, it is a fact, if this system be introduced, and that the expense shall be refunded by fees, these fees certainly should not go entirely into the funds of the District of Columbia, but ought to go equally to the credit of the funds of the District of Columbia and to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, Mr. Speaker, the bill does not provide for any such system as the gentleman suggests. It simply says that there are now certain fees charged in the District, and they are appropriated exactly as this bill provides. This bill fixes where these fees are to go with the matters covered by this bill; they are to go as the fees now go.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should the District of Columbia get the whole benefit of the fees?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is a matter that can be regulated by the Committee on Appropriations when they come to fix the salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; because this money is placed to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It goes to the credit of the District of Columbia. There is no money appropriated from the District of Columbia that goes to any place except the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. But all the fees go the credit of the District of Columbia in this case.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course they do.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not have a provision inserted that the District of Columbia shall have one-half of the fees placed to its credit, and that the other half shall go to the credit of the United States?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, the whole of the fees only amount to five, six, or seven thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not matter how much the fees are, the principle is the same. I prefer to look after the interests of all the people rather than those of a favored community of people. Now, the gentleman must see that the effect of this provision is that the Government pays one-half of the fees for these inspections—

Mr. HEMPHILL. I trust that the gentleman will kill the bill and be done with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel very indignant every time that this kind of bill comes up, under which my constituents have to bear a large portion of the expenses of this District; and I am not willing that they shall have deducted from the results of their labor such amounts as are provided for in the matters of these salaries.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What provision does the gentleman propose?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, that one-half of the amount of the fee shall go to the credit of the District of Columbia and the other half to the Treasury.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well offer your amendment, and I will agree to that. Let every bit of it go to the Treasury, if you prefer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will take that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does not tax the Treasury a single cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting "that one-half of the fees shall go to the credit of the Treasury of the United States and the other half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Where does the gentleman desire his amendment to come in?

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to insert that amendment in lieu of the words "and by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the bill at the Clerk's desk is in manuscript; therefore the gentleman must write his amendment and send it up to the desk to be reported.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 13, after "United States," insert "one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, before that is voted upon—

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am perfectly willing to agree to that; so it is not worth while to argue it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not going to argue it, but I wish to say to my friend having charge of the business of the Committee of the District of Columbia that the list of health officers, inspectors, and persons employed in connection with matters relating to the public health occupies a whole page.

I have before me a letter written by a very intelligent gentleman, a leading citizen of this city, protesting against this proposition as unnecessary, claiming that something ought to be left to the good sense and discretion of the citizens themselves, saying that this Government ought not to be made unnecessarily paternal, and that all these matters pertaining to our homes and firesides should not be subjected to Government supervision. I will not ask to have the letter read, but that is the substance of it. I have here also the list to which I have referred, of the officers and employees now engaged in connection with health matters in this city.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether the fees will not more than pay the salaries provided for in this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the money will not go that way.

Mr. WASHINGTON. It goes into the Treasury.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Who pays the fees?

Mr. WASHINGTON. The people who own the property, and they ought to pay them. It is an outrage that the children of people who come here to serve the Government should be subjected to the danger of being poisoned by sewer gas because of defective plumbing in many of the old buildings that exist here. There should be an officer of the kind proposed here to inspect the plumbing in these old buildings, and also in new buildings, so as to prevent the destruction of innocent life which comes from such causes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. There is an officer to do that now, is there not?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I am informed that there is not, and that this bill is necessary in order to make the existing system thoroughly effective.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to state the number of persons that are now engaged in this line of business.

Mr. HOLMAN. In this particular branch of making inspections, etc., in connection with health, the number of officers and employees covers this entire page of paper which I hold in my hand.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two in support of the position of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. It is well for us to bear in mind that the financial system of this District is based on the idea that one-half the revenues of the District are to be raised by taxation on the people and that the rest of the country, or the general Treasury, is to pay the other half.

Now, we have already created here a corps of officers and employees, just referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, who are paid for out of the general Treasury, and yet the moment we are confronted with the question of the disposition of these fees, gentlemen insist that the rule shall not obtain. There is nothing narrow in the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. The idea that we shall be compelled to pay one-half of the expenditure of this District, enormous as it is, upon the theory that we own one-half the property, although that one-half, when you come to investigate, consists largely in the streets of the city, is so absurd as to be repugnant to the common sense of any gentleman to whose attention it is brought.

But that is the existing rule; yet, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] simply asks that that rule shall be adhered to in a matter of this kind it seems to excite in some minds impatience. For one I am prepared to vote to change the basis whenever I can get an opportunity to do so, but while it exists, bad as it is, I intend, so far as my voice and my vote will go, to insist that it shall be enforced and that the abuse shall not be enlarged.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on the amendment I ask permission to put into the RECORD this list of persons already employed in this District in connection with health matters, with the salaries paid to them. They number 38 and over.

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.
The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I have sent for a copy of the Senate bill, but can not procure it. The bill was read here from the Senate manuscript. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of it whether the bill does not provide that before any man can establish himself here as a plumber he must give bonds to the District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; he must file a bond in a certain amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. What amount.
Mr. HEMPHILL (reading):

In such amount and with such number of sureties as the said Commissioners shall determine.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, I ask the gentleman whether he thinks that is legislation in the right line? I would legislate to place these plumbers under severe inspection, to subject them to as severe rules and restrictions as may be justifiable; but I do not believe in compelling a young man, when he commences business, to take out a bond that he will transact his business in a particular way. I think it would operate as a discrimination against young men desiring to start business, who might not be able to procure the required bond, and who might thus be excluded from business as plumbers. Make your restrictions as severe as you please, but do not compel young men beginning business to give bond.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Coming as I do from a country town, I am not very well informed from personal experience as to these matters; but I have had occasion to look into this question with some interest, and I find that there is a rule of this kind in a great many other cities.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. So, too, a great many murders have been committed this year; still, murder is a poor business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Murder is a violation of law; but here we are trying to make people conform to the law. There is this to be said: if in the future we should find that the Commissioners have exercised this power with any degree of harshness it would be very easy for Congress to correct the evil. It appears that at present the plumbing and sanitary regulations here amount practically to nothing. This bill, as I understand, is not opposed by any person who is interested as a taxpayer or who follows the business of plumbing. None of the reputable plumbers of this city, so far as I know, object to this measure; in fact, nobody, as I understand, makes any objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Of course the plumbers now in business would not object.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There may be a great many people here desiring to follow this business who could not give bonds; and the reason is that they are not suitable persons to carry on the business—they are not experts. We are not proposing to adopt a harsher rule than that which already prevails in many other cities of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina an amendment to an amendment already adopted on motion of the committee. Between lines 11 and 12 there have been inserted the words "or on complaint of any reputable citizen." I move to amend by inserting after the word "complaint" the words "under oath." I think a citizen's home should not be invaded upon complaint of an outsider, unless that complaint be made under oath.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I cheerfully assent to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the words suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be inserted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I move to amend by striking out the second section of the bill. This section provides—

That the said Commissioners and their successors be, and they hereby are, authorized and empowered to require every person licensed to practice the business of plumbing in the District of Columbia, before engaging in said business, to file a bond in such amount and with such number of sureties as the said Commissioners shall determine, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all work in compliance with the plumbing regulations, and that the District of Columbia shall be kept harmless from the consequence of any and all acts of the said licensee during the period covered by the said bond.

This covers all acts, whether of omission or commission. The section requires a bond resting upon such contingencies that very few men would be willing to sign it. I reiterate the point I have already made that we ought not to compel a young man beginning business for himself to give a bond like this. Make the restrictions as severe as you choose; and if a plumber does not properly perform his duties, deprive him of his license; but to provide that a young man beginning business of this sort, without capital and trying to work his way up, shall be required at the start to give a stringent bond of this sort, must operate as a discouragement upon industry and enterprise—a discouragement to which young men ought not to be subjected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. In Chicago the law requires in these cases a bond of $3,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Well, I do not think any the better of Chicago for that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest that we limit the amount of the bond in this case to a sum not exceeding $2,000. Any young man of good character could easily give such a bond.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does the gentleman move that as an amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "amount," in line 5, the words "not exceeding $2,000," so as to read, "a bond in such amount not exceeding $2,000, and with such number of sureties," etc.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina will be agreed to. There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, I move to strike out the section as amended:

The motion of Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey was rejected. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DEPOSITS IN BUILDING AND OTHER ASSOCIATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6794) regulating deposits in building and other associations in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any deposit shall be made in any building and loan association, savings bank, or other institution authorized by law to receive deposits, by or in the name of any person being a minor, or a female being or thereafter becoming a married woman, the same shall be held for the exclusive right and benefit of such depositor, and free from the control or lien of all persons whatsoever, except creditors, and shall be paid, together with the dividends or interest thereon, to the person in whose name the deposit shall have been made; and the receipt or acquittance of such minor or female shall be a valid and sufficient release and discharge for such deposit, or any part thereof, to the corporation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is a bill that simply provides where a person accumulates money and puts it in a savings bank, a building or loan association, or other like institution authorized to receive money on deposit, that their receipt shall be sufficient for it, even though the party be under age.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY,

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up for consideration the bill (S. 2015) to amend the act incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company is hereby authorized and required to change its tracks as follows: Commencing at M and High streets, in the city of Georgetown; thence west along M street to the Aqueduct bridge: Provided, That the terminal points hereby authorized shall be located, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so as not to interfere with access to the said Aqueduct bridge.

SEC. 2. That the changes hereby authorized and required shall be made, and cars shall be operated on the extension of the line, by December 1, 1892; and during the laying of said tracks, the amount of street to be opened at any one time, and the closing of any cross streets, shall be subject to the orders of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Any damages to, or changes in, any underground conduits, made necessary by reason of the construction of the road, shall be made at the expense of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill was introduced into the Senate, and passed that body. It is a bill authorizing and requiring the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company to extend its road from M and High streets to what is known as the District end of the Aqueduct bridge. M street, at Thirty-second, is the present terminus in Georgetown of the road, and if the road is to be extended at all to the bridge the bill ought to be passed now while the cable is being put down on the present line of road, in order that the whole system may be completed at the same time. The Senate, as I have said, have passed the bill, and it has met with very favorable consideration in this House, because at an early date the Grand Army of the Republic will meet here and there will be, of course, a large number of people present, many of whom will desire to visit the cemetery at Arlington. There is now a road constructed from the other end of the Aqueduct bridge, on the Virginia shore, to Arlington Cemetery, but there is no road, either from the city of Washington or Georgetown, to the bridge. The nearest approach to it is the terminus of this Washington and Georgetown line at M street.

If the House chooses to pass this bill it will enable the persons who are here at the meeting of the Grand Army, or, in fact, at any other time, to reach that bridge and for one fare, and after crossing the bridge, to take the street-car line on the other side and visit Arlington Cemetery at a cost not exceeding 10 cents; whereas now it requires the hiring of a hack to reach the bridge at all. The bill fixes the time within which this work shall be completed as December 1, 1892. The railroad authorities have not asked for the bill, and they are willing that it shall be passed or not be passed; but they desire if it is to be passed at all that action be taken promptly, so as to enable them to go on with the work.

The House can pass the bill or not just as they see fit, and they can limit the time to any reasonable period for the completion of the work. The railroad authorities inform me that if it be passed they can have the road in running order by the time the Grand Army meets here. But it will be hardly fair to limit them to that time, because some unforeseen accident might happen which would necessitate some further delay and make it beyond their power to comply with the law. They can not do all these things themselves; they are compelled to have all the ribs and ties and cables and matters of that kind manufactured, and are consequently dependent upon the manufacturing establishments for them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like, if the gentleman would permit me, to read a short item from the Washington Post of this morning.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. It is as follows:

RAPID TRANSIT TO ARLINGTON.

Since the passage of the bill authorizing the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company to extend its tracks on M street from their present terminus at the stables to the District end of the Aqueduct bridge there is a prospect of easier access to Arlington during the coming encampment. The Washington and Arlington Electric Road promises to have the Virginia section of its line completed by the same time, so that there will be no break in the line of track, except the length of the Aqueduct Bridge, and for the convenience of those who wish it, even this interval will probably be satisfactorily spanned.

I think that tells the whole story.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ought to state that of course there is no authority here for the railroad company to go over the Aqueduct bridge. A railroad was chartered on the other side which proposed to go across on that bridge, and the House of Representatives refused to grant the authority. So far as I am concerned I should oppose any railroad coming across the bridge; and so far as this bill is concerned it is entirely immaterial to me whether it is rejected or passed. I do not care a snap of the finger one way or the other.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Let me ask the gentleman why he opposes the granting of a charter to allow a railroad company to cross that bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, because it is a bridge that you can not well cross with vehicles as well as with cars. It is a public bridge and was built for the benefit of the public, and not with the expectation of being used for the benefit of any corporation, but for the general public. The bridge itself is too narrow for vehicles and cars to cross it.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman this further question: I believe this road is to be completed by the railroad company up to the Aqueduct bridge by December 31?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Are there not some other railroads that would build that road before that time and be sure to have it done in time?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I do not know about that. There was a road chartered to go from Arlington down to M street, but they used an overhead electric wire, they were authorized to pass over a part of the tracks of the Washington and Georgetown road, but they said they could not use it at present and asked permission to change their route, cross the river at a different point and come down into the city on their own track.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Well, are there not several other street railway companies besides the one mentioned in this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There are none of them that go in that direction, that I know of.

Mr. BUSHNELL. And that might finish the line sooner?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; there are none of them can complete the road any sooner; and there is this about it, that if any other railroad goes there of course everybody must get out at this M street station and change cars, while if this one line goes straight through there will be no change of cars except at the bridge.

Mr. HEARD. I only want to say that this proposition is simply to authorize and require the Washington and Georgetown road to extend its line up to the neighborhood of the Aqueduct bridge, instead of leaving a gap of about four or five blocks. Last year there was a proposition of another railroad company to begin at the terminus of this road and build up to the bridge and across. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. HEMPHILL] says, Congress refused that for two reasons. The committee, as well as the two Houses of Congress, were opposed to granting to any railroad company the privilege of crossing the surface of the Aqueduct bridge.

It is not a wide enough or strong enough bridge to justify its use for such purposes, and besides it was built for the benefit of the public, outside of the railroad companies, and we have been trying to make them build their own bridge. That was one reason. Another reason is, that this is a stretch of only about four blocks, and when the railroad is thus extended it will be one road and one fare clear to the Aqueduct bridge, which is and always will be a focal point in railroad street travel in this city. We believe there is every reason why the road should be extended there, and, as the chairman of our committee has well said, it is of vital importance to every patron of this road that the terminal plant shall be put in at the beginning, because otherwise, if it is put in at the present terminus and has to be changed, the road will necessarily be idle while that change is being made.

I understand the company to say that while this bill gives them until December that they do not expect to require one hour beyond the 6th day of August. They ask this out of an abundance of caution, but at the same time they say they expect to put their men at work immediately if we pass this now, and have it in operation together with the rest of the line before the Grand Army encampment in September. I think it is in the interest of the public that this bill should pass.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress a railroad chartered in the State of Virginia sought authority of Congress to provide for an extension of its line across the Aqueduct bridge and on to the terminus of the present line of the railroad now under discussion.

Mr. HEARD. The terminus of the Washington and Georgetown road?

Mr. BLOUNT. The Washington and Georgetown Railroad. Objection was made to that bill on several grounds. The first was on the part of the Secretary of War, to the placing of any line of railway on that bridge, on the ground of its strength. The second objection was that that bridge was one mode of access to the people of the United States and to the people of this locality in resorting to Arlington; and the third objection was a proposition to pass a bill introduced by Mr. Lee of Virginia, to incorporate the Washington and Arlington Railway Company of the District of Columbia—

Beginning at Seventh street and B street northwest; along B street and Virginia avenue northwest to Twenty-sixth street; along Twenty-sixth street to M street, along M street and Canal road to a point on the Potomac River at or near the point known as "The Three Sisters," where the said company is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Potomac River on such plans as the Secretary of War may approve; and from thence by, on, and over such lines as may be selected by the said company, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to the northwest entrance of the Arlington Cemetery, and thence through the Arlington estate to the south or west line thereof, in the State of Virginia: Provided, That should any part of the track herein authorized coincide with portions of any other duly incorporated street railway in the District of Columbia but one set of tracks shall be used when, on account of the width of the street, or for other sufficient reason, it shall be deemed necessary by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the relative conditions of use and of chartered rights may be adjusted upon terms to be mutually agreed upon between the companies, or, in the case of disagreement, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on petition filed therein by either party, and by such notice to the other party as the court may order.

This was an extensive bill, and I shall not take the time to read it to the House. There was a bill defeated, to which I have already referred, contemplating a commencement at the terminus at the present road across the Aqueduct bridge, going down to Alexandria and to some watering place, and it was very much urged by some friends of that section. But the House refused to grant any charter for any such purpose. The House believed that it was possible, and they were assured by the members of the District Committee that there was a company eagerly desiring a charter on the very line that I have indicated, which would not touch the Aqueduct bridge, which would go for one fare from Seventh street along the line indicated, down to and through Arlington, and, if need be, on to Mount Vernon, furnishing a most desirable line for the people of the United States visiting the capital to make over this company's line a way to this point of public interest. I say this bill, proposing the crossing of the Aqueduct bridge, as then proposed, was defeated, as I have stated, and this one which I have read in part was substituted for it.

Now, sir, what is the present situation? We have been told that there is a line chartered by the State of Virginia for the building of a road up to the Aqueduct bridge. There is in the Senate at this time a bill introduced by Mr. PETTIGREW—

That pending the building of the bridge—

That is, by the company referred to in this bill which I have read—over the Potomac River at or near a point known as Three Sisters, the construction and maintenance of which is authorized in the act approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Arlington Railway Company of the District of Columbia," and during the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held in the city of Washington in the year 1892, the Washington and Arlington Railway Company be, and is hereby, authorized and permitted to lay and maintain its track across the Aqueduct bridge over the Potomac River and its approaches in such manner and upon such conditions as shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, etc.

Then it goes on to provide for its consolidation with the Pennsylvania line or any other line that sees fit.

It is true, sir, that this bill has not become a law.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I want to state for the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia, and also of the House, that the Secretary of War and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have reported adversely on that proposition. I understand from publications in the newspapers that the Senate committee have also reported adversely on it, and so has the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House. So that all are unanimous in their condemnation of that proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. But that does not meet the suggestion I have made to this House. Here is a bill at this time in the Senate of the United States providing for a road running across that bridge. Here, by way of inducement, is a suggestion that there is to be an encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic held in this city during the year 1892; and this bill provides that it shall be completed in 1892, perhaps after the encampment is over. So that this little suggestion of an encampment is one of those things which is likely to mislead.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And the Grand Army has not asked for it.

Mr. BLOUNT. And, as the gentleman says, the Grand Army has not asked for it; and if they had, it does not meet any such situation. Then what do you find? A significant thing just at this time, a charter has been granted by the State of Virginia to build a road up to the Aqueduct bridge on the other side, and this proposition to allow this company to build its line up to the Aqueduct bridge with nothing in the way of union of the two lines except the bridge. When each shall have been completed, Mr. Speaker, how suggestive the situation to allow them just to cross over the bridge, if not for the benefit of the Grand Army, for some other matter with which Washington is eternally crowded. If this measure is passed, Mr. Speaker, I predict—and I do not claim to have great capacity of foresight in that way—the time will soon come when the necessity for the crossing of this bridge will be urged.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] says that the District Commissioners do not approve the crossing of the bridge. It would be an unfortunate time to approve it, Mr. Speaker, just now. Again, the District Commissioners are not life occupants of office. They shift, and they are generally in accord with the influences at the Federal capital. The Secretary of War is opposed to it, it is said; and yet, Mr. Speaker, he may be changed, and the reasons will change when you have this road running up to the Aqueduct bridge from the Virginia direction. Are you not bringing to bear an influence to stop the building of a railroad which is now built under a charter, and designed to go to Arlington and Mount Vernon, the very places the American people want to go.

Are you not putting this in the way of it? And, Mr. Speaker, is it not likely that a further suggestion of the incorporation of this company under the Washington and Georgetown Company may be here for consideration hereafter. You have the fact, Mr. Speaker, and I believe it has not been gainsaid, that a railroad company is building a line near to the Aqueduct bridge, at the Three Sisters, from the city of Washington, along down to Arlington and Mount Vernon, and that they have a charter for that purpose. You have that fact proposed to you now. Then why amend this charter to allow this railroad to run its line up to this bridge when it only lacks three blocks of being there now. What is the purpose? Why, the people are accommodated by the other line, and are better accommodated, and likely, under the terms of its charter, at one fare. There is some regulation as to the fare. Then why, sir, shall we go on and provide that this company shall be allowed to extend its line up to that bridge?

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Would it accomplish the object that the gentleman desires if we were to insert a provision in this bill to prevent the use of the bridge at any time in the future by this company?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, if I knew that provision of law would not be repealed on the suggestion of the Committee on the District of Columbia when they wanted it, I would say "yes."

Mr. HEARD. I would give any assurance that way, so far as I am concerned—of course I can not speak for the Committee on the District of Columbia—but so far as I am informed, I am satisfied that the committee is adverse to the use of that bridge. They have so voted and so reported whenever a proposition has been before them to permit the crossing of a railroad over that bridge.

Mr. BLOUNT. What I have been saying has not been any reflection on the view of my friend from Missouri, nor on any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I am discussing only the probable situation, and I am asking this House to act as this body did in the last Congress. Turn away from this scheme which points to the final passage over that Aqueduct bridge belonging to the Government by this corporation. Turn away from it, and do as the last House did; turn to this road which proposes to build its own line and its own bridge across the river at the Three Sisters, which is the very point of the river at which the bridge ought to be built. Build this line, make this situation, and how probable it is that you will stifle the other project. I am unwilling, sir, in view of the assurances that we had in the last House, assurances given by my friend from Missouri himself, that that company were able and willing to construct that line. I am unwilling to put this obstacle in the way of its completion.

Mr. HEARD. Does not my friend know that the company to which he refers have a charter now authorizing them to run over this track, and that if the Washington and Georgetown Company is permitted to extend its line as contemplated, still the other company can run over its track, as it is already authorized to run, over six blocks of the road already built by the Washington and Georgetown Company.

This bill will not hinder the other company from its right to go over these tracks which this company may put down. It is true, as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] suggests, with the power they contemplated using, they could not run over those six blocks, or over the rest of the track, for the reason that there would be a conflict in the application of motive power. But I repeat to my friend from Georgia that this other company to which he refers can use the six blocks already constructed as well as these four blocks if constructed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want any tracks put along there. This Washington and Georgetown road runs now within three blocks of that bridge. It has not been contemplated that there shall be any railroad approaches to that bridge, and for one I think we should maintain that situation.

Mr. HEARD. The other line that the gentleman refers to runs by the end of the bridge.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that this whole matter came up before the last House and was thoroughly discussed, and that the proposition to extend this line in the way here proposed was voted down by a vote of more than 4 to 1; and I regret very much that the sudden and unexpected bringing up of this bill at this time has left me no opportunity to gather together and exhibit to the House the bills that were then pending, the debate that was then had, and the action of the House. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after the end of section 2: And said Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall, and is hereby required, to run its cars at not less than half hour intervals on its various lines between the hours of 12 o'clock midnight and 6 o'clock a. m.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I hope the committee will offer no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The only trouble about that is that, as I understand the matter, the cable can not be run the whole twenty-four hours, it being essential that there shall be some time between midnight and daylight for inspection and repair. Otherwise the cable is liable to get out of order or to break and stop the entire machinery of the road. I would not object to an amendment requiring the company to run cars up to certain hours, say 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning; but, I repeat, it is necessary to the successful operation of the cable system that there shall be some time when it is not running, and when they can put their men at work to go over the whole of it and see that it is in order, or repair it if it is out of order.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I am aware of that, but there is nothing to prevent them from running horse cars at those hours.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The trouble about that is that they will have no horses when they abandon that form of power.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Oh, no railroad company will ever do away with horses entirely. They must keep horses for some purpose, and can use them for this purpose if necessary. This is a thing that is asked for by all the newspaper men and by a great number of the regular residents. I am credibly informed that this company last year ran its cars all night while Congress was in session and made a promise to the committee that it would keep on running them throughout the year, but that when Congress adjourned it immediately stopped them.

Now, I submit that this accommodation is required by the people, and that it is no more than is afforded by the street railroads in every large city. Notwithstanding the claim that it will not pay, I believe it will pay; but even if these particular cars do not pay, yet the road as a whole, taken for the twenty-four hours, pays well, and this accommodation is due to the public who require and demand it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state that there is a bill pending before the committee providing for that very thing. I think it is a matter of some consequence both to the public (I have been a sufferer myself) and also to the railroad company, but, while the company are in process of adopting this new power, it would be hardly fair to them without investigation to put this additional obligation upon them.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. What investigation do you want?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I understand that the railroad did run cars for twelve months in this way, and that they averaged only eight passengers, some of these being fellows who had got drunk and wanted to ride until they got sober [laughter], a class of persons who ought not to be encouraged either by day or by night. Now, if the gentleman will allow this to come up in a separate bill, as it will when reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, it can then receive the action of the House.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I prefer to have it taken as an amendment to his bill, and I want a vote upon it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, of course I can not object to a vote upon it.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of having these all-night cars, or at least cars which will answer substantially the end in view. I do not say that they must be run every hour between midnight and morning, but the company ought to come near enough to that to afford transportation to that portion of the public who may reasonably demand it. As stated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], there is pending before our committee a bill in relation to this very matter; and it being a subject which comes within my particular province of investigation, I will state that I have been waiting simply because a bill introduced in the Senate by Senator HANSBROUGH has been considered by the District committee in the Senate, and I understand that he and Senator FAULKNER have been trying to arrange a compromise on the basis of the company running until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. Having received that information, I delayed considering the House bill in our subcommittee.

I am in favor of requiring the company to give such service as is necessary and as the people may reasonably expect at night. It may be that we should fix the limit of this night service at 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock (the company begin regular trips at 5 o'clock). At all events, I do say that the company ought to be required to furnish reasonable transportation to people who require it between midnight and daylight.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says about this road going to the Aqueduct bridge; but it is only a question whether or not persons desiring to go to Arlington shall be compelled to hire a hack at an expense of $3 or $4, or shall have to walk four or five blocks from the present terminus of the railroad to the bridge, all because it is possible that at some future day some other Congress may authorize this road to run its track over the Aqueduct bridge.

That is all there is in it. He does not claim that we are going to do it under this bill, or that there is any provision here for it. But we have already chartered a road, or rather, under the authority of the Secretary of War, a road chartered by the State of Virginia comes down to the other end of the Aqueduct bridge. If this road should be extended to this end of the bridge, persons desiring to go or come to one side or the other will simply have to walk across the bridge.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman will allow me to say that as I am advised only 1,000 feet of track remain to be provided between Arlington and the Aqueduct bridge.

Mr. HEMPHILL. So I understand; and it is expected that this road will be in operation some time in May.

I will state further that not one person connected with this railroad has been before our committee asking for the passage of this bill. It has been introduced in the interest of the public, so as to require the road to be extended in this way. If the House is satisfied that the public will be inconvenienced by the bill, let it be passed; if satisfied that it would not be wise to adopt the measure, I am perfectly willing it shall be voted down.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from South Carolina says this is simply a question whether we shall do without the convenience now offered us because of the possibility of some future Congress authorizing the building of a line that will better accommodate the public.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I said, "because some future Congress may authorize one of these lines to be extended across the Aqueduct bridge."

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well; because some future Congress may authorize the running of this or some other road across the Aqueduct bridge. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not all of the story. There was a struggle in the last Congress on the part of one company to get the use of this bridge to cross the river upon it, and we defeated the proposition; we passed a bill chartering another company to build a line which will not touch this bridge, but is required to build a bridge of its own across the Three Sisters. The difficulty is that when you begin with this sort of legislation you interrupt and discourage the progress of the other work. There has been a standing pressure here on the part of different corporations to get the right to cross that bridge. As the bridge has been built by the Government, if they can get the right of way across it they avoid the expense of building a bridge of their own, and if permitted they would use that bridge even though the public should thereby be greatly inconvenienced.

I trust the House will not hesitate to dispose of this bill adversely. The proposition is made here that the company shall be allowed till December, 1892, to build the road; that is all you require of them; yet gentlemen come into this House and say, "We want this road for the Grand Army when it comes." But the Grand Army will come and go before the period mentioned will arrive.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not say we wanted the road for that occasion; I said that had been suggested.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care what gentleman may have said it; that has been presented here as one of the reasons why this bill should pass.

Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I trust that question will not be voted on until there has been some further discussion of this measure.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. If the people of the District do not want the bill, why not lay it on the table?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The people of the District do want it, as I understand. The Virginia company referred to has built its road down to the other side of the bridge; and I know no reason why this company should not extend its road to this side. The other company, if it comes across, will have the entire monopoly of the business—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that unless by unanimous consent the pending motion to lay the bill on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HEARD. I hope my friend from Georgia will not insist on his motion for a few moments. If he will withdraw it, I will yield the floor to him to renew it. I wish to say a few words by way of correcting some of the mistakes of the gentleman from Georgia, which I am sure he does not desire the House to accept, if I can show that he has been in error.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am perfectly willing the gentleman shall be heard. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Georgia has, with perfect honesty of purpose I am sure, but under a misapprehension of the facts, stated that this measure would operate to discourage the completion of the road which has been chartered to go across the river on a bridge of its own construction. That is an error. This will have no effect whatever on that proposition. The company already chartered proposes to go over six blocks of road now built by this company, and if it goes on the route which its charter now authorizes at all, it will go over these four blocks of new road to be built—will go right to the end of this bridge and beyond. My friend, therefore, is mistaken in saying that the road already chartered does not tend in this direction. By the terms of its charter it goes exactly over the route on which this company is expected and required by this bill to build its road.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that people riding on the Washington and Georgetown road can now go to its terminus for one fare. If the company should extend its line four blocks farther they could still go to the end of the route for one fare; the company would get no more for carrying passengers to this extended point than they now get, but the public would get a fuller and better service. But, you can see that if the road to which my friend from Georgia refers is completed along this line by the Aqueduct bridge and on to the region of the Three Sisters, it is an additional reason why this line should be extended from its present terminus to the Aqueduct bridge, because it gives facilities for passengers to ride on one continuous line for one fare, and connect with the road carrying them to Arlington. It will be a decided advantage to the traveling public.

Therefore, my friend, if he will consider for a moment, will see that this will give to all the patrons of this road a great advantage. You can now go to M and Thirty-second streets by the Washington and Georgetown line; but that is four blocks from the Aqueduct bridge. This extension will give those who wish to go to the bridge or desire to connect with the other road the advantage of riding this additional four blocks and enable them to connect with Arlington. That is all there is in this bill. It does not propose to give any right to cross the bridge. And it seems to me that these people should be permitted—that they should be in fact compelled—to extend this road, and that the gentleman from Georgia should be as earnest in that direction as he is in opposition to the bill.

But the position of my friend from Georgia that we should refuse to compel these people or permit them, rather, to put in these four blocks for fear that at some time, at some point in the future, by some authority or other they would get the right to cross the bridge, is, I submit, not up to the ordinary measure of that gentleman's foresight in legislation; because he knows just as well as I do that this Congress can impose no restraints or limitations on any other Congress. So far as this Congress is concerned I know that it is so in this House and in the District Committee and that it was so in the Committee on the District of Columbia in the Senate the members have expressed themselves as being in line with the District Commissioners and the Secretary of War against permitting anybody to build a railroad across that bridge.

But because we do not want to go across is no argument why we should not build the line up to the bridge or permit them to go as near to the bridge as possible without interfering with the traffic across it. If they can get a charter hereafter from Congress to cross the bridge they can easily get a charter to extend the line up to the bridge. But there is a decided advantage in building the line up to the bridge now, if it is to be built at all.

As the gentleman from Georgia has stated, this road which is chartered in Virginia is, as I am advised, completed, except about 1,000 feet of it, down to the bridge on that side of the river. Now, if this road is completed or permitted to be built on this side, and that other road is completed down to the bridge, it will give passengers who desire to go to Arlington an almost continuous line. They will only have to cross the bridge and get on the cars on the other side. I respectfully submit, if the gentleman apprehends that this road entertains any covert design hidden in the provisions of this bill by which they can have access to the bridge hereafter, that he had better insert a modification so that this company can not be authorized to cross the bridge. Let a provision be inserted that they shall never go over the bridge. True it will never bind any future Congress, but it will express as plainly as we can that we want to give no such right by this legislation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, most earnestly, that there has never, to my mind, been a proposition more plainly in the interests of the public than this one. True, this railroad company does not ask the privilege, but no doubt they will be glad to get it if it is given them. The chairman of the District Committee in the Senate introduced the bill and his committee recommended it.

But even if this railroad company were not willing to extend their road I for one should be in favor of compelling them to do it before putting in their terminal plant. I would require that they should complete the road up to the Aqueduct bridge before they could run a foot of the cables now being put in on their lines to save to the public the inconvenience which must necessarily flow to them by the stoppage of the cars on the road long enough to change the terminal plant hereafter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that during the last Congress, when the bill was pending providing for the completion of a line to which my friend has just referred on the Virginia side of the river, and which provided for the crossing of the Aqueduct bridge, when it was objected that they should not be allowed to cross it, the argument was made, and was not denied, that unless they were allowed to do so the road would not be self-sustaining. The men in charge of that matter, who have constructed that nonpaying road, perhaps can see further than our friend from Missouri, who complains of my own shortsightedness, and expect to find their way over that bridge and into connection with the Pennsylvania avenue line, and the incorporation of the one with the other at some time hereafter.

Mr. HEARD. They can not, without the authority of Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why, certainly not. But of course this Congress does not legislate for all time.

Mr. HEARD. Well, we are only responsible for what we do legislate for.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend says that is all we are responsible for. Perhaps he is content with that. We are making conditions every day in the shape of new legislation; and when you shall have passed this bill and have this road running up to that bridge, these men in Virginia, with business shrewdness, who are just across the line, will say we have a provision here in the shape of new legislation that will make some other new legislation altogether desirable in the minds of some persons. It would not be long before an effort was made to secure a consolidation of the two lines.

No, sir, there is no danger about communication between this city and Arlington and Mount Vernon, over a bridge not furnished to a corporation by the Government, but furnished by the parties themselves. You have chartered another road purposely to avoid this very thing. Let us stand by what we have done.

I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I trust that will not be done.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 42, noes 14.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will have to ask for tellers.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has other bills. He had better let this go.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will let it go and take a vote on it next District day.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the bill go over until the next District day.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, there has no quorum voted. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 22.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the motion to adjourn is going to be put—

Mr. RICHARDSON. No quorum has voted, and we had better adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the point of no quorum is made, the Chair will submit the motion to adjourn. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make the point?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I make the point.

The motion of Mr. RICHARDSON was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

He also presented a petition of the faculty and students of Ashland University, Ohio, and a petition of the Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ohio, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday, that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited on the grounds, and that the art department be managed according to the American standard of purity in art; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, containing 184 individual signatures of citizens of Nebraska City, Nebr., and a petition of citizens of Aurora, Hamilton County, Nebr., praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WALTHALL presented a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, would respectfully show that the proposed appropriation of $28,000 by your honorable body for the improvement of the navigation of Pearl River is wholly insufficient, and if the amount named can not be increased, then such sum can be much more advantageously expended than in the way specified in the bill, which provides for the expenditure of $10,000 from Edinburg, the head of navigation of the river, to the city of Jackson, and from Jackson to where the river forms a junction with Lake Borgne, the sum of $18,000.

Jackson is the capital of the State, a railroad center and a city of commercial importance. Here the river, in its southward course, first touches a railroad point, and below Jackson it again diverges and runs through a territory not accessible to railroads. This makes Jackson the railroad shipping point and market place for all staves, timber, cotton, and other produce transported on the upper river and in a great measure the entire river.

In the immediate vicinity of Jackson the stream is very crooked. Salt Peter Point is just above the city. From it in a direct line to the bridge which crosses the river leading into Jackson, the distance is only 1½ miles, while around the bends of the stream the distance is about 7 miles. From Salt Peter Point there is a small channel about 40 feet wide and 14 feet deep, known as Tan Yard Branch, which extends from one bend of the river to another. By the expenditure of $12,000 the river could be turned into this channel, the effect of which would be to straighten the stream and greatly diminish the distance between the points above mentioned. On the road leading into Jackson from the east is a very fine bridge across the river, which bridge has lengthy approaches, the whole structure being of iron and recently erected at great cost.

This is the main entrance for the wagon and country trade for Jackson, and is therefore not only of the greatest importance and benefit to the city but to the country east and southeast of the city for a distance of 40 or 50 miles. Just below this bridge is the crossing of the Alabama and Vicksburg Railway. By reason of the tortuous course of the stream just above the city there is now, and has been for some years, a tendency on the part of the river to break across at a point east of and above the bridges above mentioned. If this cut-off should occur, the channel of the river would be thrown further to the east, and the bridges above mentioned would only be serviceable for crossing the old bed of the stream, and other bridges with other long and expensive approaches would have to be erected over the newly made channel. This threatened change in the course of the stream, if it should occur, would very seriously impair the navigation of the river and would greatly interfere with public travel and commerce, to say nothing of the great expense which would be made necessary in order to build other bridges. The situation here described and the threatened break in the river will be observed by reference to the accompanying map.

Your memorialist would therefore respectfully ask an additional appropriation, of say $12,000, to change the course of the stream as above indicated. This sum, together with that which has already been recommended, would constitute but a small outlay by the Government, when the importance of the object in view by the expenditure is taken into consideration. But if the present bill is so perfected that an additional amount can not be appropriated, then your memorialist would urge that the sum last mentioned be taken from the general appropriation for the improvement of the river and expended for the purpose of straightening the channel of the stream as suggested. To straighten the channel as here shown will not only prevent the threatened disastrous break, but would greatly lessen the work of improving the navigation of the river north of Salt Peter Point, and the change would render the river north of Jackson much more suitable for the rafting of logs and the transportation of timber, lumber, etc.

Trusting that the suggestion here made will meet your approval, your memorialist will ever pray, etc.

I certify that the foregoing memorial was adopted by the house of representatives of Mississippi March 31, 1892.

R. E. WILSON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

I certify that the foregoing memorial was adopted by the senate of the State of Mississippi March 28, 1892.

D. P. PORTER,

Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi earnestly requests the attention of the honorable Congress of the United States to the necessity and importance of improving the navigation of the Homochitto River. The present condition of the river is such as to demand immediate attention. Owing to obstructions in and near the mouth of the river it is impossible to navigate the same, although by the surveys and reports of competent engineers the river is susceptible of navigation as far as Bucks Ferry, or some 25 miles of its course; that thousands of acres of the most valuable lands in the State are rendered useless by reason of the obstructions mentioned, thus causing the river to overflow its banks. That by the reports of said engineers and estimates made for the restoration of deep water, and to render said river navigable and restore said lands to use, it would require that a canal be opened to the Mississippi River connected with the channel of the river, at a cost of, say, $20,000, which sum is insignificant in comparison with the beneficial effects to the inhabitants of that section of the State, thus increasing the value and importance of said river, and would greatly facilitate and cheapen transportation, and thus materially contribute to the commercial interests of the State.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully ask that the honorable Congress of the United States will make the necessary appropriation and cause this much needed improvement to be begun at as early a day as practicable under the supervision and control of competent officers of the United States Engineer Corps. And your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That the governor be respectfully requested to forward the accompanying memorial to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house of representatives March 18, 1892.

R. E. WILSON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate March 25, 1892.

D. P. PORTER,

Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a memorial of the board of governors of the Chamber of Commerce of Petersburg, Va., remonstrating against the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

SANITARY CONDITION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 7th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses incurred by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in making the examination of the sanitary condition of the Capitol, and especially the structure recently built on the terrace of the Capitol and the tunnels through which the air is pumped through the two wings of the building, etc., adopted March 22, 1892, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MRS. NANCY G. ALLABACH.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FRYE March 7, 1892, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Nancy G. Allabach, widow of P. H. Allabach, late captain of the Capitol police, the sum of $800, being an amount equal to six months' salary at the rate per annum allowed by law to such captain aforesaid; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CONDITION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], with an amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to recommend the passage of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by one or more subcommittees, or otherwise, to ascertain in every practicable way, and to report from time to time to the Senate, the present condition of agriculture in the United States, and the present prices of agricultural products, and if there be any of which the prices are depressed, then the causes of such depression and the remedies therefor.

And for this purpose that they be authorized by subcommittee, or otherwise, to sit during the recess and sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, and that they may employ a stenographer and such clerical assistance and experts as they may deem necessary, and that they be authorized to send for persons and papers, and the expense of such investigation be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as a substitute for the original resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain in every practicable way, and report from time to time to the Senate, the present condition of agriculture in the United States, and the present prices of agricultural products; and if there be any of which the prices are depressed, then the causes of such depression and the remedies therefor. And particularly whether the reports of the Department of Agriculture on the distribution and consumption of farm products, published from time to time by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, contribute in any way to such depression of the market prices of such products, and whether any proper governmental purpose is subserved by such publication, and whether such publication should be continued.

And for this purpose that they be authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the recess and sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to employ a stenographer and such clerical assistance and such experts as they may deem necessary, and that they be authorized to send for persons and papers, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed, so that we may look at it and understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and go on the Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2895) for the relief of Abram Jackson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2896) to remove the charges of desertion from the military record of Jonathan T. Forrest; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2897) granting to Leroy Potter an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2898) to authorize a national bank at Chicago, Ill., to establish a branch office upon the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HON. WILLIAM P. KELLOGG.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Hon. William P. Kellogg, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana, the amount due him as Senator in the Fortieth Congress from the 4th day of March, 1867, till he was paid. Said payment to be made from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COURT OF CLAIMS FEES.

Mr. SANDERS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the chief justice and the judges of the Court of Claims, be, and they are hereby, directed to inform the Senate what fees, if any, are charged by the chief clerk, assistant clerk, clerks, bailiff, or messenger of said court for services rendered by them to the Government, or any other parties litigant or their attorneys, in and about the discharge of their respective duties; and if any such fees are charged or received, by virtue of what law, rule of court, direction, or authority the same are so received, the annual sum so received, and what is done with the same.

MINNESOTA POINT BRIDGE AT DULUTH.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report of and the proceedings before the board of engineering officers convened for the purpose of considering and determining as to the construction of a bridge across the canal through Minnesota Point, in the city of Duluth.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a support of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va.;

A bill (H. R. 4330) to repeal House resolution No. 104, first session, Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River;

A bill (H. R. 6658) to vacate that part of Madison street, Georgetown, west of Back street, and extend Y street, in Burleigh, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 6794) regulating deposits in building and other associations in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7081) confirming title to lands in the subdivision of square 206, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 108) extending the time in which certain street railroads compelled by act of Congress approved August 6, 1890, to change their motive power from horse power to mechanical power for one year; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 118) to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1342) for the relief of John R. Blankenship; and

A bill (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1492) to authorize the appointment of an inspector of plumbing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed resolutions commemorative of the life and services of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

BUILDING PERMITS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which has just come over from the other House directing the Commissioners to suspend the issue of permits for the erection of dwelling houses in alleys until the result of pending legislation shall be ascertained. A bill is pending in each body, and has been either passed by the other House or stands upon a favorable report there, prohibiting the erection of dwelling houses in alleys less than 40 feet in width and in alleys which do not extend through the block or are not paved. While this legislation is pending the District Commissioners are flooded with applications for permits to erect dwelling houses in such alleys. The purpose of the joint resolution is to authorize the District Commissioners to suspend the further issuance of these permits for dwelling houses until the wishes of Congress can be ascertained in that regard.

Mr. KENNA. I feel obliged to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KENNA. I regret very much to interpose, but I shall be obliged to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KENNA. I will say to my friend the Senator from Colorado that I will examine the joint resolution and the House bill in the next few minutes, and if I can I will withdraw all objection and let the measure be passed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The object is only to suspend the permits until we can determine what we want to do. If the joint resolution goes over, it simply means that permits will be issued indefinitely, and that there will be no purpose in legislation further to prevent their issuance.

Mr. KENNA. I will say frankly that my objection is not intended as an obstructive one. I will see the Senator in a few moments, as soon as I can examine the joint resolution and the House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH HAITI AND GERMANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolutions submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested, if it is not in his opinion incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate the items of taxation upon imports from the United States imposed by the laws of the Republic of Haiti upon which he has based his finding and proclamation that the tariff laws of Haiti are reciprocally unjust to the United States; and that he send to the Senate the correspondence with the Government of Haiti relating to reductions of taxation under the tariff laws of Haiti that have been proposed by either Government to secure reciprocal justice in tariff taxation between the two Governments.

Resolved, That in like manner the President is requested to send to the Senate any agreement made by him on behalf of the United States with the Imperial Government of Germany, and the correspondence relating to the subject of such agreement, in which it is provided that sugar or any other German production or export shall be admitted free of duty into the United States. And that he inform the Senate what articles of American production he has disposed or demanded that Germany shall receive free of duty or upon a schedule of reduced duties, as the fair reciprocal equivalent of permitting the import into the United States of German sugar, hides, tea, or coffee; and whether such proposals or demands made by the President have been accepted by the Imperial Government of Germany.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. STEWART, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what is the aggregate cost of the silver bullion and standard dollars coined therefrom purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, and now held in the Treasury, and what amount of Treasury notes issued for such purchase is now outstanding; and whether any of such notes have been received by the Treasury in exchange for gold coin or redeemed in gold coin; and what amount of silver coin there is now in the Treasury applicable to the redemption of such notes; and also whether, when such notes are received into the Treasury for customs, taxes, and other public dues, they are reissued or retained in the Treasury; and if any such notes have been retained in the Treasury what amount has been so retained. Are persons selling bullion to the United States under the act of April 14, 1890, required to make immediate delivery and take the bullion so sold out of the market, or are they given time to make such deliveries after having made a contract to supply the United States and deprived others of that opportunity? Does the public have notice of the times, places, and amounts of silver bullion which will be purchased by the United States, or are such purchases made of brokers and bankers without such public notice? Is the business of purchasing silver bullion under the act of July 14, 1890, conducted with a view of depressing the price of bullion and obtaining it as cheap as possible, or with a view of carrying out the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals (gold and silver) on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio? And what amount of gold coin and gold bars is there in the Treasury, exclusive of outstanding gold certificates?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment which I suppose the Senator from Nevada will agree to. In line 5, after the word "Treasury," I move to insert "and a detailed statement of the amount purchased each day, and the date thereof." I want to get the date of the purchases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. STEWART. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted, and the resolution will be so modified.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it appears from the Treasury statement made on April 1, 1892, that the paper circulation of the United States, redeemable in silver and silver coin outside of the Treasury, consist of the following:

Silver certificates	$329,272,852
Silver dollars in circulation	58,471,743
Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890	89,602,198
Currency certificates	29,350,000
United States notes, commonly called greenbacks	346,681,016
National-bank notes	167,829,148
Total	1,021,207,257

The entire amount of gold in the Treasury in excess of outstanding gold certificates is less than one-eighth of the silver and paper which must depend upon it for redemption if silver coin is rejected as money of ultimate payment. But if we add the silver coin and silver bullion on hand to the gold coin there can be no question about the sound financial condition of the Treasury. The amounts are as follows:

Gold coin in excess of outstanding gold certificates	$125,815,040
Standard silver dollars in the Treasury	352,930,220
Silver bullion in the Treasury	61,401,457
Total	540,146,717

This amount is more than 50 per cent of the entire outstanding paper circulation, and under the act of 1890, requiring the purchase of 54,000,000 ounces of silver bullion per annum, nearly seventy millions of silver coin can be added annually; so that under existing law, if silver is treated as good money, the financial condition of the Treasury will be strengthened every day; that is, the coin will increase faster than paper.

Free coinage would for a time increase the metal basis of our circulation still more rapidly. We might not then get a full supply of coin, but the basis would be more than doubled. Does anyone fear inflation by placing behind every paper dollar a silver or a gold dollar? To accomplish that more than $500,000,000 are now required. Is there any doubt that the United States needs all the silver which can be obtained?

The United States is required by law to receive in payment of all public dues, including customs, all dollars issued by the Government of every name or description. If the gold advocates succeed in convincing the public that silver and its paper representatives are not good money, but that dollars of that description are worth but 70 cents and less, will not the people retain their gold and pay Government dues in silver? In any event, can it be anticipated that hereafter any considerable portion of Government dues will be paid in gold when the great mass of the money in circulation consists of silver and paper? If the Government receives payment in silver and paper, how can it pay its obligations in gold?

The Secretary of the Treasury sought to meet this difficulty by proposing to sell bonds and buy gold to redeem the Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890, and in his speech at Delmonico's on the 17th of November last he claimed that right under the following provision in the resumption act of January 14, 1875:

And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D., 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues from time to time in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

This act authorized him to sell bonds to buy gold to redeem United States legal-tender notes outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1879, and for no other purpose. It did not authorize him to sell bonds to buy gold to redeem Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890. On the contrary, that act, while declaring that such Treasury notes might be redeemed in gold or silver coin, declares that the Secretary of the Treasury—shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act so much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for.

It is manifest that gold can not be obtained to redeem the Treasury notes issued and to be issued under the act of 1890 under existing law. There is no possibility of accumulating gold for that purpose or for the purpose of sustaining the other denominations of paper and silver above mentioned in circulation. Silver must be coined and used for the redemption of paper or the Government must repudiate its obligations. The bullion in the silver dollar as compared with gold is worth only about 67 or 68 cents; but it is the established policy of the United States, as declared in the act of 1890, to maintain the two metals (gold and silver) on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio. If this policy were established and maintained it would make no difference to the holder of a United States note, or a Treasury note, or any other obligation against the Government whether he received gold or silver. The question is, how can the established policy of the United States be maintained?

It was maintained from the foundation of the Government until 1873 by allowing the owner of bullion, whether it was silver bullion or gold bullion, to have it coined at the mint into dollars for his benefit at the ratio established by law. By the act of 1873 the owner of silver bullion was denied the privilege of taking his bullion to the mint for coinage. His situation was very similar in that respect, as my colleague [Senator JONES] suggested the other day, to a farmer who should be denied under any circumstances the right to grind or have ground his wheat into flour while his neighbors enjoyed that privilege. The price of the wheat which was denied access to the mill to be ground would necessarily be greatly depreciated in the market. The same thing happened to silver when it was denied the right of coinage in 1873.

Legislation which would restore the money function to silver, give it unlimited coinage at the mint upon the same terms and conditions which apply to the coinage of gold, would establish and maintain the parity of the two metals. In that case it would make no difference to the owner of bullion whether it was gold or silver, because he could have either exchanged at the mint for coin on a parity with each other according to the legal ratio. The free coinage of silver would relieve the Treasury Department of the necessity of violating the law to maintain the gold standard. No one who has any knowledge of the subject contends that there is more than from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 of silver bullion in the world. All other silver has already been used in the arts or coined for circulation. But it is absolutely necessary to have that surplus bullion out of the market to rescue the white metal from the bulls and bears, and make it a standard measure of value equally with gold.

There is no half-way station. If the gold standard is to be maintained and the rule of the gold kings perpetuated, the act of 1890 must be repealed, and the Secretary of the Treasury must be authorized to sell bonds and accumulate gold enough to redeem the paper money and the silver money now outstanding. But no public man dare make so monstrous a proposition. If silver is to be used as money, the silver in the silver dollar must be made equal in value to the gold in the gold dollar, which can only be done by the coinage of silver upon the same conditions which apply to the coinage of gold. If the Government will coin 412½ grains of standard silver into a dollar for the benefit of the depositor upon the same terms and conditions which apply to the coinage of 25.8 grains of standard gold, gold and silver coin will be equal in value, and the market value of the silver bullion required to make a silver dollar will be the same as the amount of gold required to make a gold dollar.

While it may be possible for the gold kings by nominating the candidates for President of both political parties, through use of the patronage and the veto power of the Presidential office, to delay for a time affirmative action for the restoration of silver, they can not secure affirmative action to repeal existing law and discard silver. The accumulation of circulation based upon silver at the rate of $50,000,000 a year under the act of 1890 must continue. If they persist in opposing free coinage and the restoration of silver to par the United States must take silver for Government obligations whether or not the parity between silver coin and gold coin can be maintained.

The plan the gold kings have adopted to depress the price of silver by manipulating the small surplus of bullion in the market will soon ruin the financial credit of the Government and may ultimately terminate in a financial panic. But if financial trouble results from the attempt of the gold contractionists to destroy the use of silver, they must not charge it to the advocates of free coinage, who are endeavoring to make silver equal to gold by restoring it to the place it occupied on a par with gold from the foundation of the Government.

The first thing demanded is reform in the administration of the finances of the Government. The French Government furnishes an admirable example for such reform. France stopped the coinage of silver, in 1875, but she did not disparage the silver coin which she had. On the contrary, all her obligations were payable and still are payable in either gold or silver. She maintains her reserves in about equal amounts of gold and silver coin, and pays all her national obligations in whichever coin is most beneficial or convenient for the Government.

When Mr. Cleveland sent word to the monetary conference in session at Paris in 1885, by our consul-general, George Walker, to the effect that the United States was about to repeal the Bland act and discontinue the coinage of silver, the Latin Union, which had been formed in 1867, dissolved or agreed to dissolve at the end of five years. The time for dissolution was in November, 1890. It was stipulated that upon such dissolution each of the nations belonging to the Union should redeem from the others whatever silver coin was held by any of the others, and pay for it in gold coin at the rate of $1.33 per ounce, which is according to their ratio of 154 to 1.

But in order to compel such redemption a year's notice was required. Every effort was made by the gold advocates to induce France to give the notice and require the other members of the Union to redeem their silver coin which France held in her treasury, and which amounted to about 650,000,000 francs or $120,000,000. It was urged that Italy, Greece, Belgium, and Switzerland had become unfriendly to France and friendly to Germany, and that France ought not to aid to sustain their financial credit. In opposition to this argument it was contended by the Government that in case France required the other members of the Union to take the $120,000,000 in silver and pay gold, it would disparage silver in France; that France had, in and out of the treasury, over $650,000,000 in silver, and it was in general circulation among the people; that if the French Government made a discrimination in favor of gold and against silver the people would do the same, and great financial trouble would follow.

What a contrast between that policy and the administration of our Treasury Department. Every obligation of the United States is, and always has been payable in silver dollars or gold dollars, at the option of the United States; but every Secretary of the Treasury has surrendered the option of the United States and paid out gold at the option of public creditors. This plan has greatly disparaged silver.

In addition to that, the entire gold press in the commercial centers of the country is daily proclaiming that silver dollars are only 70-cent dollars and that they are a swindle. The President of the United States is continually contending that one dollar must be made as good as another dollar, and by implication disparaging the silver dollar. The plan proposed by the Administration to make the silver dollar equal to the gold dollar is a promise of redemption of silver in gold. If our silver currency is to be redeemed in gold, then there is no possible excuse for using silver, because paper is just as good.

This disparagement of silver, this repudiating of it as money in public speeches from the President of the United States down, and in the public press in every commercial center, will soon make the people themselves discriminate against silver in favor of gold, and pay all public dues to the Government in silver and demand that all Government obligations shall be paid in gold. This will bankrupt the Treasury. It seems that the policy of the Treasury Department is to destroy silver money at all hazards, and if it becomes necessary to bankrupt the Government for that purpose, the Treasury officials seem to think that the end justifies the means.

What efforts do the officers of the Treasury Department make to obey the law and carry out the established policy of the United States to maintain the parity between the two metals at the ratio established by law? The policy of these officials seems to be to create the greatest possible disparity between the price of the two metals by depressing the price of silver. It is alleged that persons who sell silver to the Government are not required to deliver it on the day of sale, but are given time to rig the market and obtain it as cheap as possible.

After they have made a contract to supply the Government, the owners of silver bullion are cut off from the market and must sell for such price as the vendors to the Government or the persons having a contract to supply the Government are willing to give. The Government thus makes it for the interest of speculators to depress the price of silver and furnishes them an opportunity to do so. Whether this charge be true or not the Secretary of the Treasury will explain when he answers this resolution. He will undoubtedly take occasion to explain his methods of purchasing silver bullion and how he regulates the market price.

The two arguments used against the policy of the Government as declared in the act of 1890 are, first, that the silver dollar is a 70-cent dollar and that silver bullion is 30 per cent discount, and the Government should not be called upon to pay for silver bullion more than its market price. In reply to that we simply say that silver was used as money longer than gold; it is the money of the Constitution; it has legitimately the right of coinage, which right was taken away and its price depressed; and that free coinage, which would restore its money function, would restore it to par.

The friends of bimetalism do not ask the Government to buy silver. They ask to coin it as formerly; coin it as the Constitution requires; coin it as it coins gold. Its value depends upon this right of coinage, which existed from the foundation of the Government; they ask that that right be restored, and not that the Government should buy silver and trade in it as a commodity at any price.

The other argument used is that the United States would be flooded with silver. This argument has no foundation in fact. As before remarked, there is not more than from six to ten millions of silver bullion in the world. All other silver which has been produced has been consumed in the arts and coined into money. There is no coined silver in the world which is not valued at a higher price as coin than the standard silver dollar, except the coin of Mexico, because we use more silver in our dollar in proportion to gold than any other country except Mexico.

It is said that silver will come from Asia. Silver can not come from Asia. Exports from Asia always exceed the imports, and it has been the sink in which the gold and silver of the world have been buried for a thousand years, never to return. Some tell us that there will be an avalanche of silver from Europe. Europe has only eleven hundred millions, all told, of silver coin; and no silver bullion. Six hundred and fifty million dollars of this coin is in France. We have already seen that France refused to disparage silver by selling $120,000,000 at $1.33 an ounce. Is it likely that she would disparage her silver currency by sending it to the United States to be coined into silver dollars at an actual loss of over 3 per cent, besides exchange? No other country of Europe has any considerable amount of silver. Perhaps they will make poor Austria sell a little silver, but everybody will want silver when we put it to par.

Besides, France had an opportunity ever since silver was demonetized to send her silver to India to be coined into rupees. The mints of India are open to all the silver of the world. The balance of trade against France and in favor of India has averaged, for the last fifteen years, $33,000,000 per annum. France would not send her silver coin, which is worth in France $1.33 an ounce, to India to be coined into rupees, which, if returned to Western Europe, would be worth only 70 cents an ounce. On the contrary, France pays her obligations to India in silver bullion, or, what is the same thing, council bills issued by the Bank of England, which are orders for silver coin in India. The gold advocates tell us that the silver dollar under free coinage would be worth only 70 cents, and yet they say that Europe will ship coin worth 100 cents at home to be formed into silver dollars worth only 70 cents here. This is the logic of the gold trust.

There is another conclusive reason why there is no possible danger of a flood of silver. The aggregate product of gold and silver since 1873 has not kept pace with the increase of population and business. From 1850 to 1873 the annual product of the two metals was about $200,000,000 per annum. The world's production between 1849 and 1852 from about $40,000,000 to $200,000,000 per annum. It did no harm. It did a great deal of good. It stimulated enterprise throughout the world and made good times everywhere.

There has been, it is true, a slight increase in the combined products of gold and silver since 1873, commencing with a little less than $200,000,000 per annum in 1873. In that year $81,000,000 of silver and $96,000,000 of gold were produced. The world now produces, according to estimates, about $250,000,000 of the two metals combined. The statistics of the production of both gold and silver must be discounted because each mining locality is vying with the other to make a record of large production to enhance the value of its property and to induce other miners to come. Besides, the great majority of gold and silver mines in the world are on the market, and it is for the interest of the owners to exaggerate production. I think it is a safe estimate to say that the combined product of both gold and silver does not exceed $225,000,000 per annum.

The fact that all the silver, except the little amount of bullion in New York which is used by speculators to depress the market, is consumed, and the further fact that there has been no surplus silver produced, refutes the assertion that there is silver anywhere in the world from which an oversupply for the United States can be obtained. On the contrary, if the United States would remonetize silver, sustain the $500,000,000 of silver in circulation as good money, the price of silver would go up and all the nations of the earth would then want it. That is human nature. They all want good money. When commodities rise, the demand for them increases everywhere.

It is the constant disparagement of silver by the gold association of London and New York and the Government officials of the United States which makes people want to get rid of it. As I before remarked, the alternative is presented to sustain silver, put it to par, make it good money, or meet with financial disaster.

I repeat, silver men may not be able to get affirmative legislation, but they can prevent affirmative legislation for the destruction of silver as money, and if trouble comes it will be because the gold contractionists are laboring to destroy silver to enhance the value of their own property—gold.

Why should they be allowed further to increase the purchasing power of gold while they hold the gold and the gold obligations of the world? Has not the price of property been sufficiently depressed? Are they not satisfied with the gains they have already got?

The people of the United States will not stop this agitation until silver is restored to the place it occupied previous to the unfortunate legislation of 1873. We believe the creditor class procured the clandestine legislation which demonetized silver. We resent the arrogant assumption that the gold dollar, which has been doubled in value by that legislation, is an honest dollar for a debtor to pay, who, when he contracted the debt, agreed to pay either gold or silver, whichever was most convenient for him.

On the contrary, we regard the gold dollar in the hands of the gold combination, which controls all the gold in the world, as an instrument of robbery and extortion. We demand, and we will continue to demand, that both gold and silver shall be used as money. We will never desist from this demand while the property of the producer is being transferred to the parasites of society by strategy and fraud.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask to have taken up Senate joint resolution No. 37, now lying upon the table, introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of Senators by the people.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds—

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the resolution offered by me may be disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say that I prefer that the resolution of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] should go over. I made a somewhat lengthy speech on this subject the other day in the Senate, and I do not want to intrude any more upon the Senate than I am obliged to do in justice to my own constituency about this debate on silver, but I do desire to-morrow morning to have an opportunity of speaking for a very brief period upon the resolution of the Senator from Nevada. I hope, therefore, it will go over without objection, and that it may be laid before the Senate in the morning, so that I shall have an opportunity to deliver some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The resolution of the Senator from Nevada will go over informally, if there be no objection.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask that the joint resolution to which I have referred may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 37) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of Senators by the people.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the joint resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] was read yesterday and appears in the RECORD of to-day. This is not the first resolution on the subject which has been presented to the Senate. During the last Congress the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] introduced a similar resolution, and on the 22d of April, 1890, made a speech in favor thereof. At the present session the Senator from Oregon reintroduced his resolution, and it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. At a later day the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] now occupying the chair of the Senate introduced a similar resolution, and he made a speech in its behalf on the 17th day of December last.

These two resolutions were by the Committee on Privileges and Elections intrusted to a subcommittee comprising the two Senators who had introduced the resolutions and made speeches in their favor, and I had the honor to be appointed the third member.

It has occurred to me, from such consideration as I have been able to give the subject, that I ought to state to the Senate the objections which have come to my mind against the submission at this time of an amendment to the Constitution for the election of United States Senators by the people.

I may be convinced as time passes that such an amendment ought to be submitted to the Legislatures of the several States, but I am not convinced that it ought to be done at this time, and therefore I shall state briefly my objections.

The majority of the subcommittee naturally have come to the conclusion that their amendment should be reported to the full committee and to the Senate, and they have made a redraft of the resolution expressing their present views, which I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read as part of my remarks.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Senate joint resolution No. 8 as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Constitution," in the seventh line of page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and shall be known as the sixteenth amendment."

That the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be chosen by a direct vote of the people of the several States for six years; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature; and each Senator shall have one vote.

If vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next general election in such State for members of the House of Representatives in Congress, when such vacancies shall be filled by a direct vote of the people as aforesaid.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the first objection which occurs to me to the adoption of an amendment to the Federal Constitution which shall provide for the election of Senators by the people is, that the change will be certain to result in the adoption of a Federal election law. This may not be so great an objection to myself as to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, who have hitherto opposed the adoption of a Federal election law, but I regard the extension of the system of popular elections to the choice of Senators of the United States as certain to result in the taking possession of the Federal elections in the States by Federal officials appointed by the National Government, and I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the amendment which is now proposed immediately extends the Federal power over popular elections in the States to an extent which the Constitution does not now permit.

The Constitution provides as to the election of members of the House of Representatives, Article I, section 2, as follows:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Section 4 of Article I is as follows:

The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

So that, as the Constitution now stands, the Congress has complete power to control the popular election of Representatives in Congress. But the provision as to the election of Senators is:

Section 3, Article I. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote.

While the power to regulate the election of Senators by Congress is as undisputed as the power to regulate the election of Representatives, yet the election of Senators, which can now be regulated, is an election by the Legislatures of the States. If, however, this amendment, which the Senator from Illinois proposes, is adopted, and Senators are hereafter to be elected directly by the people, it follows immediately and conclusively that the powers given to Congress to make regulations are extended to the popular elections of Senators, and in my judgment just as soon as it comes to be seen that Representatives and Senators both are to be elected by the people, there will be a demand for the enactment of a Federal election law which it will be impossible to resist.

Indeed, Mr. President, it seems to me unreasonable that the amendment as it now stands for the election of Senators by the people should be adopted, and that the States should continue to possess the power to prescribe the qualifications of the voters, which power they now have, because the qualifications for electors of Representatives in Congress are the same as those prescribed by each State for the election of members of the most numerous branch of its State Legislature. Under that power the State prescribes such qualifications as it pleases for electors of the members of the most numerous branch of its State Legislature, and those electors are the electors of Representatives in Congress, and if the change proposed is made they will be the electors of United States Senators. It is clear that this is unreasonable.

Therefore, if the joint resolution is reported to the committee or to the Senate in the form determined upon by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Indiana, I shall move to amend the same by striking out the provision that the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors in the most numerous branch of the State Legislature and by providing that they shall have "such qualifications as may be prescribed by Congress," to the end that it shall be within the power of Congress, when both its Senators and its Representatives are chosen by the people, to determine who shall be the electors in the several States and in order that the States may not be allowed to make such discriminations that the qualifications of the electors in one State shall be different from the qualifications of the electors in another.

Moreover, Mr. President, there is another reason why the adoption of this amendment will result in the passage of a Federal election law, and that is that increasing the number of popular elections will not stop with committing to such elections the choice of Senators. It is almost certain that this amendment, if adopted, will be followed by provisions for the choice of President and Vice-President by the people. I regard that result as inevitable. I beg the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to my suggestion that I regard it as inevitable that if Senators are to be chosen by the people an amendment will soon follow for the election of President and Vice-President by the people, and I ask the Senator whether he has any doubt that the present amendment is but the beginning of a movement which, if it goes forward, is very soon to bring us to that condition of affairs that, instead of electing Representatives by the people, Senators by the Legislatures, and the President and Vice-President by an electoral college, all these various officers, who are Federal, and not State officers, will be chosen by the people?

Mr. President, that is the view which is taken by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. In his speech he says:

From what I have said the conclusion is inevitable, that none of the reasons which led the framers of the Constitution to deprive the people of the direct control of the executive department and of the Senate now exist. Experience long ago demonstrated the uselessness of the electors as agents for the selection of President and Vice-President. Electors are now but counters for the enumeration of the votes of the States, the John Does and Richard Roes of our political system.

So the Senator from Illinois is thoroughly committed to carry this reform of his as far as the election of President and Vice-President by the people. I know the Senator from Indiana now in the chair [Mr. TURPIE] hesitates on that point and is willing to confine his reform to the election of Senators. What the views of the Senator from Oregon may be I do not know.

I have here the resolutions of the Democratic State convention of North Dakota, which met at Grand Forks March 24, and among them I find this:

Resolved, That the Democratic party pledges itself to secure submission of an amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the election of the President and Vice-President of the United States by a direct vote of the people, and also an amendment, as proposed by Senator JOHN M. PALMER of Illinois, providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people of the different States instead of by the different Legislatures thereof.

I am bound to say that, according to my observation, these two movements are going on pari passu. If Senators of the United States are to be elected by the people, we shall be brought at once face to face with the proposition that the President and Vice-President shall also be elected by the people; for if anything has become obsolete in connection with the existing Constitution, it is the theory of its founders which led them to provide for the choice of President and Vice-President by electors appointed by the several States as their Legislatures might determine.

Whenever the President and Vice-President are chosen by popular elections it will be entirely possible for one State, by enormously swelling its vote by fraudulent methods, or by other unfair means not absolutely fraudulent, to wholly overcome the exact and honest votes of other States. Assume that we make the change that I have proposed, that Congress shall fix the qualifications of the voters of the several States so that they may be the same in all the States, yet even then there is the possibility that the State of New York will swell its vote by improper and fraudulent methods 50,000 more or less and overcome the true votes of the other States.

I challenge the attention of the three Senators who advocate this measure to this prediction: I am confident that, first, the election of Senators by the people will be followed by the election of President and Vice-President by the people, and that whenever those two changes are made, there will be of necessity a national election law, which will not only fix the qualifications of the electors of Representatives, Senators, and President and Vice-President in the several States, but will also take complete possession of the electoral machinery therein, and our Representatives, Senators, President, and Vice-President will be chosen at popular elections called by Federal officials, with the voting lists made up by Federal officials, and with the count and the declaration and certificate of election made by them.

Do the Senators who advocate this measure desire this result? I can not believe that they do. At all events, I shall certainly feel that if after these two amendments of the Constitution are adopted a movement is made by those who believe in and have advocated a Federal election law, we shall be sustained by many Senators and many Representatives who have bitterly denounced such an election law.

Mr. President, this objection that a Federal election law will be sure to follow the adoption of this constitutional amendment is, as I have said, one to which I shall reconcile myself more easily than I can to the other objections which I desire to state. Therefore, as it is my least objection, I have put it first.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Supposing all these evils which the Senator speaks of should follow, especially the one that the change will result in a Federal election law, will the Senator be kind enough to tell us what the objection would be to that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am coming to that as my second point.

Mr. MITCHELL. For my own part I can not conceive how this amendment would give Congress any more power in regulating the election of Senators of the United States than it has now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, Congress can now only regulate, as it does by the law of 1866, the proceedings which take place in the halls of the Legislature; but when Senators are elected by the people ipso facto the power of Congress to regulate the whole process of choosing Senators is enlarged, and it will be just as competent for Congress to provide Federal officials to conduct the elections of Senators as it now is to provide such officials for the elections of Representatives in Congress and to fix the time, place, and manner of holding such elections.

Mr. MITCHELL. In one case Congress is simply regulating the election of one set of electors and in another case is regulating the election of another set of electors; but will it follow that they will have power to go into all this machinery to which the Senator has referred without some grant?

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably it follows from the amendment as the Senator reports it, that the Congress can proceed to pass a Federal election law applicable to the popular election of Senators just as now it has power to pass a Federal election law applicable to the election of Senators by the Legislatures.

Mr. President, my second objection to the passage of this amendment at this time is that it is the very beginning of radical innovation. It will be absolutely the first fundamental change in the Federal Constitution concerning our frame of government. It may seem strange to Senators to hear the statement made that this will be the first change when the fifteen amendments to the Federal Constitution are recalled, but a brief consideration of those amendments will prove the truth of my assertion, that this will be the first change during a hundred years in the framework of the Federal Government.

The first ten amendments to the Constitution, which were adopted all at one time, Senators will remember, are merely negative; they are merely a bill of rights, and no bill of rights that has ever been annexed to any State constitution has contained any provision whatever in reference to the framework of the government or the methods of the government established by that constitution. If these ten amendments had been annexed to the Constitution when it was adopted; had preceded it instead of following it, as they did, they would not have effected one iota of change in the form of government which was established, or in the method of the Government which was established. So much for the ten amendments; they are purely negative.

The eleventh amendment, adopted at a later period, was also merely negative:

The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.

It is entirely negative. The twelfth amendment is simply a provision that when the President and Vice-President are voted for, the electors shall name the person for whom they vote for President and the person for whom they vote for Vice-President. That amendment was made necessary by the fact that in 1800 there was an equal number of votes cast for two persons, 73 for Jefferson and 73 for Burr, and it was impossible to determine by the votes of the electors who was to be President and who was to be Vice-President, and this simple amendment is the only real change that has been made in the Constitution.

The thirteenth amendment abolishes slavery. The fourteenth amendment declares the equality of citizens of States and contains the provision for the disfranchisement of persons who have been in rebellion, declares the validity of the public debt of the Union, and prohibits the recognition of any of the Confederate debt. There is nothing in this, the fourteenth, amendment, nor in the most recent, the fifteenth, amendment, which last declares that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," which is not negative, except that they recognize as a result of the war the establishment of the liberty of all persons under the flag, and thus provide that the right of citizens to vote shall not be denied.

From this brief recital of the fifteen amendments which have been made to the Federal Constitution I believe I have made good my statement that the amendment which these Senators now propose and urge with so much zeal will be the very first change in the framework of our Government. For a hundred years we have gone forward in our national career, and this Constitution, founded with most consummate wisdom by the fathers, has been found sufficient to carry this people from their low estate to the grandeur which they have now reached. It has proved a Constitution which was adapted to the wants of 3,000,000 people, and is ample for the necessities of 65,000,000 people, yet the Senators profess to have discovered that it is now necessary to begin the work of making fundamental changes.

Mr. President, I am conservative on this subject. I am inclined to canvass with care and prudence the first suggestion of a change and to challenge its advocates to prove their case beyond a doubt and beyond a peradventure. It is characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race, so Mr. Macaulay says, that it changes its laws slowly; that it legislates with great caution. In the fourth volume of Mr. Macaulay's history, where he is speaking of the toleration act which was adopted after William and Mary came to the English throne and gave religious liberty to England, he develops this conservatism in the legislation of all Anglo-Saxon people. I ask the Secretary to read the extract which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The extract will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The perfect lawgiver is a just temper between the mere man of theory, who can see nothing but general principles, and the mere man of business, who can see nothing but particular circumstances. Of lawgivers in whom the speculative element has prevailed to the exclusion of the practical, the world has, during the last eighty years, been singularly fruitful. To their wisdom Europe and America have owed scores of abortive constitutions, scores of constitutions which have lived just long enough to make a miserable noise, and have then gone off in convulsions.

But in English legislation the practical element has always predominated, and not seldom unduly predominated, over the speculative. To think nothing of symmetry and much of convenience; never to remove an anomaly, merely because it is an anomaly; never to innovate, except when some grievance is felt; never to innovate, except so far as to get rid of the grievance; never to lay down any proposition of wider extent than the particular case for which it is necessary to provide—these are the rules which have, from the age of John to the age of Victoria, generally guided the deliberations of our two hundred and fifty Parliaments. Our national distaste for whatever is abstract in political science amounts undoubtedly to a fault. Yet it is, perhaps, a fault on the right side. That we have been far too slow to improve our laws must be admitted. But, though in other countries there may have occasionally been more rapid progress, it would not be easy to name any other country in which there has been so little retrogression.

Mr. CHANDLER. The wisdom of the proposed constitutional amendment may be tested by Mr. Macaulay's propositions. He says: "Never remove an anomaly merely because it is an anomaly;" and for that reason we should hesitate to provide for any change of the election of President and Vice-President; "never innovate, except when some grievance is felt; never innovate, except so far as to get rid of the grievance;" and there has been no grievance shown by the Senators who have addressed the Senate on this subject. It has not been established that this country has suffered in the slightest degree from the method of choosing United States Senators by the Legislatures of the various States.

Take the speeches of the three honorable Senators which I now hold in my hand, take the report which the Senators have drawn up for presentation to the Senate, and you may search them through and through without finding any demonstration whatever of any grievance, of any harm, or of any injury that has happened to this country by reason of the existing system of choosing Senators.

Mr. President, do the Senators pretend that if there had been a system of popular elections of Senators this body of which we have the honor to be members would have contained more distinguished men than have reached it? Can there be found in the galaxy of great men belonging to any nation brighter stars than those which have illuminated the American firmament from the Senate of the United States? We will not speak of the members of the present Senate, who I judge will find no fault with the methods which brought them here. Take the Senate for a hundred years down to our time and look at the distinguished men of whom it has been composed, and declare if you can that if there had been a system of elections by the people there would have been greater men, better men, or nobler men as its members.

Mr. President, the grievance is not shown; the necessity for action is not demonstrated. There are wants of this people no doubt, there are improvements possibly that may be made in our Federal Constitution, but there has been absolutely no injury resulting from the present method of electing Senators.

There is one exception to the general criticisms which I have made of the Senators who advocate this amendment. When I say that they have indicated no injury, that they have pointed out no grievance, although you may search their speeches from one side to the other, there remains to be specified the exception that they do suggest that under the present system of elections rich men may improperly get into the Senate; and when they say this I take it for granted that they mean that wealthy men have so reached the Senatorial office heretofore, not that the Senators are merely apprehensive that if we do not change the Constitution these rich men will so reach the Senate; because if we have gone on for a hundred years and no wealthy man has by objectionable means yet reached the Senate, it will be safe for us to continue in the ways of the fathers until some case has happened which proves that there is real danger to the country from the invasion of the Senate by wealthy men, so that we must change the Constitution in order to prevent them from getting here.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe that the people of the United States have hitherto suffered because rich men have forced their way into this body who would not have come here if Senators had been elected by the people, which is of course the issue now made. Have no millionaires been elected governors of States? Have there been more rich Senators elected to this body than have been elected governors? The governors are chosen by the people. They are chosen precisely as the three Senators say the United States Senators should be chosen; and yet I do not think complaint has been made that millionaires have improperly taken possession of the governorships; and if they have so taken possession of the governorships, they are just as likely and just as sure to take possession of Senatorships under a system of popular elections as they are under a system where the Legislatures choose the Senators.

Mr. President, I have a marked case in mind. We have as a member of this Senate, not now present in Washington, one of the wealthiest citizens of the United States, a gentleman whose fortune is probably among the very largest. Perhaps he stands with the half a dozen greatest millionaires of the country. But this Senator, who was elected to the Senate as I believe by the free will of his people, had previously been the governor of his State and had been so chosen by the people. Is there any reason to suppose that this Senator who was once chosen governor by a large majority in his State would not have been elected to this body if the people had chosen Senators?

Not the slightest, Mr. President. That Senator is strong with his own people because of the noble use which he has made and proposes to make of his money, and it is no wonder when he establishes a great university, with a most magnificent endowment for learning, reaching up to $30,000,000, that he is chosen to any office within the gift of his people which he signifies his willingness to accept.

I call the attention of the Senate to recent events showing what the power and influence of this Senator is with the people of his State, and that it is not necessary to assume that he or any other man of wealth comes to this body by the undue use of money in connection with a Legislature. Senators will remember that a year ago last December when we came back to Washington there had been many political reverses in the country. Republican Senators whose States had been supposed to be firmly anchored in the Republican line returned here with their States Democratic, and there seemed to have been almost universal disaster happening to the Republican party.

There was one exception to the prevalent calamities. I give the vote of California in 1891.

Popular vote of California for governor, 1891.

Markham, Republican	126,432
Pond, Democrat	118,601
Bidwell, Prohibitionist	10,868
Scattering	71
Total	255,972
Markham's plurality	7,831

When the wave of Republican defeat was sweeping over the country the largest majority, I think, that California ever gave for a Republican candidate was cast for the Republican candidate for governor; while the Legislature stood as follows:

State Legislature of California, 1891.

	Senate.	House.
Republican	27	61
Democratic	12	18
American		1
Total	39	80
Republican majority	15	42

There was a Republican majority of 57 on joint ballot in the Legislature which reflected the Senator from California.

Mr. President, this either proves that there is no danger from rich men in the politics of States or else it ought to prove to the satisfaction of Senators who advocate this amendment that Senators who desire the suffrages of their people can carry popular elections with as much ease as they can manipulate the members of the Legislatures after they are elected.

I do not believe that this idea, the fear of millionaires, which I submit is the only concrete, tangible notion of an existing evil to be found in the speeches of the Senators in favor of the election of Senators by the people, is one that can stand a moment when reason is applied to it.

Moreover, I think that it is a cowardly way of dealing with millionaires to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to have Senatorial elections made directly by the people instead of by the Legislatures because we are afraid of these millionaires; that it is a narrow and a partial and a mistaken remedy. I believe that if this country is dangerously threatened by its millionaires the way to deal with them is directly and adequately, and not by proclaiming that because we have so many rich men here whom we dare not grapple with in any other way, we will see to it at any rate that they do not buy their way into the United States Senate by purchasing Legislatures.

Rather than pass this amendment solely on the ground that rich men purchase their way into the Senate I would prefer to take steps to limit the wealth of our millionaires, and I have drawn up an amendment which I commend to the Senators and which I am willing to support, which I think would be, on the whole, a great deal better than to go through this form of sending out to the States an amendment of the Constitution which we admit we adopt simply because we are afraid plutocrats will buy up State Legislatures and get into the Senate when they ought not to come here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for the prevention of the excessive accumulation of wealth by individuals and corporations, and for the prohibition of the issue of corporation stock and bonds not representing money paid and of the payment of excessive dividends.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both Houses concurring), That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

The excessive accumulation of wealth by individuals and corporations shall not be allowed. Congress may enforce this article by appropriate legislation, and shall prohibit the issue by corporations of stock certificates or bonds or other evidence of indebtedness unless the sums expressed therein have been paid into the treasuries of the corporations; and shall prohibit the payment of excessive dividends.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is an amendment which is an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the general complaint is not that those people have got too much, but that the rest of us have got too little.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is an amendment that will remedy the whole evil.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it reaches the point we are more particularly interested in.

Mr. CHANDLER. If Congress is allowed by law to prevent the excessive accumulation of wealth in the hands of individuals or corporations, it can provide that when an individual becomes too rich and we are afraid he will break into the Senate with his excessive riches they shall be taken away from him. The natural provision would be that the excess should be paid into the public Treasury, but there would be no constitutional objection under such a law to dividing it among needy individuals like the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. That would meet with our approval. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe this is the way to do it. I will support this amendment with pleasure. I believe that it is competent for a great nation, when it is in danger of being corrupted by enormous fortunes, to check the growing evil, and I think this is the best way to do it.

This amendment has this merit, to which I wish to call special attention, that it strikes at the root of these great fortunes by controlling the corporations through which alone the great fortunes have been accumulated.

Mr. President, you can not point to any one of these vast fortunes without seeing that it has been secured by the aid of corporations and corporate powers, and I believe further that you can not point to one of them that has not resulted from watered stock in corporations. Where is there an enormous fortune that has been accumulated by private individuals using only the means and powers which belong to private individuals for the purpose of accumulating wealth? With possibly one exception of a fortune from large landed property these great fortunes have arisen in this country through the aid of corporations; and corporations which ought to be an unadulterated blessing to a community have in many cases become a curse, because stock and bonds have been allowed to be issued which did not represent money paid into their treasuries.

Mr. President, my amendment will reach the difficulty, and if it is adopted and Congress legislates accordingly there will be no necessity of having the amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Senator from Illinois in order that our rich men may not force their way corruptly into the Senate.

There is, however, a history of this amendment which I will venture to state, which illustrates some of the difficulties that we shall find in getting it adopted. A few years ago a member of the House of Representatives, who came from a farming district, said to me that he wished to introduce some measures that would popularize him with his constituents, and he asked me if I could not draw up something for him. I told him I would think of it, and the next day I sent him this amendment, which I told him I thought would make him strong and popular with the farmers of his district.

I supposed he would at once introduce it, but I did not see that he did. I met him a week or two later and I said, "Why did you not introduce that amendment?" You told me that your district was wholly a farming district, and that you wished to introduce measures which would strengthen you with the farmers, and I can not conceive of anything that would be any more beneficial to you with your constituents than that amendment." He said: "That is so; it would help me with the farmers; but let me tell you a little obstacle in the way of my introducing it. Every time I run for reelection there is a millionaire in my district who always gives me a couple of thousand dollars to help my canvass, and I am afraid it would hurt his feelings if I should introduce it." [Laughter.]

So the amendment has rested until this time, and now I offer it to my friend from Illinois as something on which I think we might all compromise upon this question. If the object of introducing these amendments to the Constitution and making these speeches is to satisfy the Farmers' Alliances—and I see they are passing resolutions for it, and I have no doubt that my friend from Oregon and my friend from Illinois and my friend from Indiana want to stand strong with the Farmers' Alliances—it is a great deal better to go the whole figure and just grapple directly with these rich men, take their excessive wealth away from them and make a good use of it, and not deal with them in a cowardly way by saying we mean at least to keep them out of the United States Senate by providing for Senatorial elections by the people.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. As far as I am concerned the Legislature of the State which I have the honor in part to represent three times over passed in the last three sessions, at the regular sessions, joint resolutions memorializing Congress to adopt just such an amendment as the Senator is talking about.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know why they did it; I do not know who originated the movement; but I undertake to say that it was not done because the people of Oregon are dissatisfied with their present Senatorial representation. I should like to have the Senator contradict that proposition.

No, Mr. President, there is no popular demand for this amendment. There has been no grievance shown, there has been no injury shown, there has been no suggestion of a reason except this one, that we are afraid that rich men will get in here and the fact that the Farmers' Alliances have seen fit to pass resolutions making this demand. I do not propose to gratify the Farmers' Alliances by supporting a resolution to amend the Constitution, for which I think there is no occasion, when I am willing to proceed a great deal further, and to go for these rich men directly, and lessen their riches and their power in America, if it is really endangering our welfare and periling our liberty.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the Senator know the fact that when the Constitution was under discussion in the Constitutional Convention there was a very large sentiment in that convention in favor of the election of Senators by the people instead of by the Legislatures of the States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have read in the Madison Papers the debates in the Constitutional Convention and I have read the Federalist. I have done my best to follow these distinguished Senators in their lucubrations upon this subject, and I have not discovered that there was any great sentiment in favor of electing Senators by the people. I thought the argument of the Senators was that the founders of the Constitution were aristocrats, and that they did not want to go as far in the direction of popular government as we, their descendants, ought to go.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to instruct him a little on that point by reading what Mr. Wilson of Pennsylvania said, in the convention?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will listen to anything that the Senator has to say himself—

Mr. MITCHELL. This is much better than anything I can say.

Mr. CHANDLER. But I will not allow him to put into my speech any musty documents of the past such as were not created by him.

Now, Mr. President, another reason why I am not in favor of submitting this amendment to the States is, that I do not conceive that it is necessary to do this in order to show that we do not distrust the people. That is the argument, the knock-down club with which Senators and others are to be met who do not want to vote for this amendment, who think it is a dangerous beginning of innovation, who think there is no need of it, the argument that we distrust the people when we refuse to adopt this amendment.

I do not think it indicates that we distrust the people by standing upon the Constitution of the fathers. Did they distrust the people? At the close of the Revolutionary war there was perfect unity of sentiment on one thing, irrespective of the question whether a government wholly republican in form should be adopted or a government with an executive head for life. It was that the people should in fact rule America, and so the rich and the poor alike who had contributed of their substance and their labors to fight the battles of the Revolution became thoroughly democratic and there was no distrust of the people. All know that in every government to any considerable extent republican sooner or later the people would have their own way; that there would be no institution connected with the government which the people could not change if they wished to change it and continued persistently of the mind to change it.

But although the framers of the Constitution did not distrust the people, they did distrust the sudden temper of the people. They were afraid that waves of excitement might sweep over the country, and that for the moment, for the day, or for the month, or for the year, the people would grow hot with desire to proceed to some extremity. Therefore the wisest men whom the world has ever seen undertook to frame a constitution which should guard against mutability in legislation and sudden changes in the Government.

WEST VIRGINIA DIRECT TAX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, pursuant to the agreement entered into by the Senate on the 31st of March, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 9) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By an agreement made on that day, the 12th of April, at 2 o'clock, was decided upon for the consideration of the joint resolution as the unfinished business. It is now laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT. What becomes of the bill for the amendment of the act relating to circuit courts of appeals?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I will relieve him of any difficulty in reference to the matter now before the Senate. There has been a unanimous consent all through to give the first two legislative days of this week to the Calendar, which might, perhaps, displace these orders. That I am not now ready to decide upon; but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is not present to-day and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who was called to Louisiana, is not present. Under those circumstances, I have determined to ask the Senate to postpone the consideration of this joint resolution until next Tuesday at 2 o'clock, and make it the unfinished business at that hour. I hope I shall not have to ask the Senate for any reason, or on the request of anyone to delay it longer than that period, for it is very important that the matter should be brought before the Senate and decided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PLATT. What day is specified?

Mr. FAULKNER. To-day a week.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to add to what my colleague has said in reference to the joint resolution that it has been delayed for more than a month, possibly as much as two months, to accommodate what seemed really to be the necessities which confronted us and over which none of us had any control the last two or three weeks on account of the illness and necessary absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I hope, therefore, it will go over until next Tuesday, at the hour named by my colleague, with the understanding that it shall be taken up then as the unfinished business and disposed of. I am sure it will take but a few minutes to dispose of it when it is reached.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope when that arrangement is made the Senator from New Hampshire will be allowed to finish his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]? The Chair hears none.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. PLATT. Where does that leave the unfinished business? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business for the time being.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask what becomes of the unanimous consent of the Senate that two days should be devoted to the consideration of the Calendar?

Mr. PLATT. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. HOAR] is not in the Senate Chamber, and I do not understand that he intends that the court bill shall interfere with that arrangement of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope not.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is his desire just to keep it alive as the unfinished business.

Mr. MANDERSON. All right.

Mr. PLATT. As the Senator from Massachusetts is obliged to leave the Senate for his health before long, he desires to dispose of this bill before he leaves, and he wishes to keep it before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary distinctly stated that he did not intend to have the court bill displace the agreement for two days' consideration of the Calendar. By unanimous consent, the Senator from New Hampshire will proceed with his remarks on Senate joint resolution No. 37.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. President, I feel reluctant to take up the time of the Senate when so many other matters are pressing, but inasmuch as three speeches have been made on one side of this question it seemed to me desirable that such views as occurred to me on the other side should be presented.

I was stating that there was no need of this constitutional amendment for the election of Senators by the people in order to show that we, the members of Congress, do not distrust the people. The founders of the Constitution did not distrust the deliberate judgment of the people. They did have a feeling that the Constitution should contain safeguards against the sudden temper of the people. I ask the Secretary to read an extract from the Federalist, one of the papers written by Hamilton, I think, which expresses the idea which prevailed and which tended to the adoption of the plan of the election of the Senate by the Legislatures of the States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

[The Federalist, No. LXIII.]

Thus far I have considered the circumstances which point out the necessity of a well-constructed Senate only as they relate to the representatives of the people. To a people as little blinded by prejudice or corrupted by flattery as those whom I address, I shall not scruple to add, that such an institution may be sometimes necessary as a defense to the people against their own temporary errors and delusions. As the cool and deliberate sense of the community ought, in all governments, and actually will, in all free governments, ultimately prevail over the views of its rulers, so there are particular moments in public affairs when the people, stimulated by some irregular passion, or some illicit advantage, or misled by the artful misrepresentations of interested men, may call for measures which they themselves will afterwards be the most ready to lament and condemn.

In these critical moments how salutary will be the interference of some temperate and respectable body of citizens, in order to check the misguided career and to suspend the blow meditated by the people against themselves, until reason, justice, and truth can regain their authority over the public mind? What bitter anguish would not the people of Athens have often escaped if their government had contained so provident a safeguard against the tyranny of their own passions? Popular liberty might then have escaped the indelible reproach of decreeing to the same citizens the hemlock on one day and statues on the next.

Mr. CHANDLER. Equally distinct and forcible are the views of Chancellor Kent, as expressed in his Commentaries, in an extract which I will ask the Secretary to read as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The small number, and long duration of the Senate, were intended to render them a safeguard against the influence of those paroxysms of heat and passion which prevail occasionally in the most enlightened communities, and enter into the deliberation of popular assemblies. In this point of view a firm and independent Senate is justly regarded as an anchor of safety amidst the storms of political faction; and for want of such a stable body, the republics of Athens and Florence were overturned by the fury of commotions which the senates of Sparta, Carthage, and Rome might have been able to withstand. The characteristic qualities of the Senate, in the indentment of the Constitution are wisdom and stability.

The legal presumption is, that the Senate will entertain more enlarged views of public policy, will feel a higher and juster sense of national character, and a greater regard for stability in the administration of the Government. These qualities, it is true, may, in most cases, be equally found in the other branch of the Legislature, but the constitutional structure of the House is not equally calculated to produce them, for, as the House of Representatives comes more immediately from the people, and the members hold their seats for a much shorter time, they are presumed to partake, with a quicker sensibility, of the prevailing temper and irritable disposition of the times, and to be in much more danger of adopting measures with precipitation, and of changing them with levity. A mutable legislation is attended with a formidable train of mischiefs to the community. It weakens the force and increases the intricacy of the laws, hurts credit, lessens the value of property, and it is an infirmity very incident to republican establishments, and has been a constant source of anxiety and concern to their most enlightened admirers.

A disposition to multiply and change laws upon the spur of the occasion, and to be making constant and restless experiments with the statute code, seems to be the natural disease of popular assemblies. In order, therefore, to counteract such a dangerous propensity, and to maintain a due portion of confidence in the Government, and to insure its safety and character at home and abroad, it is requisite that another body of men, coming likewise from the people and equally responsible for their conduct, but resting on a more permanent basis, and constituted with stronger inducements to moderation in debate and to tenacity of purpose, should be placed as a check upon the intemperance of the more popular department.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, thus impressed with the necessity in founding a government of guarding against mutability in legislation and the injurious effects of the sudden temper of the people, the framers of the Constitution provided certain barriers to check any temporary and dangerous tendency of the people. What were those barriers? In the first place, it was provided that the President should serve for four years and be chosen by electors appointed in such manner as the Legislatures of the States should prescribe.

In the next place, the Senators were to be elected for six years and to be chosen by the Legislatures of the States. The heads of Departments were to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the judges were to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate and to hold office for life. Only the Representatives in the popular branch, so called, the House of Representatives, were to be chosen directly by the people, and were to hold office for only two years, subject to change at the end of that period.

I am unable to see how we are to begin to tear down these barriers and then to stop. I wish to know from the Senators where they propose to stop. Where will they draw the dividing line? If it shows a distrust of the people to continue to elect Senators by the Legislatures of the States, does it not show a distrust of the people to elect them for six years instead of two? Does it not show a distrust of the people to elect a President for four years by electors instead of electing a President directly by the people and for two years only? The system of electing judges by the people has been adopted in many of the States.

It is in the direction of popular government, and it has been found to work well, I am told by the residents of the States where the judges are so elected, and yet the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and all other Federal judges are appointed and hold office for life. If an amendment were to be proposed for the election by the people of the Federal judges would it not be as good an argument to say to the opposer of such an amendment, "you distrust the people," as it is to say that it implies a distrust of the people to oppose the radical change which is now suggested in the proposition to elect United States Senators by the people?

Mr. President, I say frankly that I am unable to draw the line. I do not believe the line can be drawn, and I do not see where it would be drawn if it were proposed, in addition to the amendment against the adoption of which I am now speaking, to provide for a complete election of all our officers by the people and their election every two years. I have prepared an amendment which proceeds in the direction in which the Senators propose that we shall go, and I can not see how any Senator who advocates the election of Senators by the people can consistently oppose this amendment. It will be said to him that he distrusts the integrity and the good sense of the people of the United States. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of the President, Vice-President, heads of Departments, Senators, judges, postmasters, and all collectors of revenue by popular vote:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both Houses concurring), That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, namely:

ARTICLE XVII.

The President, Vice-President, and heads of Departments; the Senators in Congress; the justices of the courts, each within his own judicial circuit or district; and the postmasters and collectors of revenue, shall be elected every two years at the times and places and in the manner provided for electing Representatives. Congress shall make rules and regulations for such elections and for temporarily filling vacancies.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in that amendment is the voice of the people. There the people are enabled to govern for themselves. There the people are notified that if they have a President they do not want they can get rid of him at the end of two years. If they find that they have Senators whom they do not love, whether they are millionaires like the Senator to whom I have alluded or are poverty-stricken Senators like the Senator from Colorado, they can get rid of them at the end of two years. I am unable to see how we can have popular government, real, true, and complete, that shall satisfy the arguments of the Senator from Oregon, the Senator from Indiana, and the Senator from Illinois which have been made on this floor, and that shall meet their desires as expressed in those arguments, and give us that kind of popular government which our great and virtuous and intelligent people are entitled to, unless we adopt the amendment which I have sent to the desk, and which I shall introduce and ask to have receive the consideration of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

In this business of popularizing the American Government and making it more beneficial to the American people who have lived under it, struggled for it, fought for it, and praised it for a hundred years exactly as it is and have never discovered any grievance involved in it, and have never discovered any necessity for amending it, if it is best now to begin to amend the Constitution so as to make this Government of ours a more popular Government than it has been, then let us elect every officer every two years and you will have the grandest popular Government that the world ever saw. How long it will last I do not predict.

I have been led to doubt, however, and here is my sixth reason for opposing the sending out of this amendment at the present time, whether if we were to elect Senators by the people we should get any nearer to the people as a matter of fact. We have a system of Presidential electors, and under that system the founders of the Constitution who originally framed it thought we would get the personal judgment of the various members of the electoral colleges in the selection of a President, instead of which we get the judgment of a bare majority of a Presidential nominating convention of one of the political parties.

If we elect Senators by the people what shall we substitute for the present system? Under the present method we get the Senator who is deliberately selected by the members of a State Legislature, although occasionally, but not always, we get the Senator who is selected by a majority of a legislative caucus of the dominant party. If we make this change, how shall we realize the will of the people? How shall we obtain our United States Senators? Only in this way, that we shall have them selected by a bare majority of a political State convention of one of the great political parties. It will be a body, the members of which come into existence through no law, who take no oath, who have no legal responsibilities whatever—a mere gathering of a political convention, of a party caucus where a bare majority of a faction makes the Senator.

I am entirely certain that a system of that sort will not give us any better Senators than come here under the existing system. I find the idea expressed in a paragraph in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, published in the Chicago Inter-Ocean of February 21, 1892:

A State convention can be bribed as readily as a Legislature, and can be made to do the bidding of the bootlickers. Indeed, the convention offers less difficulty than does the other body to this sort of work, for the members of the convention are in the public eye for a day or two only, and consequently are under less restraint than are the individual legislators whose service lasts a year or two.

There is the whole idea, and there is shown an evil which it might be wise to remedy, the evil of party rule, the evil connected with caucus government and caucus nominations. But I beg to say to the Senator from Illinois that we shall not get rid of that evil by substituting a political State convention to make our Senators in the place of the more deliberate judgment of the members of a Legislature chosen at a previous period, who go in and out before their people from the time they are elected until they perform their work, and who are quite as likely to make a wise choice as are the representatives of a political party without responsibility according to law, who assemble for a day and nominate a Senator and then return without further responsibility to their homes.

Take the case of the State of Illinois, which the Senator from that State has indicated to us as having already made an improvement in the method of making Senators, and which, as he seems to think, has sent him here by a somewhat different title from that by which the rest of us have the honor to sit in this Chamber. The Senator says in his speech:

Mr. President, I am here to-day the Senator thus elected by the free people of the State of Illinois.

I have examined the facts which the Senator has submitted to the Senate as justifying this claim that he is here by a more elevated, a purer, and a more sacred title than other Senators, and I do not find that the claim is warranted by the facts he produces. He was certainly elected by a State Legislature. He does not dispute that fact, and the processes by which that Legislature arrived at his election are worthy of examination.

Before examining them, however, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the statement of the Senator that the people of his State are dissatisfied with their old method of electing Senators, and therefore have sent him here under a new method. The Senator says:

But they—

believe that the election of Senators by their State Legislature under existing conditions has failed of satisfactory results.

The Senator did not undertake to vindicate that assertion by any facts placed before the Senate. He has not shown us in what respect the present system of electing Senators has proved unsatisfactory in Illinois. I have examined the records, and I find that within forty years we have had from Illinois Sidney Breese; we have had three times elected to this Senate Stephen A. Douglas, and if Mr. Douglas had not been elected Mr. Lincoln would have been chosen; Trumbull three times, Yates, Oglesby, Logan three times; David Davis, CULLOM twice. Of these Senators, Oglesby has been three times elected governor by the people, CULLOM twice, Logan twice elected Congressman at large by the people, and Yates once elected governor by the people. The present junior Senator has been a candidate several times for election and has been elected governor. He has been more than once the nominee of his party in the Legislature, and has been elected to his present seat in the Senate under the old system. William R. Morrison has been several times his party's candidate.

I beg leave to say that the Senator utterly fails to show that the people of Illinois from the time of the election of Sidney Breese down to his own election could have been better represented in the Senate under a system of popular elections. Under such a system certainly Illinois would have sent us no better and no greater men to represent her in the Congress.

What were the methods which the Senator from Illinois says were adopted in that State which justify him in claiming that he was elected by the free people of the State in a sense in which other Senators here were not so elected? It appears that the Democratic voters at their primaries over the State voted for a Senator when they elected delegates to the State convention and it appears that the State convention recognizing the votes of the primaries also voted for a Senator, and a particular man was thus designated by the Democratic voters at their primaries and by the Democratic State convention and was afterwards elected by the Legislature, the Democratic party in that Legislature having made him their candidate, and that he now occupies the seat.

There is no objection to all this. This plan has gone forward under the existing Constitution; and if the Senator is right that this was a movement of the people, then the people have had their way, and they have by the political primaries of the Democratic party expressed their views, those views have reached the State convention, the State convention has made an utterance, and that utterance has been respected and carried into effect by the Legislature, and all without an amendment of the Constitution. Certainly, if this has been done in Illinois, it can be done in the other States of the Union, and there is no need of amending the Constitution in order that such methods may be adopted in other States.

But were all these proceedings in the State of Illinois which resulted in the election of the Senator the outburst of popular sentiment? Were they any more the demonstration of a popular demand that the Senator should be elected than has happened in the case of other Senators?

I will read further from the speech of the Senator. He says:

The State committee of the Democratic party of Illinois, in 1890, in connection with a call for a State convention, submitted to the electors attached to that party two propositions to be considered and determined by them in their primary conventions.

So that this grand popular movement did not originate with the people after all. It came from a Democratic State committee; the Democratic State committee machinery was invoked to produce its effect at the primaries, and having done its work at the primaries, it did its work at the State convention when the Senator was nominated, and after a long contest in the Legislature he was elected.

If we trace the Senator's title back to its genesis, instead of finding it in a special movement of the free people of Illinois, we must locate it at a meeting of the Democratic committee of that State.

Mr. President, I also have no difficulty in discovering the reasons why the Democratic State committee originated this movement. Illinois had been a Republican State for many years; it had been overwhelmingly a Republican State, and it was desired by the Democratic State committee that a candidate should be selected for the Senate in this way, so that if possible the Republican majority in Illinois might be broken down and a Democratic victory accomplished. They naturally sought a candidate who would draw Republican votes, who would be successful in breaking into the Republican lines, and they naturally turned to the distinguished Senator from Illinois. Any Senator who will read his biography in the Congressional Directory will easily discover why the Democratic State committee inaugurated this movement in behalf of the Senator for the high office which he now fills.

The Senator's biography shows that before the war he was an anti-Nebraska Democrat; that he separated from the Democratic party on the slavery issue; that he was a delegate to the national Republican convention in 1856 in Philadelphia; that he was a candidate for Congress in 1859, an antislavery candidate. "The John Brown raid into Virginia occurred during the canvass, and in consequence he was beaten by over 4,000 votes."

Whether the Senator intends thus to indicate that he sympathized with the John Brown raid or not I do not know. I assume that he does not. But the feeling which swept over Illinois after the John Brown raid mowed down not only the men who did sympathize with it, but the men who could by any possibility be suspected of sympathizing with it. At all events down went the Senator as a candidate for Congress. Then the war of the rebellion came on. The biography of the Senator shows the great service which he performed during the war and which does him all honor and credit; and so he came out of the war an antislavery Republican and he was very soon elected governor of Illinois. He was elected governor in 1868.

Mr. PADDOCK. As a Republican?

Mr. CHANDLER. The record does not show whether the Senator was elected as a Republican or as a Democrat.

Mr. PALMER. I will supply the deficiency; I was elected as a Republican.

Mr. CHANDLER. The biography says:

Was elected governor of Illinois in 1868; supported Horace Greeley in 1872, and Samuel J. Tilden in 1876; was one of the Democratic visitors to Louisiana after the Presidential election in 1876; was nominated as a candidate for United States Senator by the Democratic members of the Legislature in January, 1877.

Now we have the Senator fully back into the Democratic party, from which he emerged just before the war, impelled by sentiments of patriotism and devotion to his country. As a Republican he protested against slavery, as a Republican he fought gallantly in the war for the Union, as a Republican he was elected governor of Illinois, and as a patriot, of course we are bound to presume, he rejoined the Democratic party.

Mr. President, the Senator's record as a Republican was distinguished. He was entirely sound on the fifteenth amendment, and whenever this amendment to the Constitution for the election of Senators by the people is adopted, and also an amendment for the election of President and Vice-President by the people, and it is necessary to enact a Federal election law in order that the fifteenth amendment may be obeyed, I am glad to believe that, in view of the message of the Senator which I have in my hand, we shall have his vote therefor. I ask the Secretary to read it as a part of my speech.

The Secretary read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Springfield, Ill., March 5, 1869.

To the honorable Speaker of the Senate:

I have the honor to communicate to both branches of the General Assembly a copy of the resolutions of Congress proposing to the Legislatures of the several States a fifteenth article to the Constitution of the United States.

I deem it unnecessary, while performing this act of official duty, to do more than express my own earnest hope that the General Assembly will at once give voice to the ardent wishes of the people in expressing the concurrence of the State of Illinois in this crowning act of statesmanship.

Illinois owes much of its prosperity and greatness to the ordinance of 1787, which, in addition to the exclusion of slavery from the territory northwest of the Ohio, took its place in history by the side of the Declaration of Independence as the protest of Mr. Jefferson and his contemporary patriots against human slavery; and the State which led in the political contest of 1860, which gave to freedom its first victory, and which was the home and now lovingly shelters in her bosom all that was mortal of the great martyr, will not hesitate a moment to assent to this measure of justice, which closes the greatest and noblest struggle the history of the world has known, and will make "Liberty and Union, one and inseparable, now and forever."

JOHN M. PALMER.

Mr. CHANDLER. Noble sentiments, Mr. President, uttered by a Republican governor with the excellent military record of the Senator from Illinois. I do not wonder that the Democratic State committee—

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). (Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?)

Mr. CHANDLER. At the end of this sentence. I do not wonder that the Democratic State committee selected the Senator with whom to originate the popular movement which was to convert the State of Illinois from a Republican into a Democratic State.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to state to the Senator that it was not as a Republican governor, but as a man entertaining my own views. I had my own views. I was not the slave of any party. I repudiate all claim to any opinion I have expressed in the course of my lifetime as being the doctrines of any political party. I have thought for myself and have spoken my own words on all occasions during my lifetime.

Mr. CHANDLER. No doubt, Mr. President, and no Republican—I will not undertake to speak for the Democratic party, if my friends on the other side of the Chamber will excuse me—can fail to join heart and soul in the magnificent utterances of the Senator which have just been read from the desk. I regret that the Senator left the Republican party. I am only developing the reasons why this movement, which he describes at such great length in his speech and which brought him to the Senate, was not necessarily a popular movement, but was in fact the movement of the Democratic State committee of Illinois, with whom the Senator himself says the movement originated.

Mr. President, after this shrewd selection by the Democratic State committee of the Senator to be from the beginning of the canvass the leader of the Democratic party, the Democracy did not elect the Senator by a popular vote. They did not even have a majority of the popular vote in the election of Representatives. I have the exact figures. The Senator says, on page 1327 of the RECORD, that "101 members of the Legislature were elected by a plurality of more than 30,000 votes." According to the figures furnished to me, the successful Democratic candidates had 784,183 votes under the system of cumulation of votes which exists in Illinois; the Republican candidates had 762,457, and the Farmers' Alliance had 30,046, making a Democratic plurality of about 22,000 and a Democratic minority of about 8,000 votes, with 101 Democratic members out of 204 in the Legislature.

Mr. PALMER. I hope the Senator will allow me—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment. One hundred and one is not a majority of 204, and in order to elect a Senator it was necessary to have two more votes. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PALMER. I merely meant to say, as the Senator will do me the justice to see if he looks at my remarks, a plurality of more than 30,000 votes, not a majority of the votes all told.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand. I said a plurality.
Mr. PALMER. I am quite sure the Senator's figures are not precisely accurate, although I am not prepared at the moment to point out their inaccuracy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Since the Senator made the speech and developed the various reasons which he thought showed that there was a different method of electing Senators in Illinois from that which exists in other States, various figures have been sent me, the accuracy of which I will not vouch for, but one thing is certain, as the Senator will admit, that out of 204 members there were only 101 Democratic members, and in order to elect him Senator it was necessary to have two more. There was a protracted contest in the Legislature, and at the end of the one hundred and fifty-fourth ballot, the Senator was chosen.

Now, how were these two members obtained to vote for the Senator? One Cockrell and one Moore had been elected mainly by Republican votes. During his canvass Cockrell had repeatedly declared on the stump that he would not vote for Palmer or Farwell, and after the Senatorial contest began he constantly asserted that he would not vote for Palmer. Moore repeatedly made the same declaration, but on the one hundred and fifty-fourth ballot they joined the 101 Democrats and the Senator was elected.

Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the question how those two votes were obtained; but I do not consider that the Senator was elected by the free people of the State of Illinois or by a popular vote of the people of the State of Illinois under the circumstances of that fight, when, with 101 Democratic votes, after one hundred and fifty-four ballots he was chosen by the votes of Cockrell and Moore, who had repeatedly declared that under no circumstances would they vote for him.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me a question?
Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator please state, if he has the record before him, how many days that controversy continued?

Mr. CHANDLER. In the Legislature?
Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the speech of the Senator from Illinois states it.

Mr. MITCHELL. How long was it?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Illinois said the Legislature—

between the 21st day of January, 1891, and the 11th of March, voted for the candidate nominated on one hundred and fifty-three ballots, and on the one hundred and fifty-fourth ballot they were joined by two members of the House of Representatives—

Mr. MITCHELL. That is enough for my purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not enough for mine—who were favorable to the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people of the several States, and on that ballot a Senator was elected.

The Senator from Illinois seemed to wish to make it out that those two men came over to him because they were in favor of this constitutional amendment which he has now introduced here in the Senate—

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me one other question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, in a moment. Whereas, I attribute their change to entirely different motives, and the Senator himself omits to say that they were two men who had been pledged to vote against him.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will not the Senator from New Hampshire admit that any system that will lead to such a prolonged controversy in the election of a Senator is an evil that should be remedied and that ought to be remedied?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think it is so bad as a system that will stuff ballot boxes or suppress votes.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to interrupt him long enough to say that I do not propose to interrupt him in these statements at this time—

Mr. CHANDLER. I am entirely willing to be interrupted if I make a misstatement.

Mr. PALMER. I will do it at the proper time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, I expect the Senator will be heard from.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is not a fact that the majority of the representatives and senators chosen at that election were elected as members of the Democratic party, and whether the smaller number of Democrats in the Legislature was not owing to the fact that a large number of Republican Senators held over?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know how that is.

Mr. PALMER. That is the fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Illinois states that that is so, and I have no reason to doubt it.

Now, I should not have alluded to these special circumstances connected with the Senator's election—

Mr. PASCO. One question more. My purpose in asking that was to ascertain whether a majority or a plurality of the popular vote was not actually pledged to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHANDLER. A plurality of the popular vote was with the Senator from Illinois. He obtained all the Democratic votes. I do not understand that any Democrat refused to vote for him, as they did for Horace Greeley, because he had been a Republican, and his eminent career as a Republican and his distinguished record as a great soldier in the Union Army brought him Republican votes enough to give him a plurality. I simply call attention to the fact that he did not get a majority and had only 101 votes out of 204, and it was necessary to get two more, and by and by he got them.

Mr. President, I should not have referred to the circumstances under which those votes were obtained, if it had not been for an allusion by the Senator from Illinois to the facts connected with the last election of Gen. John A. Logan to the Senate. I did think when I heard the Senator's speech that he might have left the distinguished general and Senator and nominee for Vice-President from Illinois to rest peacefully in his grave, and his last election as Senator to pass into history without undertaking to put upon it any taint whatever, not even the slightest; and when the Senator took occasion to proclaim to the Senate that Gen. Logan had been elected only by an ingenious trick, it seemed to me that we might well inquire how Gen. Logan was elected, and might, if the Senator chose, inquire how the two lacking votes in his own case were procured by the Democrats of Illinois?

The Democrats of Illinois—

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Began to defeat Gen. Logan—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHANDLER. As soon as this sentence is through, certainly.

The Democrats of Illinois began to defeat Gen. Logan at the time when he was last elected by a method which I propose to expose to the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator allow me to say that he has mentioned Gen. Logan's name for the first time during the course of this debate?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; but I do not consider an aspersion upon a dead man any the less effective or to be in any better taste because the name is not mentioned. The Senator declared that one of his most distinguished predecessors had been elected by an ingenious trick, and he meant Gen. Logan. If he did not, will he say so?

Mr. PALMER. I certainly meant in that election; yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. And I mention the Senator whose name you did not.

Mr. PALMER. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that I think Gen. Logan was elected by an ingenious trick, and I think my colleague will bear out the statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to discuss that question, with the permission of the Senator from Illinois.

The Senator for some purpose drags Gen. Logan's election into this Chamber and declares that he was elected by an ingenious trick. Mr. President, immediately after the election in Illinois in 1884 the returns showed 26 Republicans and 25 Democrats in the senate and in the house 76 Republicans and 77 Democrats. It was apparent that the election of Senator would turn upon one vote. In the sixth Chicago senatorial district Henry W. Lehman was the Republican candidate, and Rudolph Brand was the Democratic candidate. The returns on election night showed that Lehman had 390 majority. On an unofficial canvass of the second precinct the returns showed that Lehman had 420 and Brand had 274. They showed that the Republican Congressman, Adams, had 432 and the Democratic candidate had 255.

To the surprise of everybody when the official returns of the second precinct came in they showed Lehman 220 instead of 420, and Brand 474 instead of 274, and this change elected Brand instead of Lehman. There had been a bold alteration which elected Brand by 10 majority, and this would have given the Democrats a majority of 2 in the Legislature. Governor Hamilton, however, disregarded the fraud and gave the certificate to Lehman, and upon an investigation of this bold attempt of the Democracy of Illinois to defeat Gen. Logan it subsequently appeared that after the election and after the forgery of the returns, to wit, on the 21st of November, the ballot boxes were taken possession of, and in order to back up the fraudulent returns 200 Republican votes were taken out and 200 Democratic votes put in with Brand's name.

These last were printed by Hanscom & Co., after the election, on the order of Joseph Chesterfield Mackin, who, with W. J. Gallagher and Arthur Gleason, county clerk, was convicted of the fraud, and Joseph Chesterfield Mackin was also convicted of perjury and sent to the Joliet penitentiary for five years.

Mr. President, that was the initiation by the Democratic party of the attempt to defeat Gen. Logan. A contest arose at Springfield similar in its length to that which attended the canvass of the present Senator, and during this protracted struggle a Democratic Representative died, and here comes in the ingenious trick to which the Senator alluded. He had been a Democrat from a district supposed to be Democratic, and when the special election took place a Republican was chosen and went to Springfield and elected Gen. Logan as Senator.

Now, the Senator from Illinois has called that an ingenious trick. What is the ingenious trick which he has taken occasion to put upon the records of the Senate in derogation of his famous predecessor? Simply this, that the Republicans kept their own counsels, did not advertise with a brass band what they were about to do, took the pains to get out their votes, and on election day went to the polls and chose their man. Mr. President, if it is an ingenious trick not to communicate to the canvassing committees and the candidates on the other side how many votes you intend to bring to the polls, and not to tell them whether you intend to get out your full vote or not, or whether you intend to give away the election, then the Republicans of this district were exceedingly ingenious. But there was nothing dishonest, there was nothing dishonorable in what they did, and there was nothing to compare to the cold-blooded, deliberate attempt of the Democracy of Illinois to prevent the reelection of Gen. Logan by fraud and forgery and perjury, for which the leading Democrats who engaged in the business were sent to the Joliet penitentiary.

Mr. President, this is the history of the attempt to defeat the election of Gen. Logan. I have alluded at a little more length to the way in which the present Senator from Illinois was elected. With the record of the Democracy in the case of Lehman and Brand in our minds, it would be very easy to imagine what artifices may have been adopted to induce Cockrell and Moore to vote for the present Senator. I make no charges, but I say that the air was at that time, and has been down as late as the published letter of Mr. Edward S. Wilson, chairman of the Democratic State committee, addressed to the Democrats of Illinois, and published in the Chicago Inter Ocean of February 25, 1890, full of rumors which would attribute their action to anything in the world except the desire to obey the wishes of the free people of Illinois.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the claim of the Senator from Illinois, with which he fills out so large a part of his speech, that he sits here upon a higher pedestal than any of the rest of us, or has a higher, or nobler, or more popular title to the seat which he occupies than the rest of us, may well be dismissed, and I wish the Senator had left it out of his speech. At all events, I regret that he did not leave out his attempt to put an imputation upon Gen. Logan, who left the Democratic party, as the Senator did, went into the Army as a Union soldier, as he did, became a Republican, as he did, and, contrary to the Senator's course, remained with the Republican party, and was nominated as its candidate for Vice-President, and died in the Republican faith.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHANDLER. Always.

Mr. PALMER. I ask pardon. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, I am not done yet.

Mr. President, I have nearly finished my reasons why it is not expedient at this time, in my judgment, to submit this constitutional amendment to the Legislatures of the free people of the country for their acceptance or rejection. There is, however, a seventh reason, which is very weighty with me, and which arises from the present condition of the suffrage in the United States. I believe that before we undertake to enlarge the scope of popular elections, and to have more popular elections instead of fewer, it behooves the American people, when they find time to leave their money and their merchandise and their questions of tariff and of free silver, to take up and settle fundamental questions concerning the present condition of the suffrage. Before committing more elections to popular suffrage let us see what we can do to purify the suffrage and to secure honest elections in this country.

Mr. President, I subdivide my suggestions on this point in this way: There is in a very large portion of the country a complete violation of the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution. It is absolutely and totally destroyed in three States of the Union. When a condition of things exists in a State by which not over one-third of its voters can be brought to the polls there is an evil, a defect, a wrong which needs to be remedied before we undertake to extend the sphere of popular elections. I have here the vote given in the seven South Carolina districts at the last Congressional election. It is as follows:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

First district.....	Brawley.....	7,249;	Crum and scattering.....	1,363
Second district.....	Tillman.....	9,956;	Smith and scattering.....	1,689
Third district.....	Johnstone.....	8,942;	Tolbert and scattering.....	1,837
Fourth district.....	Shell.....	10,373;	Ensor and scattering.....	2,230
Fifth district.....	Hemphill.....	9,432;	Alexander and scattering.....	1,396
Sixth district.....	Stackhouse.....	9,022;	Deas and scattering.....	2,431
Seventh district.....	Elliott.....	3,792;	Miller and scattering.....	4,725
Totals.....		58,765		14,731
		14,731
		73,496

Population, 1890.....	1,151,149
Number of voters, reckoning 1 to every 5 of population.....	230,229
Number of voters which would be cast if 4 out of 5 voters went to the polls.....	184,184

The total vote was 73,496; the population was 1,151,149, and the ratio by the present apportionment of the inhabitants to each Congressman is 173,901. The number of voters in South Carolina, reckoning 1 to every 5 of the population, would have been 230,229. Estimating the number who would vote if 4 out of 5 voters went to the polls, there should have been cast in South Carolina at this election 184,184 votes, instead of which there was cast only 73,496.

In the seven districts in Mississippi there were 46,535 Democratic votes, and 14,127 opposition votes, making a total of 60,662. The population in 1890 was 1,289,600, the number of voters, reckoning 1 to every 5 of the population, 257,920; the number of votes which would be cast if 4 out of 5 voters went to the polls is 206,340, but only 60,662 went to the polls. The statement in detail is as follows:

MISSISSIPPI.
First district.....	Allen.....	2,786;	Scattering..... 35
Second district.....	Kyle.....	7,635;	Buchanan..... 3,949
Third district.....	Catchings.....	8,689;	Hill..... 2,767
Fourth district.....	Lewis.....	5,498;	Frazer..... 1,572
Fifth district.....	Beeman.....	6,303;	Scattering..... 8
Sixth district.....	Stockdale.....	9,340;	Griffin..... 3,768
Seventh district.....	Hooker.....	6,284;	Mathews..... 2,028
Totals.....	46,535		14,127
	14,127
Total vote.....	60,662

Population, 1890..... 1,289,600
 Number of voters, reckoning 1 to every 5 of population..... 257,920
 Number of votes which would be cast if 4 out of 5 voters went to the polls..... 206,340

I have in my hand an extract from a speech made in the recent Mississippi constitutional convention on the 15th day of September, 1890, by I. T. Montgomery, a colored delegate, who spoke in favor of the plan for a new apportionment. This was what this subdued colored Republican of Mississippi, who had managed in some way to get into that constitutional convention by the grace of God or of the Democratic party of that State, said:

The population of Mississippi is, negroes, 949,424; whites, 594,453; total, 1,543,877.
 Black voters..... 189,884
 White voters..... 118,890

Black majority..... 70,994

I now read from his speech:

This bill will affect the voting population of the State as follows:

Present voters—white..... 118,890
 This bill will restrict..... 11,889

And leave a net white vote of..... 107,001

Present voters—negroes..... 189,884
 This bill will restrict..... 123,334

And leave a net negro vote of..... 66,550
 Giving a white majority of..... 40,551

In a State where there is a black majority of 70,994.

I read further from Mr. Montgomery, this distinguished colored Republican who had been kindly admitted to the society of the whites who held this convention:

As a further precaution to secure unquestioned white supremacy, the committee—

I think he was on the committee that did this—have fixed an arbitrary apportionment of the State, which fixes the legislative branch of the government at 130 members and the senatorial branch at 45 members.

Of the members of the house there are from white constituencies 72 members; from black constituencies 58 members; leaving the majority of white constituencies 14.

Of the senatorial branch there are from white constituencies 24, and from black constituencies 21.

Mr. Montgomery further says:

I have stood by, consenting and assisting in striking down the rights and liberties of 123,000 freemen.

That is the condition of the suffrage in the State of Mississippi, and whether the people of Mississippi, black and white, are dying for the opportunity of reflecting by the people the able Senators who now represent that State upon this floor this deponent saith not.

The condition in Louisiana is as bad:

LOUISIANA.
First district.....	Meyer.....	10,834;	Warmoth and scattering... 6,291
Second district.....	Lagan.....	10,948;	Coleman and scattering.... 6,838
Third district.....	Price.....	11,318;	Beattie and scattering..... 65
Fourth district.....	Blanchard.....	8,307;	Gince and scattering..... 324
Fifth district.....	Boatner.....	11,993;	Green and scattering..... 935
Sixth district.....	Robertson.....	6,611;	Scattering..... 5
Totals.....	60,001		14,458
	14,458
	74,459

Population, 1890..... 1,118,587
 Number of voters, reckoning 1 to every 5 of population..... 223,717
 Number of votes which would be cast if 4 out of 5 voters went to the polls..... 178,972

Here we are, Mr. President, considering this grand panacea for some assumed popular evil or popular grievance to be remedied by allowing the people to vote directly for United States Senators, having before us this condition of the suffrage in three States, and with the virtual disobedience and destruction of the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, which the Senator from Illinois glorified in such lofty and eloquent language when he had the honor to be a Republican governor of the State of Illinois.

Mr. President, the condition of suffrage is also lamentable on account of the illiteracy of the voters in many of the States of the Union. I will not enlarge upon this point if the Senate will kindly allow me to insert in my speech this extract from the remarks of my late colleague, Senator Blair. Senators can see that it is not the whole of his speech:

Table showing the condition of the suffrage, or the number of illiterate voters, in certain States at the time of the last census.

States.	Total number of males of 21 years of age and upward.	Number of males of 21 years of age and upward who can not write.

Total.....	4,154,125	410,550	944,424	1,354,974

Of the above illiterates 60.7 per cent are colored and 39.3 per cent are whites. In ten of the above-named States more than 30 per cent of the voters are illiterate.

In six of them the illiterates are about 50 per cent.

In South Carolina 52 per cent are illiterate.

The State of Alabama has 120,858 illiterate voters. Its popular vote in 1880 was 151,507.

The State of Georgia has 145,087 illiterate voters. Its popular vote in 1880 was 155,651.

The State of Mississippi has 111,541 illiterate voters. Its popular vote in 1880 was 117,078.

The State of Louisiana has 102,932 illiterate voters. Its popular vote in 1880 was 97,201.

While it is true that in many of the States not one-half of those entitled to vote actually did so, yet the wonderful nearness of the number of illiterates to the number of those who exercised the right of suffrage is startling.

The truism that no government which rests upon universal suffrage can long continue unless the suffrage is intelligent, in the light of the above facts presses itself upon our attention with renewed force. The words of James Madison, uttered in 1836, are a present warning: "A popular government without popular information or the means of acquiring it is but a prologue to a farce or tragedy, or both." Nearly half a million of the white and almost a million of the colored voters in the South can not read the ballots which they cast. But thirteen years have elapsed since the latter class was given the ballot. At that time all of them were grossly ignorant not only of letters, but also absolutely devoid of all knowledge of the rights and obligations of citizenship. During the last ten years the number of illiterates in the country has increased about 400,000, though the percentage of illiteracy to the whole population has decreased nearly 2 per cent. It would, however, take forty years to dispel this illiteracy at this rate of diminution.

The percentage of illiterate white males over 21 years of age by the census of 1880 is 7.8, and of colored the rate is 68.7. There is no perceptible change in this percentage for the better, judging from the fact that the illiterate population increased, according to a statement of the Commissioner of Education, between the years 1870 and 1880, 581,814 persons. We would then have at the present time an illiterate white voting population of 852,665, doubtless a million at the present time; illiterate colored voters, 1,016,580, probably not far from 1,100,000 as the total of illiterates, and making an illiterate vote at the present day of not less than 2,000,000 in this country. At the time this calculation was made it was 1,869,245. Generally the number is placed at more than 2,000,000. Such estimates can never be more than approximately correct, but they are in my belief practically greatly understated, because the technical qualification of being able to write one's name, however crudely, is very slight evidence of capacity to comprehend political issues or to discriminate intelligently between candidates for public positions.

This observation derives special significance when it is still further considered that the enumeration must of necessity rely generally as to the possession of even this qualification upon the verbal statement of the party concerned, who is not likely to make an unpleasant admission of incapacity against himself.

I do not believe that more than two-thirds, or at the most three-fourths, of the voting population of this country is to-day in possession of a degree of proficiency in the arts of reading and writing that qualifies them, through the use of those arts, to exercise the right of suffrage more intelligently than do those totally illiterate. The school education of great multitudes is nominal, not real.

This illiteracy of the suffrage is an evil to be remedied before we undertake to enlarge the scope of popular elections.

Thirdly, Mr. President, the condition of suffrage is lamentable on account of the situation in our great cities. Not only is the black vote suppressed throughout the South, not only is there an enormous illiterate vote at the South and elsewhere, but in the great cities of the Union there is a degradation of the suffrage so astounding that it may truthfully and justly be said that municipal government by the people is a failure, and that there is no republican government in the great cities of the country.

There is an immense vote cast by the ignorant, by the degraded, by the criminal classes in New York City, and there is coming into this country an enormous influx of foreigners unable to read and write, inferior in every way, incapable of appreciating our institutions and of casting an intelligent ballot. These newcomers, as soon as they reach our soil are, as I have had the opportunity to say elsewhere, made voters, without regard to the prohibitions of our naturalization laws.

All the male immigrants who remain in New York City become voters without regard to the prohibitions of our naturalization laws whenever a great political party determines to bring them to the polls.

In New York City during October, 1891, and before the November election, about seven thousand naturalization papers were issued, nearly all by one judge, who examined each applicant and his witnesses to his satisfaction, and signed his orders at the rate of two per minute and as many as six hundred and eighteen in one day. There were many classes of frauds committed.

Papers were issued where the aliens named in them had not been in the country five years; where there should have been preliminary declarations, but no proof of such was required; where there had been such declarations, but final papers were issued without their production, on the false assumption that the applicants had arrived under the age of 18; where witnesses were recorded as testifying to the five years' residence, when they had known the applicant only a few hours, the witnesses being professional perjurers, each swearing in hundreds of such cases; where the applicants were not sworn to make true answers when under examination; where a clerk of a court, on orders signed by the judge, gave out full naturalization papers without the appearance in court of any applicants or any witnesses; where the minutes showed that subjects of Great Britain renounced their allegiance to the Emperor of Germany; where, upon names being handed outside the court to persons engaged in making fraudulent naturalizations, papers for those names were brought back on orders signed by the judge either without any evidence or upon evidence wholly fictitious; and where the face of the papers showed to the judge that preliminary declarations had been made less than two years before he signed the orders for naturalization—in some cases less than four months before! If it is difficult to credit the foregoing assertions, a few irrefragable cases may tend to induce belief.

Mr. President, this is the shocking condition of the suffrage in America, and instead of undertaking to restore it to purity and integrity, the Senators who have submitted these constitutional amendments and have made such lengthy speeches in their behalf, are gravely proposing that we shall at once as the present duty enlarge the sphere of popular elections and make the first important amendment of the Constitution of the United States in a hundred years, when, as I again say, there is no popular demand for such a change and when there is absolutely no grievance to be removed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator yield to me to introduce a bill?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH. I introduce a bill (S. 2899) to provide for the classification and disposition of the public lands, the protection and administration of the public forest reservations, and for other purposes.

This is a bill which undertakes to provide a general system for the survey and classification of all the public lands, the disposition of timber lands, and making some amendments of the law in regard to forest reservations. I ask that it may be read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me to present some morning business?

Mr. PALMER. I will.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order. When a Senator has risen to reply upon an important subject-matter, which has just been considered by the Senate, it is not, in my judgment, a fitting thing for him to be interrupted or taken off his feet for morning business, which ought to be introduced at the time when the Senate devotes itself to morning business. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order being called for, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is recognized.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask what is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized by the Chair as entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I want to state to the Chair that I think the Calendar is in order by unanimous agreement. I disagree with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. PALMER. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the Senate beyond a very short time.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, in answer to the rebuke administered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I desire to say that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] himself had anticipated my desire. The Senator from Illinois indicated to me by bowing his consent when I expressed a wish to be heard.

Mr. PALMER. That is correct.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wished to present a little morning business. I do not now, however, propose to do it.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 37) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of Senators by the people.

Mr. PALMER. I wish merely to say, sir, in a very few minutes, that so far as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] arraigns me for an attack upon the memory of Gen. Logan, I think he himself has been the first, and the only person until he did so, to mention Gen. Logan's name at all.

That which I characterized as a trick has been so regarded in Illinois, and laughed at and condemned in Illinois, and I think now there is a dispute as to who deserves the credit of the trick in the neighborhood where my colleague and I live.

The fact is that the Twenty-fourth district, I believe it is, of Illinois is very largely Democratic. A Democratic representative named Shaw died, and a special election was ordered. Judge Leiper, of Cass County, was nominated by the Democrats to supply the vacancy. The Republican managers made an arrangement by which a man named Weaver, who was an insurance agent and who traveled over the district as if he were engaged in his ordinary business, was to run as a candidate. His name was not mentioned otherwise than confidentially, but his supporters turned out in the afternoon of the day, as I recollect the story, and the ballots were deposited, and he was elected. I think Leiper got 200 votes, perhaps, in a district of several thousand, and Weaver got three or four hundred. He traveled the district ostensibly engaged in his business as an insurance agent.

I characterized that as an ingenious trick, and I think I was justified in doing so. That vote determined the majority that elected one of my most distinguished predecessors.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the Senator mean Gen. Logan when he said that?

Mr. PALMER. I did not mention any name, but I knew Gen. Logan was the Senator elected.

Mr. CHANDLER. You knew it was Gen. Logan's case?

Mr. PALMER. I did, but I never imagined that there was any malice about it, nor do I suppose now, as it was a public matter, that it is a thing about which I ought to be silent. It was illustrative of the mischief of electing United States Senators by the votes of members of the Legislature. It was a trick, understood to be a trick, laughed at by the Republicans as a trick, and denounced by the Democrats as a trick.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was a popular election.

Mr. PALMER. A popular election, but a trick nevertheless.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was not a trick in the Legislature.

Mr. GRAY. Allow me to ask the Senator from Illinois if the insurance agent to whom he has referred as having been elected as a Republican representative was regularly nominated by the Republican party?

Mr. PALMER. By no means. It was not suspected by the Democrats until after it was discovered late in the afternoon of election day that the Republicans were voting at all. [Laughter.] Their insurance agent had gone around the district making his arrangements and the Republicans turned out to vote in the evening. It was a revelation to the Democrats. They had been beaten without knowing that they were opposed. That is the fact. If my friend can find in my reference to that any evidence of malice toward Gen. Logan or any evidence to depreciate his memory, the suggestion is supplied by his own mind and not by mine nor by those who heard me.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has very kindly referred to some facts in my own political history. I suppose there is no man in the State of Illinois whose public life has been more open than mine, and I suppose there is no man in Illinois who has been supposed to act more according to his own will—I was about to say his own convictions—who has acted according to his own will more conspicuously than I have.

The Senator is mistaken in one fact. Gen. Logan was never an antislavery Democrat. I was. Gen. Logan went into the Army in 1861, some time after I did. Gen. Logan had his own motives for doing so. I am not called upon to characterize them, and I certainly do not characterize them in any offensive way. He acted according to the convictions of his own conscience and his own sense of duty; but he was never an antislavery Democrat. I was from the beginning. I think I inherited that feeling. My father voted for Thomas Jefferson in 1804, I think it was, and I had been trained in that faith, hostile to slavery. I do not think I ever in my life, while slavery was an existing institution, suppressed an expression of my opposition to slavery.

When the war broke out I entered the Army early, went into the Army on the 9th day of May, 1861, as the colonel of a regiment, elected by the votes of my neighbors and those who knew me. I served in the Army as brigadier-general and major-general of volunteers. I did so from a sense of duty.

After the war was over I was elected governor of Illinois upon the basis and upon the theory of standing by the public faith, paying the debt incurred by the war in gold. I was in favor of such legislation and amendment of the Constitution as would secure the results of the war. I was open and outspoken, and I have taken nothing back yet.

In 1872, after the Republican party had adopted all the heresies of the old Whig party, I refused to go with it. In 1860, when the Republican party was organized, it was not a protective-tariff party, and Mr. Blaine says in his most admirable book that the protectionists came into the war for the sake of protection—in substance, without any feeling, without any sympathy with the antislavery party; and when the Republican party adopted all the fallacies of the Whig party I separated myself from it, and voted for Mr. Greeley upon the principle—a very ludicrous principle now—that the subject of the tariff should be referred to the people of the respective Congressional districts.

Mr. HOAR. On the ground that Mr. Greeley was not a protectionist?

Mr. PALMER. No; I did it upon the ground I have just stated, that the question of protection was distinctly referred to the people of the several Congressional districts. I voted for Mr. Greeley because he was an honest man; I voted for Mr. Greeley because he was a man of generous heart and impulses. After the war was over he was for the return of peace and peaceful methods. There was none of that vengeance in his heart that has characterized so many of the Republican Senators.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. As he is alluding to something which all of us had an interest in in our humble way, I ask what quality of Horace Greeley was not possessed by Ulysses S. Grant which determined the Senator to vote for Mr. Greeley in preference to Gen. Grant?

Mr. PALMER. Because Ulysses S. Grant had around him, as is well known, a class of dishonest men who were wasting the public Treasury and demoralizing public affairs.

Mr. HOAR. Did not Mr. Greeley have around him a class of men who had endeavored to overthrow the country itself?

Mr. PALMER. I expect he had. I have never seen a good man who had not some rascals around him. Perhaps I am an exception to the rule myself.

Mr. President, I am anxious to relieve my friend the Senator from New Hampshire of any difficulty in tracing me. I say that I was an antislavery man. I say that I left the Republican party when the Republican party left its own principles and became a tariff and protection party, and sought under the guise of the services that party had rendered the country in the war to cover up the wondrous steal of the protective tariff.

Those were the views that controlled me, and I was controlled by other considerations of the same character. I was opposed to the theories of the Republican party as to the powers of the Government. I am a State's rights man, essentially a radical. I believe that this is a Union of independent States, the Union to last forever, and that the effect of the war was not, as is held by some, to overthrow the Constitution but to perfect it. I felt that the war gave no new powers to the Government; on the contrary, that the war simply restored the Constitution, maintained the Union, and that all its limitations, all that was the Constitution before the war remained the Constitution after the war except so far as it was amended by express provisions.

Those were my theories; and I trust that in the discussion of this interesting question I make all the admissions that can be demanded of me, so that if this matter shall be discussed again, it shall not be deemed a proper argument against this proposed amendment of the Constitution that I favored the fifteenth amendment.

I think furthermore that this great question does not depend upon the fact to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, that our suffrage is not perfect. The same men whom he characterizes as unfit for the right of suffrage in the large cities vote for members of the State Legislatures. The same class of men to which he refers who should be excluded from suffrage in the cities elect members of the Legislature.

As to the pertinency of the Senator's argument he seems to have taken this as the text upon which to ring criticisms upon these various abuses. The Senator reminds me of a good old Baptist preacher I once knew. He said (and it does not seem either exactly to have been in harmony with the Baptist creed) that he could preach against slavery and drinking whisky from any text in the Bible. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to be able to preach in regard to certain matters from a text upon any subject whatever.

The contest in Illinois, and I may be pardoned for speaking of personal matters, is exactly as the Senator describes it. It is exactly as he stated it to be, with this difference: There were 204 members of the Illinois Legislature; there were in three districts that I carried Republican holdovers; the Republicans had nine or ten or more holdover senators, men who were elected in 1888. The senator from the Peoria district—and my colleague may verify the truth of my statement—the senator from the Hancock district, and the Senator from the Coles district, were elected in 1888. In 1890 I carried those three senatorial districts, so that if those senators had voted according to the instructions or advice of their constituents I should have had 104 votes on the first ballot.

I was once elected to the State senate of Illinois as an anti-Nebraska Democrat. I was elected in November, 1854. In 1856 I made up my mind that I could not act with the Democratic party. I had then two years of my term yet to serve. Under the belief that it was the duty of the representative to obey or act according to the opinions of his constituents I resigned my seat in the State senate. I said, "Having been elected as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, and feeling it to be my duty to take part in the organization of the Republican party in the State, I resign my seat, that you may elect some person who will more faithfully represent your views."

That is my theory of a representative government. If that principle had been adhered to by the three Republican senators in the districts I have named I should have had 104 votes on the first ballot. It was not done. Without going into the figures, I will state that I carried the State of Illinois by a plurality.

I simply mention this to illustrate the principle of the election of Senators by the people. I do not doubt that my State has always furnished distinguished men here, and will do so, whether the Senators are chosen by the Legislature or by the people. I am proud of the men. I am proud of Breese; I am proud of Trumbull; I am proud of Logan; and I have the most profound respect for my colleague, who was elected by another mode; but that does not affect the substantial theory.

Does the Senator prefer elections by the Legislature because that Legislature speaks the will of the people? If so, can not the people speak their own will more directly? Does the Senator prefer an election by the Legislature because it does not speak the will of the people? Then I oppose his doctrine. I maintain that Senators are or ought to be representatives of the people. I have none of the fears of popular excesses. The evil that you can trace directly to the popular influence upon the Government is nothing as compared with the evil that can be found where the popular will and the popular interest have been disregarded.

Mr. President, I ask pardon of the Senate for occupying even this much time. I want to say again to the Senator from New Hampshire that it will afford me the greatest pleasure at any time to furnish to him, or to any other gentleman, my opinions and not mere narratives of my public life, because I have spoken in daylight. I have spoken to the people I presume from a thousand platforms in Illinois. I have not an opinion that needs to be proven. I have never uttered an expression that could not be proven by applying to me for information on the subject, and it affords me a certain degree of satisfaction.

The Senator says I was a Republican governor. Mr. President, I helped make the Republican party. I was the president of the first Republican State convention that ever sat in Illinois. While the Republican party was being devoted to the uses for which it was made, the country has furnished no grander or nobler party. It was only after it fell into the hands of men who have controlled it for the advancement of their own private interests that it has become the foe to the country that it is now. When the war was over I was for Horace Greeley, because Horace Greeley felt that the war being over peace should prevail. I have never sympathized with the men who have sought to keep up a struggle.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow, he must have made this discovery about the Republican party some time between 1868, when he was elected as a Republican governor, and 1872, when he supported Horace Greeley. Can he state the point of time when he discovered that the Republican party had become thus perverted from its original and noble uses?

Mr. PALMER. I will not undertake to specify the exact point of time, because mental processes are not produced by single events. I do not know that I could say definitely. If the Senator from New Hampshire will give me the date of many of the public acts of the Republican party I shall be able to refer to those dates at least with what the lawyers call reasonable certainty.

I ask pardon, Mr. President, for going into this matter. As a lawyer I have been accustomed to confine my attention to the particular subject before the court, or wherever I may be. I have never found it profitable to suffer myself to be misled from the main point, and I have spoken rather under the impulse of feeling now than from any conviction that I was contributing much to the proper results of this debate.

I will simply remark in conclusion that I have listened to the Senator from New Hampshire with great care; I have observed every point he has made, and I must say that he has no doubt made the very best of all the material that existed for opposition to this scheme of reform, and if the committee, of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is a member, will make a report, I trust then the Senate will hear me at such length as the subject may demand.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous agreement the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator have his amendment referred?

Mr. CHANDLER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator from Illinois will permit the joint resolution to be referred to the committee.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Oregon asks me to allow the proposed amendment to the Constitution to be referred to the committee. I hope the motion will be made by one of the gentlemen who—

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PALMER. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the joint resolution and the proposed amendments will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is recognized.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President I do not care to take up the time of the Senate on this side-show debate except to say a word.

To begin with, this general question which has been discussed to-day and which has been discussed by my colleague heretofore, has been before one branch or the other of Congress, if not both, for a good many years, and it is not a new question in this body. I will not, however, take any time in discussing that subject to-day. I simply desire to say a word in reference to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] as well as by my colleague the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and that is with reference to the election of a member of the house of representatives of our State Legislature from the Thirty-fourth district in our State, which I suppose may be understood to have turned the scale and reflected Gen. Logan to the United States Senate.

I did not happen to be in the Senate at the time when that occurred. I remember it distinctly, because I remember a dispatch that I received. I was in New York, with the committee of which I am chairman, when Gen. Logan was elected. I received a dispatch from him on the evening of the 19th of May, with the simple words, "I am elected."

Everybody, I think, agrees that the election of Mr. Weaver secured Gen. Logan's election. Let me say a word in reference to Mr. Weaver. Mr. Weaver, while he was an insurance man, as I remember it, and it was no discredit to him to be one, was a very excellent gentleman. In the first place, he was a very excellent soldier in the late war. While I do not know the fact, my impression is that there was no public nomination of this man for the office, and I do not know that there was anybody nominated on the other side, though I do not remember about that.

Mr. PALMER. Capt. Leeper.

Mr. CULLOM. I know the other side voted for Capt. Leeper, but whether he was nominated in a formal way I do not know.

Mr. PALMER. He was a public candidate.

Mr. CULLOM. Suffice it to say that Mr. Weaver was elected. It probably was true, as the Senator from New Hampshire has said, that there was no public demonstration of his candidacy, and I could not say whether there was any demonstration at all except by the people who went to the polls and voted. Whether anybody knew that there was any contest in the district until the polls were closed is more than I know, because I was not in the State. But there was no fraud in the sense of undertaking to control anybody in the exercise of the elective franchise.

I expect the truth is that those who desired Gen. Logan's election and those who belonged to the Republican party and those who desired Mr. Weaver's election to the Legislature, because they were anxious that Gen. Logan should be elected, did quietly go the polls and vote for Mr. Weaver, and it turned out at the close that he had received a majority of the votes cast. How many were cast I remember nothing about; but I certainly think whatever characterization might be made upon that means of securing an election or holding an election, whether it might be called a trick or what not, it certainly was a peaceable performance on the part of the people who went and voted for Mr. Weaver and secured his election without any coercion or attempt to prevent anybody from voting.

Mr. PALMER. Nothing was ever more peaceable.

Mr. CULLOM. Nothing was ever more peaceable, I think, but it resulted in Gen. Logan's election, honest, so far as I know, open-handed, and Mr. Weaver got a majority of the votes cast.

That is all I have to say about that. Whether Gen. Logan knew anything about the election I do not know, but I do know that in all the conduct of that long controversy, beginning about the middle of January and ending on the 19th of May, I never heard anybody insinuate on either side that there was any corruption attempted on the part of anybody in connection with that contest, either in the Legislature or out, so far as the two candidates were concerned.

The Senator from New Hampshire has referred to the famous Lehman-Brand case in our State, which was a contest, and substantially he stated the facts as they occurred, except that my recollection is, and my colleague perhaps will bear me out in it, that Mr. Mackie was not convicted in the United States court but in the State court; and he was convicted on an indictment for perjury in connection with the stuffing of ballot boxes or something of that sort, which resulted in the count apparently in favor of Brand, while it was perfectly evident and proven that Mr. Lehman was elected, and the governor gave him the certificate and he was seated as a member.

Now, Mr. President, my colleague and I are getting along very well as friends in this body. We have known each other very many years. I am not disposed to have any personal controversy with my colleague, certainly not in any offensive way; but I must be allowed to say that on the question of charging the Republican party with corruption and doing bad things and all that my colleague seems to me extravagant in his declarations.

I say this for this reason, Mr. President. My colleague was a Republican, and a very good one, from the time he joined the Republican party as an antislavery Democrat, dating back to 1854, I think, as he states. He was a consistent Republican from that time on up to about the time of the famous Greeley campaign.

My colleague says to-day that he left the party because of the things that he repeated, and it seems to be mainly the tariff legislation that drove him out of the party. Now, the tariff legislation was just as strong while he was in it as it has been since. The famous Morrill tariff act was in force from 1861 or 1862, I think.

Mr. HOAR. In December, 1860, it was passed.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes. So we had the tariff all the way along from that time up to the Greeley campaign, and ever since, and a pretty strong one. I confess myself that sometimes I think the tariff is a little too high in some respects; but the policy of the Republican party always was in favor of protection not only from the beginning of the war, but from the beginning of the party's existence, I may say, and the Whig party before it, back to the beginning of the Government itself. So far as the tariff is concerned, while it may be characterized by my colleague in any terms that he sees proper, because it is the common way of attacking it, yet everybody knows that the Republican party was always in favor of a tariff.

I am free to say that the Republican party does believe in many things that the Whig party believed in. We believe in a tariff and so did the Whig party. We believe in internal improvements and so did the Whig party, and so do our Democratic friends now, I think, pretty generally. They are in favor of the river and harbor bills as much as any of us. They did not used to be so much in favor of the river and harbor bills as they are to-day, but substantially the whole country is agreed upon the general policy of internal improvements in the interest of the great business and commerce of the country.

While I shall not discuss with my colleague whether a protective tariff is right or wrong to-day, because we shall have that before us at some future time, I do think that the remarks of my colleague that it is the breeder of all the corruption that exists in this country is a declaration which ought not to be made before the Senate or anywhere else. That is all I want to say on that point.

Now, in reference to my colleague's election. I believe my colleague intimated that he was elected on a little different basis from what I was. That is true in so far as a State convention nominating him was concerned, and a State convention not nominating me; but I am inclined to believe, if we are going to compare notes here to-day, that probably my last election was perhaps much more unanimous than was his, because the Legislature, without any effort on my part, reflected me, and it did not depend upon any votes that were uncertain when the Legislature convened. But that is all I desire to say about that.

Whether my colleague got the majority of the popular vote cast in the State I have not the figures here to show whether his statement is true or not. I am not sure about it. It so happens that I was not in the State when that contest was going on, but I remember that the Republican newspapers of the State were very decided in taking the position that my colleague did not get a majority of the popular vote of the State.

I simply desire to say with reference to the three men who were elected as Independents or Farmers' Alliance men, Mr. Tauberneck and Mr. Moore and Mr. Cockrell, that my recollection is that two of these men, Tauberneck and Cockrell, were elected on positive pledges by in part Republican votes, on the pledge that they would not support my colleague for the United States Senate, and finally that they would not support Governor Oglesby or anybody else on the Republican side nor Governor Palmer or anybody on the Democratic side, who were party men. My impression is that on an examination of the vote as filed in the office of the secretary of state it would be a question whether my colleague got a majority of the votes cast at that election. He was elected to the Senate by the Legislature, elected by 101 Democrats and 2, I believe, of the 3 Independents. I think that was true, was it not?

Mr. PALMER. Two out of three.

Mr. CULLOM. So that he is here by a certificate from the governor, just as the rest of us are.

Now, Mr. President, so far as regards the main question, if there is to be a discussion upon that hereafter I may have something to say. I will say now, so far as I am concerned, that I am not afraid of submitting any question to the great body of the people whether it is the election of a Senator or the election of a President.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I will only consume a moment. I am exceedingly obliged to my colleague for the cheerful testimony he bears to the fact that I was one of the early Republicans of Illinois. My colleague has the best possible means of knowing, because he was not one at that time. My colleague in 1856, I believe, was an elector for Fillmore and received about 37,000 votes as a Fillmore candidate for elector in the State of Illinois. My colleague at that time did not regard the Republican party as being a protection party. He had been an old Whig and, if he had been a Republican, I take it he would have united with the party in 1856. He did not.

The Senator from New Hampshire kindly asked me at what particular time I made up my mind that the Republican party was not a good party to act with. Some time between 1856 and 1860, giving my colleague four years, he discovered that the Know-Nothing party, the American party, the Fillmore party, was not a good party to act with, and joined the Republican party. I suppose it is not much worth while to go back so far into the history of public men and trace them up, for I do not know just who could stand the test. I only know so far as I am concerned that I have always supposed I understood where I was at each particular election. I will say in conclusion that I have never kept anybody in doubt at any moment of my life, if he thought enough about it to ask me, where I stood politically.

My colleague has kindly hinted and said something about the Republican party always being a protection party. When that discussion is in order, I think I shall show him that the portion of the party to which I was attached never was a protection party, and I shall rely upon testimony of that very good historian, Mr. Blaine, who says that hundreds of men supported Mr. Lincoln in 1860 without thinking of the tariff at all. I am sure I was one. I am sure I favored the war tariff. I was in the Army. It was not my business to look after the revenue. I had helped to elect Mr. Lincoln and I had the utmost confidence in his patriotism. I understood from the newspapers that reached me sometimes that the Republicans had adopted a war tariff. If it had been twice as much and would have brought twice as much money I would have favored it.

I heard of the issue of the greenbacks and other matters of that kind. They were to me matters of no consequence. I was ready to give the last man and the last dollar to put down what we termed the rebellion. I was in favor of paying the last dollar of the war debt in gold, because we had told the country that we would do so. I trust it will not be necessary for anybody to prove where I was for a number of years. I favored all the constitutional amendments. I will state in addition, so that there may be no trouble hereafter, that I wrote the message which my friend has read, and I thank him for doing so. It reads well, and I will say if he as proud of every act in his life as I am of that he has a right to be proud. I did it because it was right; I did it because I favored it. I spoke clearly. He says I spoke eloquently. I suppose it was because I felt ever word that I uttered. If any confession of faith can be more complete than mine, gentlemen can make it themselves.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois who told the country we would pay in gold?

Mr. PALMER. I did, and so did every other patriotic man in the country at that time. We told the foreigners, "Let us have your money." We said, "We shall pay you back in coin."

Mr. STEWART. But we did not put that in the law.

Mr. PALMER. No, I presume we did not say "gold." The Senator is right.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I simply want to say one word in response to the suggestion of my colleague. My colleague refers to the time when I got to be a Republican, and says that he was in ahead of me. I want to give my colleague credit for the fact that he was an antislavery man away back in 1854, and I do not know but before that time. I certainly know that he was then and from that time forward; but I want to say to him that I was elected to the Legislature in 1856 by the Republican and so-called Fillmore votes both, and tried very hard to elect a Republican speaker of the house but failed because somebody left the Republicans and gave one majority to the Democrats.

Mr. PALMER. I thought my colleague was himself elected speaker at that time.

Mr. CULLOM. No, not in 1856; in 1860. So after all I am inclined to think I have been as good a Republican as my colleague, and I have been a good deal better one since 1872.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to make an inquiry of one of the Senators from Illinois.

Mr. HAWLEY. We are getting well acquainted with the Senators from Illinois, and I am very glad to hear it; I enjoy it as far as we have gone, but I really do not think what they were some fifteen or twenty years ago is so extraordinarily important now. I call to their attention the example of Gen. Jack Logan, who was undoubtedly a very intense Democrat before the war, and I am sorry our friends did not give him more hearty credit for his Jacksonian patriotism. He put everything away and went into the struggle with all his extraordinary vigor of personality and eloquence; and when somebody called upon him one day on the stump, asking him whether he had not said this or that, referring to some extreme Democratic doctrine, a little while before, he said, "Yes, I was as big a fool then as you are now." [Laughter.] I suggest that we now go to that Calendar many of us have been longing for for a fortnight.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to get a little information from one or the other of the two Senators from Illinois. I should like to know from one or the other of them what was the trouble with Mr. Lincoln in his election for Senator at the time Lyman Trumbull was elected?

Mr. PALMER. I can tell you. He was not a Democrat.

Mr. DAWES. I have some faint recollection of somebody who could not vote for him for Senator at that time.

Mr. PALMER. I am one of them, I suppose. I could not, and would not, and did not.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. WILSON of Washington managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong;

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 1643) authorizing the Velasco Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas; and

A bill (S. 1645) making Velasco a subport of entry.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. CALL.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills this day received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

The bill (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond.

The bill (H. R. 4330) to repeal House resolution No. 104, first session, Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River.

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 6658) to vacate that part of Madison street, Georgetown, west of Back street, and extend Y street, in Burleigh, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 6794) regulating deposits in building and other associations in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7081) confirming title to lands in the subdivision of square 206, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 108) extending the time in which certain street railroads compelled by act of Congress approved August 6, 1890, to change their motive power from horse power to mechanical power for one year; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 118) to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT MEDICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire and report whether the medical society in said District admits to its membership colored physicians or physicians who have been or may be teachers in the medical school of Howard University being in all respects otherwise qualified, or makes any distinction in its membership by reason of color or of official relation to said university.

PORT OF PUNTA GORDA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will announce the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 527)—

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call up Senate bill 1956 on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I really feel that I must object.

Mr. FRYE. But it is in order. It was passed over informally, and it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill referred to by the Senator from Maine was passed over without prejudice.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1956) to amend an act entitled "An act establishing a customs collection district in Florida to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and to make Punta Gorda a subport of entry.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Punta Gorda, De Soto County, Fla., be, and the same is hereby, made a subport of entry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maine if the bill leaves Punta Gorda the subport of entry in the collection district of Key West?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, in Key West.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to make Punta Gorda a subport of entry."

CHAUNCEY M. LOCKWOOD.

The bill (S. 527) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood to commence suit in the Court of Claims for extra mail service on route numbered 16637, extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, to The Dalles, Oregon, and gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction to adjudicate the same upon the basis of justice and equity, and to render a final judgment therein for the value of such extra mail service performed as aforesaid; and from any judgment that may be rendered in the cause either party thereto may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the bar of the statute of limitations shall not avail in such cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. A. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 735) for the relief of L. A. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the petition and papers of L. A. Davis, of Chehalis, Wash., in which he claims $14,844 for services in carrying the English mails both ways over mail route numbered 15406, between Olympia and Monticello, in Washington, from about August 1, 1868, to June 30, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to know what the provision that no legal defense shall be interposed means. It may be right, but it is a very unusual provision. I do not ask to interrupt the passage of the bill now, but when the Senator who is in charge of it comes in perhaps I will recur to it again.

The bill was passed.

CENTENNIAL BOARD OF FINANCE.

The bill (S. 2107) to enable the Centennial Board of Finance, incorporated by an act approved June 1, 1872, to close its affairs and dissolve said corporation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREELY RELIEF EXPEDITION.

The bill (S. 136) for the presentation of badges to the officers and men of the Greely relief expedition was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in line 4, before the word "Winfield," to strike out "Commander" and insert "Captain;" and in line 9, after the word "and," to strike out "a sufficient sum" and insert "$1,000;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to procure and present to Capt. Winfield Scott Schley and his officers and men, respectively, suitable badges to be worn by them as an expression of the high estimation in which Congress holds their services upon the expedition for the relief of Lieut. A. W. Greely and his party, in the year 1884; and $1,000 for said purpose is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHAUNCEY M. LOCKWOOD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was called out unexpectedly and did not expect to be gone more than a moment. I wanted to offer some amendments to two bills which were passed in my absence. I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the bill (S. 527) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood, and also to the bill (S. 735) for the relief of L. A. Davis. I think the amendments are material, but they will only take a moment. I must ask that the bills be reconsidered for that purpose.

Mr. PASCO. I think Senate bill 735 went over without prejudice until the Senator from Oregon should come in.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was done with Senate bill 527?

Mr. PASCO. It was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair will state that both the bills, 735 and 527, were passed. The present occupant of the chair remarked that when the Senator from Oregon came in he might want to call his attention to a clause in Senate bill 735, but the record is that it was passed as it stands at present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 527 was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the votes by which Senate bill 527 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the language of the bill. It now reads:

And the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to adjudicate the same upon the basis of justice and equity, and to render a final judgment therein for the value of such extra mail service performed as aforesaid.

I move to strike out the words "for the value of such extra mail service performed as aforesaid," and let it stand "to render a final judgment therein." They may not want to render a judgment for anything. The bill compels the court to find a judgment for the claimant. It does not leave it open.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why not say "for whatever amount may be found due, if any?"

Mr. COCKRELL. It is just the same thing to say "for the value of such extra mail service, if any." That would be the same.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; "if any."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri state his amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 11, after the word "aforesaid" and before the semicolon, insert the words "if any."

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all right. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill may be put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to the bill it will be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all the amendment I desire to make.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. A. DAVIS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The next is the bill (S. 735) for the relief of L. A. Davis. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Beginning in line 11, the bill provides:

And the said court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said claim and render judgment for such sum as claimant may be reasonably and equitably entitled to for and on account of extra services rendered by him on said mail route in transporting such English mails.

I suggest that it be made to read "to hear and determine said claims upon the basis of justice and equity," and then strike out the remainder of the clause, which reads:

And no statute of limitations or other legal defense shall be available in such case.

"No statute of limitations" will do very well, but the words "or other legal defense" must be stricken out.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is evidently a mistake.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then there is no appeal given in this case as there was in the other.

Mr. MITCHELL. That can be added.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to insert, in line 13, after the word "and," the words "upon the basis of justice and equity," and put in the word "to;" so as to read:

And the said court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said claim, and upon the basis of justice and equity to render judgment for such sum, if any, as claimant may be reasonably and equitably entitled to, for and on account of extra services.

Then strike out "for and on account of," because that is a repetition.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then strike out the remainder down to the word "mails," put in a semicolon, and insert:

And from any judgment that may be rendered therein either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the clause so as to make it read:

And the said court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said claim and upon the basis of justice and equity to render judgment for such sum, if any, as claimant may be reasonably and equitably entitled to, and from any judgment that may be rendered therein either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire whether it is the purpose of the Senator, suppose this to be a judgment of $500 or $100, to give an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it ought to be given in a case of this kind, because we are removing the statute of limitations and referring an important question to the Supreme Court. We nearly always put that clause in in these special bills because there may be some principle involved that will settle hundreds of other cases. This is only an example, and therefore one case ought to be allowed to go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. It may be; but the Supreme Court of the United States is to-day burdened with a docket which will take four or five years at least to clear off, so that a case entered in that court to-day can not be expected, without new legislation, to be disposed of for at least five years.

The class of cases which go there are cases of great public importance with regard to the character of the question or cases of great importance to the private party by reason of the amount involved. The practice of sending to that court any little question, any little judgment which may come up to the Court of Claims it seems to me is a vicious one. Here is a case on an ordinary private claim not likely to involve any important question of law. Why that case should be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States unless the amount of the judgment be at least $5,000 I do not see. I shall feel compelled to interpose an objection to the matter unless the Senator will consent to such an amendment as to strike out that the case shall be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I shall object to the bill. If we can not send an appeal from the Court of Claims that may be a precedent for hundreds of other cases with the right of appeal, then we ought not to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to object to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. No, the other cases come here.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have just passed one bill with that amendment brought in from the committee, and it was simply an oversight that it was not put in this bill. I simply wanted this bill to stand on a footing with the one that has just been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to object?

Mr. HOAR. My attention was not called to the one which was just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill is objected to.

Mr. HOAR. I propose the following amendment:

Provided, There shall be a judgment for a sum exceeding $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri to object to the further consideration of the bill. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not tell in this case what amount is involved. We can not tell whether there are a million dollars involved in the decision or $10,000,000. Here is a case that it may be is only one out of ten thousand, and such cases have gone there to the court and it has taken three and four million dollars to settle them. Unless you give an appeal in such a case as that, when one decision is rendered they come in here and say, "here is a decision of the court in this case, and my case is exactly like it, and my case must be paid."

There will be no appeal taken by the United States officers, I hope, unless there is a just and sufficient cause. I think the Attorney-General of the United States can be intrusted with some discretion in this matter as well as the Senate. It is a reflection upon the Attorney-General that we can not intrust him with the power of taking an appeal for the protection of the interests of the Government; and if we can not trust our Attorney-General I shall object to the case.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator's amendment does not propose to limit the right of appeal to the Attorney-General.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Attorney-General is the attorney for the Government in all these cases, as the Senator ought to know.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment gives an equal right of appeal both on law and fact to the Supreme Court. There are upwards of 21,000 cases, if I am not mistaken in my recollection, now in the Court of Claims, a number likely to be largely increased by the Indian depredation cases and other special laws which we passed during the last session. The idea of giving to anybody who makes a claim of $100 or $150 against the United States a right to go to this supreme tribunal when we have a respectable and worthy court established for the purpose, it seems to me, with great deference to my friend from Missouri, is preposterous.

I am perfectly willing to leave the right of appeal in the Attorney-General, if, in his judgment, he thinks the case is one which is likely to be a precedent for a class of cases, but to give this unlimited right of appeal to either party I am not willing to consent to. Unless an amendment shall be consented to by the Senate to limit the right of appeal to the Attorney-General, if, in his judgment, the case is like to affect a class of cases, or unless the judgment be over $5,000, I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection, if you give the Attorney-General the right to appeal on behalf of the Government. That is all I ask for. It is the taxpayers I am looking after.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, let the bill go over without objection. I will prepare an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, and the next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNT WITH FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 1391) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency appropriation act, and to pay the balance found to be due said State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to inquire if this was the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. PASCO. It was the unanimous report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AVERY D. BABCOCK AND WIFE.

The bill (S. 1982) for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife, of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Avery D. Babcock, of Polk County, Oregon, and to Margaret I. Babcock, his wife, $2,000, to be equally divided between them, in full payment of their claim against the Government of the United States for the use and occupation by the United States of their donation claim numbered 58, in section 8, in township 6 south, range 7 west of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF PENSION FOR DEAFNESS.

The bill (S. 349) to increase the rate of pensions for certain cases of deafness was considered as is Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "month," to strike out:

and for severe deafness of both ears, approximating total deafness, shall receive an equitable proportion of the full pension; the degree approximating total deafness to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be made to appear to the proper authority that a soldier, sailor, or marine who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, had contracted in the line of duty a disability caused by wounds, injury, exposure, imprisonment, or disease resulting in total deafness of both ears, he shall be entitled to receive a pension of $40 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill why that provision should not be extended to all pensioners instead of merely to those who served in the army during the last war?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, there is no particular reason for not extending the provisions of the bill to all pensioners, but there have been no wars since the war of the rebellion. There were no applications before the committee of this character for soldiers of the Mexican war and none from those of the Seminole war. The classification is so exceedingly limited that it was not thought material to include them in the scope of this bill.

Mr. CALL. There were a great many in the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BATE. I should like to hear that bill again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has received its third reading; but if the Senator desires to submit an amendment the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading will be regarded as reconsidered.

Mr. BATE. I move to amend by inserting at the proper place the words "or Mexican war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert "or Mexican war."

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to the principle of that amendment. The pension acts for the benefit of soldiers of the Mexican war are service pension acts, and this bill is an amendment of the act approved March 4, 1890. I do not feel disposed to accept the amendment as far as I am concerned to extend the principle beyond the scope of the bill as reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the present consideration of Order of Business 197, being the bill (S. 371) granting a pension to John Chamberlain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was passed over at a former session without prejudice, and is in order. The bill was passed by the Senate, and the vote on its passage and third reading has been reconsidered. The question now is upon its third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will let that bill go over until to-morrow. I thought I had the papers relating to the case before me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be happy to furnish the Senator with the report in the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to look at the papers. Let the bill go over until to-morrow, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place.

INCREASE OF PENSION TO HELPLESS PENSIONERS.

The bill (S. 1910) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of certain soldiers and sailors who are totally helpless from injuries received or from diseases contracted in the service of the United States," approved March 4, 1890, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 12, after the word "shall" to strike out "within the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions or of the Secretary of the Interior be deemed pensionable at the rate of $50 per month from the date of application under this act," and in lieu thereof to insert "be pensioned at a rate not exceeding $50 per month from the date of application under this act, such pension to be proportioned to the degree of disability;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of certain soldiers and sailors who are totally helpless from injuries received or from diseases contracted in the service of the United States," approved March 4, 1890, be, and is hereby, so amended that soldiers who are not shown to be so disabled as to require the regular or constant personal aid and attendance of another person," but are shown to be incapacitated for performing manual labor and to periodically require the aid and attendance of another person, shall be pensioned at a rate not exceeding $50 per month from the date of application under this act, such pension to be proportioned to the degree of disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I should be very glad if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] would consent that the provisions of this bill might be extended to all the pensioners of the Mexican and Indian wars. I do not see why that meritorious class of citizens should not be equally entitled to the benefits of these pension bills.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, if Congress is ready to change the entire theory of the Mexican service pension act to a disability act and to these rated degrees of disability and pensions, that is one thing; but it manifestly would be unwise to insert in a bill providing for a specific degree of disability one class of disabilities applicable alike to the soldiers of the rebellion and the soldiers of the Mexican war, and leave the soldiers of the Mexican war to be entitled to a service pension and also to pension for any disability, whatever it might be. This is upon the line of consistent disability legislation as to the soldiers of the war of the rebellion, and it never has been mixed up with the service pension of soldiers of the Mexican war, except in some very extreme case deemed worthy of special legislation, as total blindness or a very great degree of disability. Those cases the committee has always treated with extreme consideration, and I think very properly so.

Mr. CALL. While I have no desire to embarrass the passage of this bill, I will suggest to the Senator that that proposition of his does not reach the case. The service pension is one thing and the pension for disability is another. It may be true that the Mexican war soldier has a disability of this description equally with the soldier of the civil war, and so of the old Indian war soldiers. They are very old and a very needy class of people and many of them have precisely the same kind of disability incurred in the same way as the soldiers of the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF PENSION DISABILITY.

The bill (S. 2137) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States, and become disabled," approved March 3, 1877, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States, and become disabled," approved March 3, 1877, so as to read as follows:

That the law prohibiting the payment of any money on account of pensions to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person who, in any manner, engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, shall not be construed to apply to such persons as afterward voluntarily enlisted in either the Navy or Army of the United States, and who, while in such service, incurred disability from a wound or injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.

The bill (S. 263) for the relief of the heir or heirs of John Howard Payne, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $205.92 for the payment of the amount due to the legal heir or heirs of John Howard Payne, late United States consul at Tunis.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The bill (S. 261) for the relief of the legal representatives and devisees of James W. Schaumburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives or devisees of James W. Schaumburg, deceased, the amount of the pay and allowance of first lieutenant of dragoons from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845, as heretofore found to be due to him by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania on November 23, 1875, after deducting such sums as may have been paid on account of such service; and appropriates the sum of $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for such payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT IMPROVEMENTS.

The consideration of the bill (S. 1307) to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill has been read through. I was authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to propose several amendments. At the suggestion of some Senators when the bill was previously under consideration, after its reading and some amendments having been agreed to, the bill was reprinted with the proposed amendments. I now ask that the amendments be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill to be acted upon will be the reprint of the bill in which the amendments of the committee are proposed.

Mr. HARRIS. The reprint of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in section 5, line 1, after the word "Commissioners," it is proposed to insert "of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to name all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations laid out or adopted under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 9, after the word "shall," to insert "report the same to Congress for appropriation and action, and shall;" in line 12, after the word "thereto," to insert "as Congress may provide;" and in line 19, after the word "shall," to insert "when the necessary money is appropriated;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That when said court shall have assessed the damages to be paid as to any parcel of land the use of which shall have been condemned, or which shall have been injured by the abandonment of a previously existing highway, and there shall be no controversy as to the persons who are entitled to receive the same or as to the distribution of the same among them, said court shall decree such payment to be made, and upon presentation of a duly certified copy of such decree to the Treasurer of the United States he shall report the same to Congress for appropriation and action, and shall make such payment to the person or persons appearing by such decree to be entitled thereto as Congress may provide; but where any such controversy shall exist or where there shall be any doubt as to the proper disposition of the compensation awarded, the court shall order that the damages assessed by it involved in such controversy or doubt shall be paid into the registry of the court, and upon the presentation of a duly certified copy of such order to the Treasurer of the United States he shall, when the necessary money is appropriated, pay the amount therein mentioned to the clerk of said court; and the claims of the respective parties thereto shall thereupon be heard and decided by the court as in interpleader suits in equity, under such general rules as may be prescribed by said court in general term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 4, after the word "court," to insert "and when the money has been appropriated and paid;" so as to make the section read:

That whenever any final decree shall have been made by said court under the provisions of this act for the payment of the damages to the parties or into the registry of the court and when the money has been appropriated and paid, the Commissioners shall be entitled to take immediate possession of the parcel of land in regard to which said order of payment shall have been made, and the court shall enforce such right of possession by proper order and by process addressed to the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 19. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall include in their annual report a full statement of their action under this act, and shall submit annual estimates of the expenditures necessary to be made under its provisions, as other estimates are submitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

The bill (S. 618) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I see that both of the Senators from Washington, where Seattle is situated, are absent, and therefore I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. That will be done in the absence of objection.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 13, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 12, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies on account of the postal service, payable from the postal revenues, submitted by the Sixth Auditor, with accompanying papers; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. ARNOLD, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLANCHARD, for ten days, on account of important business.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES, RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, asks that there be printed a thousand additional copies of the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the report from the Committee on Indian Affairs which I submitted yesterday, asking nonconcurrence by the House in the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and a request for a conference. My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who objected yesterday, withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] presents a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs on the Indian appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and to ask the Senate for a conference. Is there objection to this order being made?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EXECUTION OF DECLARATIONS AND OTHER PAPERS IN PENSION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. When the regular order was demanded yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] had a request for unanimous consent pending, and by consent that went over until this morning. The Chair will direct the Clerk to again report the bill, and will then ask if there be objection to its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That declarations of pension claimants shall be made before a court of record, or before some officer thereof having custody of its seal, or before some officer who, under the laws of his State, city, or county, has authority to administer oaths for general purposes, and said officers are hereby fully authorized and empowered to administer and certify any oath or affirmation relating to any pension or application therefor: Provided, That where such declarations or other papers are executed before an officer authorized as above, but not required by the laws of his State to have and use a seal to authenticate his official acts, he shall file in the Pension Bureau a certificate of his official character, showing his official signature and term of office, certified by a clerk of a court of record or other proper officer of the State as to the genuineness thereof; and when said certificate has been filed in the Bureau of Pensions his own certificate will be recognized during his term of office.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Pensions may accept declarations and other papers of claimants residing in foreign countries made before a United States minister or consul or other consular officer, or before some officer of the country duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes, and whose official character and signature shall be duly authenticated by the certificate of a United States minister or consul or other consular officer; and declarations in claims of Indians may be made before a United States Indian agent.

SEC. 3. That any and all declarations or affidavits now on file in the Pension Bureau which are considered informal by reason of not having been executed in conformity to the laws heretofore in force covering such, and in which it is shown or may be hereafter shown by proper evidence that the same were executed by and before an officer who was duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes at said date of execution, shall be accepted as formal as from date of filing such declarations or affidavits.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of said act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there any amendment reported to the bill?

Mr. RAINES. No; there is no amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes, 87; noes, 0.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint tellers—

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I think it best to call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 23, not voting 143; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CAUSEY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. ANDREW] has been sick for some days; and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and Mr. ANDREW was excused on account of sickness.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, and failed to hear his name called?

Mr. KYLE. I was in the Hall, and failed to hear my name called.

The name of Mr. KYLE was called, and he voted "nay."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. REED.

Mr. CADMUS with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. HULL.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KRIBBS with Mr. HUFF, until Thursday next.

Mr. HOAR with Mr. BROSIUS, for one week.

Mr. COBB of Missouri with Mr. POWERS, for two weeks, from April 12, 1892.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. LIND, until further notice; also the Bland bill, and all questions connected therewith. This pair not transferable.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee, from April 6 to April 21, inclusive.

Mr. CAUSEY with Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, until April 13.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. ATKINSON, from March 30 until canceled by the consent of both.

Mr. OWENS with Mr. ENOCHS, from April 2 to April 12, inclusive.

Mr. TURPIN with Mr. HOOKER of New York, including election case, until further notice, except on silver question.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, from April 2, 1892, until further notice. Not to be changed in the absence of either.

Mr. JONES with Mr. HERMANN, for one week, commencing Monday, April 11, 1892.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KRIBBS], but it was not to affect pension matters; so I have voted on this measure, and wished to make this explanation.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RAINES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

4TH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6049) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, without further audit, allowance, or restatement of the claims by the accounting officers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, or to their legal representatives in case of their death since the allowance of their claims by the accounting officers, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers, under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since January 15, 1890, namely:

TENNESSEE.

Terry Dickerson, administrator of A. A. Dickerson, deceased, of Giles County, $1,030.
James Erwin, Hamilton County, $170.
William Julian, Knox County, $33.
Henry J. Thornton, Lincoln County, $325.

MISSOURI.

J. W. Estes, administrator of William C. Estes, deceased, Cass County, $390.
James Simpson, of Miller County, $18.

KENTUCKY.

Solomon King, of McCracken County, $150.

WEST VIRGINIA.

John W. Byrd, administrator of William Probst, deceased, Pendleton County, $140.

OHIO.

Thomas Smith, Guernsey County, $80.

MARYLAND.

Airhart Williams, of Baltimore County, $140.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is some report accompanying the bill.

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. ENLOE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 649) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, under the act of July 4, 1864, submit the following report:

The committee, on February 9, 1891, had reported to it the letter of Hon. A. B. Nettleton, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a list of claims allowed under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers since January 15, 1890, amounting to $2,482, and have carefully examined the cases referred and find the same correct.

They therefore report back the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I am directed by the committee to offer an amendment to the bill. It is to insert one claim that was left out in making up the bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding after line 39 the words, "heirs of H. Cothes, deceased, of Ballard County, Ky., $3,735."

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire why these claims have not been paid?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. The gentleman from Michigan has been a member of this House long enough to know what a Fourth of July bill means. They are claims allowed by the Quartermaster-General, and were filed in his office prior to the 1st day of January, 1890. This is the last batch of those claims.

Mr. BURROWS. And they can not be paid without the action of Congress?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. They can not be paid without the action of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; a bill like this has passed in nearly every Congress.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. This is the last of those claims that will be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the aggregate amount?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. It is about $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this the only bill?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. It is the only bill and the aggregate amount is about $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the usual 4th of July bill?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Yes, it is the usual 4th of July bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. And this is the last of those claims?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. And I understand it is the last that will be reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that that branch of the business of the Quartermaster-General's Department is about closed up.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STONE of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MOLINE, ILL.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7365) to authorize the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7365) to authorize the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company, a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors or assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Mississippi River from a point at or near the eastern boundary of the city of Moline, in the County of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to the opposite shore of said river in the State of Iowa. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and at the option of said corporation, its successors or assigns, may be so constructed to provide for and be used also for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers for reasonable rates or tolls to be fixed by said corporation, its successors or assigns; and the Secretary of War shall have the right, from time to time, to revise, prescribe, and determine such rates of toll.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the said company building the same, be built as a drawbridge, or with unbroken, continuous spans: Provided, That if said bridge shall be constructed as a drawbridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot drawbridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans giving a clear width of water way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans to the draw shall give a clear width of water way of not less than 350 feet, and every part of the structure shall give a clear headroom of not less than 10 feet above extreme high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodations to the river traffic, and a draw shall, if practicable, as near the shore as the deepest water way will permit: Provided also, That in case of a low bridge, if the physical characteristics so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the length of the fixed spans may be reduced: Provided further, That the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge shall be erected: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over the draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains: And provided further, That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed with unbroken, continuous spans it shall have one or more channel spans each having not less than 350 feet clear channel way, and not less than 55 feet clear headroom above high-water mark; and the clear headroom under other than channel spans may be less than 55 feet, but no part of the superstructure of such spans shall in any case give a less headroom than 10 feet above high-water mark: And provided further, That the interests of navigation be not injured by such reduction in height, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of said river, and give a clear width of water way of not less than 350 feet.

SEC. 3. That any company constructing a bridge under the provisions of this act be, and they are hereby, authorized to lay on or under said bridge a railway track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite the point of location of said bridge, under the limitations and conditions herein: Provided, That said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge or obstruction touches.

SEC. 4. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which, also, no higher charges shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 5. That all railways desiring to use said bridge shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 6. That the structure hereby authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such restrictions for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design of the bridge and map of location, giving for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the sounding, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are decided by the Secretary of War to be such as will not materially affect the interests of navigation, the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of construction such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other and suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent channel, and for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through the draw and raft spans, as the Secretary of War shall order to be constructed and maintained, at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge from the hours of sunset to sunrise such lights as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board; and the said structure shall be changed or altered at the cost and expense of the owners thereof from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law, when the public good, in the judgment of Congress and the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date thereof.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this is a bridge bill, in the ordinary form, and I ask that the reading may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill, and states that it is a bridge bill, authorizing the construction of a bridge, and that it is in the usual form. He asks to dispense with the further reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa. I will say that the amendments are purely matters of phraseology, with two exceptions. One is to change the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge, upon the suggestion of the Secretary of War where it is shortened, to which there is no objection. In another matter the Secretary of War suggests a provision in the bill, "if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be to the public interest." That the committee reports against; and in regard to that I desire to say under the precedents that have been set by the committee and the House and the Senate as to these matters, they are invariably stricken out on the theory that the interests of navigation are to be looked after. I ask that the amendments be considered in gross.

The amendments are as follows:

In section 1, after the word "Iowa," in line 10, insert "provided a location is found within such limits suitable to the interests of navigation."

In section 2, line 16, after the word "shall," insert the word "be."

In section 3, line 1, before the word "company" substitute the word "the" for "a;" in line 2, strike out the words "they are;" and substitute therefor the words "it is;" in line 3, strike out the words "or under," and, in line 12, strike out the word "laid" and substitute therefor the word "tried."

In section 6, before the word "suitable," in line 22, strike out "and;" in line 25, after the word "order," insert "at any time;" in line 32, after the word "lights," insert the words "or other signals;" and in line 39, substitute the word "or" for the word "and," and at end of word "require" insert letter "s."

In section 7, change the words "two years" to "one year," and the word "four" to the word "three."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments in gross? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYES of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

KANSAS JUDICIAL DISTRICT, THIRD DIVISION.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. It is the bill (H. R. 7020) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the term for holding court therein.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Miami, Linn, Bourbon, Crawford, Cherokee, Labette, Neosho, Allen, Anderson, Coffey, Woodson, Wilson, Montgomery, Chautauqua, Elk, and Greenwood, in the State of Kansas, shall constitute the third division of the judicial district of Kansas, and a term of the circuit and district courts for said districts shall be held therein at the city of Fort Scott on the first Monday of May and the first Monday of November of each year. The remaining counties heretofore embraced in the first division of the judicial district of Kansas shall constitute the first division thereof.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits which shall hereafter be brought against a defendant or defendants who reside in said third division of said district shall be brought in said third division, but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of said district, such suit may be brought in either division of said district in which any defendant or defendants reside, and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of the divisions of the judicial district of Kansas, may be served and executed in either or all of the divisions.

SEC. 3. That all crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States heretofore committed within the counties comprising the third division of said district, and all crimes and offenses against said laws known and defined as infamous hereafter committed within the limits of the Quapaw Indian Reservation, in the Indian Territory, and of which the courts in Kansas have heretofore had jurisdiction, shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined at the terms of the district court heretofore provided for: Provided, That all such crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said district and marshal of said district shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside and maintain an office at the city of Fort Scott, each of whom shall, in the absence of the clerks or marshal, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of his principal within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the court for which they shall be respectively appointed, and they may be removed by such court at pleasure, and the clerk and marshal shall be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies.

SEC. 5. That all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district court of said district of Kansas which would, if instituted after the passage of this act, be required to be brought in the third division of said district, may be transferred by consent of all the parties to said third division of said district, and there disposed of in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all process, writs, and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as taken at and returnable to the term of court in the third division of said district in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto originally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will permit it to go over for a short time.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any objection to this bill. It has been thoroughly considered by the Judiciary Committee, and there is no Representative from the State of Kansas who interposes any objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have received some communications in regard to this proposed new division, and I would like to examine them before I consent to the passage of the bill, so far as I am personally concerned. I hope there will be no objection to its going over temporarily.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill does not involve any additional expense, as they have already a court-house and all the facilities for holding a court at Fort Scott.

Mr. HOLMAN. I remember that the gentleman [Mr. SIMPSON] was very much opposed to the new division when his predecessor brought it up in the last Congress.

Mr. SIMPSON. But that was an entirely different proposition: that was a proposition to cut the State in two.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, this has the same tendency.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Perry, a prominent member of the bar of Fort Scott, formerly district attorney, assures me that this bill is not only acceptable, but is greatly desired by them, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on the bill going over, as delay might be fatal to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Delay can not be fatal to it. It has passed the Senate, has it not?

Mr. OATES. No, it is a House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, there can be no material delay from letting it go over for the time being. I wish to submit to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] some communications which I have received in regard to it.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman ought to insist on this bill going over, when, as I believe, all the members representing the State of Kansas have been consulted in regard to it and none of them have opposed it or suggested any reason why it should not pass. Such being the attitude of the Representatives of the State, even if some private individuals do object, I do not think my friend from Indiana ought to insist on delaying the bill on that account. However, that rests with him; he has, of course, a right to object if he desires.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course I do not like to object to a bill which is satisfactory to the Representatives of the State, but I should like a little time to examine the communications which I have received.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that there is no appropriation attached to this bill nor any additional expense.

Mr. HOLMAN. It involves some additional expense; not an additional judge, or an additional clerk, or an additional marshal, but still some additional expense. However, I do not attach great importance to that. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that some gentleman may be recognized to bring this bill before the House to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRODERICK. Immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a request for unanimous consent to consider this bill may be submitted to the House to-morrow morning immediately after the clearing of the Speaker's table.

Mr. HERBERT. In the morning hour?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the morning hour, certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, does that mean that it may be called up in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Before the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the bill?

A MEMBER. It is to establish a third division of the judicial district of Kansas.

Mr. HERBERT. It will be subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. It will be subject to objection. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RELIEF FOR SUFFERERS BY FLOOD.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to such destitute persons as may require assistance in the district overflowed by the Tombigbee River and its tributaries by the recent flood, and that he be authorized to employ such means as he may deem necessary to carry the purpose of this joint resolution into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to antagonize any proposition of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN]; but my convictions are so strong upon the subject of the Government in engaging in charitable enterprises that I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be so referred.

HENRY S. COHN.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1105) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn, late of the One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to recognize Henry S. Cohn as second lieutenant Company C, One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteers, from February 7, 1863, the date he was assigned to duty as second lieutenant of that company, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of that grade to date May 22, 1863, when discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The Committee on Military Affairs having reported an amendment inserting, after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-three," the words "without additional pay or emoluments," the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARUTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH A. CLAPP.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of House bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Sarah A. Clapp, and that it be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah A. Clapp, formerly Sarah A. Chadwick, the pay and allowances of a surgeon of volunteer cavalry from the 15th day of November, 1861, to December 27, 1861, and the pay and allowances of an assistant surgeon of cavalry from December 27, 1861, to the 25th day of August, 1862, she having served as such surgeon and assistant surgeon for the time mentioned, respectively, in the Seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, under her maiden name of Sarah A. Chadwick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Has the bill been reported by any committee?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Yes, sir; it has been favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. KILGORE. I am very much inclined to demand the regular order.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I wish my friend would allow some explanation.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well; I am willing to let this go on; and then I think I shall object to these requests for the balance of the day.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOMOCITTTO AND PEARL RIVERS, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hold in my hand two memorials of the Legislature of Mississippi. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD. They are very brief and will occupy only a very short space.

Mr. BURROWS. To what do they relate?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. To the improvement of rivers in the State of Mississippi.

There being no objection, the following memorials, which were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi earnestly requests the attention of the honorable Congress of the United States to the necessity and importance of improving the navigation of the Homochitto River.

The present condition of the river is such as to demand immediate attention; owing to obstructions in and near the mouth of the river it is impossible to navigate the same, although by the surveys and reports of competent engineers the river is susceptible of navigation as far as Bucks Ferry, or some 25 miles of its course; that thousands of acres of the most valuable lands in the State are rendered useless by reason of the obstructions mentioned, thus causing the river to overflow its banks. That by the reports of said engineers and estimates made for the restoration of deep water, and to render said river navigable and restore said lands to use, it would require that a canal be opened to the Mississippi River, connected with the channel of the river, at a cost of, say, $30,000, which sum is insignificant in comparison with the beneficial effects to the inhabitants of that section of the State in thus increasing the value and importance of said river and would greatly facilitate and cheapen transportation, and thus materially contribute to the commercial interests of the State.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully ask that the honorable Congress of the United States will make the necessary appropriation and cause this much-needed improvement to be begun at as early a day as practicable, under the supervision and control of competent officers of the United States Engineer Corps; and your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the governor be respectfully requested to forward the accompanying memorial to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house of representatives March 18, 1892.

R. E. WILSON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate March 25, 1892.

D. P. PORTER,

Secretary of the Senate.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, would respectfully show that the proposed appropriation of $28,000 by your honorable body for the improvement of the navigation of Pearl River is wholly insufficient; and if the amount named can not be increased, then such sum can be much more advantageously expended than in the way specified in the bill, which provides for the expenditure of $10,000 from Edinburg, the head of navigation of the river, to the city of Jackson, and from Jackson to where the river forms a junction with Lake Borgne, the sum of $18,000.

Jackson is the capital of the State, a railroad center, and a city of commercial importance. Here the river in its southward course first touches a railroad point, and below Jackson it again diverges and runs through a territory not accessible to railroads. This makes Jackson the railroad shipping point and market place of all staves, timber, cotton, and other produce transported on the upper river and in a great measure the entire river.

In the immediate vicinity of Jackson the stream is very crooked. Salt Petre Point is just above the city. From it, in a direct line to the bridge which crosses the river leading into Jackson, the distance is only 1½ miles, while around the bends of the stream the distance is about 7 miles. From Salt Petre Point there is a small channel, about 40 feet wide and 14 feet deep, known as Tan Yard Branch, which extends from one bend of the river to another. By the expenditure of $12,000 the river could be turned in this channel, the effect of which would be to straighten the stream and greatly diminish the distance between the points above mentioned. On the road leading into Jackson from the east is a very fine bridge across the river, which bridge has lengthy approaches, the whole structure being of iron and recently erected at great cost.

This is the main entrance for the wagon and country trade for Jackson, and is therefore not only of the greatest importance and benefit to the city, but to the country east and southeast of the city for a distance of 40 or 50 miles. Just below this bridge is the crossing of the Alabama and Vicksburg Railway. By reason of the tortuous course of the stream just above the city there is now, and has been for some years, a tendency on the part of the river to break across at a point east of and above the bridges above mentioned. If this cut-off should occur, the channel of the river would be thrown further to the east, and the bridges above mentioned would only be serviceable for crossing the old bed of the stream and other bridges with other long and expensive approaches would have to be erected over the newly-made channel. This threatened change in the course of the stream, if it should occur, would very seriously impair the navigation of the river and would greatly interfere with public travel and commerce, to say nothing of the great expense which would be made necessary in order to build other bridges. The situation here described and the threatened break in the river will be observed by reference to the accompanying map.

Your memorialist would therefore respectfully ask an additional appropriation of, say, $12,000 to change the course of the stream as above indicated. This sum, together with that which has already been recommended, would constitute but a small outlay by the Government when the importance of the object in view by the expenditure is taken into consideration. But if the present bill is so perfected that an additional amount can not be appropriated, then your memorialist would urge that the sum last mentioned be taken from the general appropriation for the improvement of the river and expended for the purpose of straightening the channel of the stream as suggested. To straighten the channel as here shown will not only prevent the threatened disastrous break, but would greatly lessen the work of improving the navigation of the river north of Salt Petre Point, and the change would render the river north of Jackson more suitable for the rafting of logs and the transportation of timber, lumber, etc.

Trusting that the suggestion here made will meet your approval, your memorialist will ever pray, etc.

I certify that the foregoing memorial was adopted by the house of representatives of Mississippi March 31, 1892.

R. E. WILSON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

I certify that the foregoing memorial was adopted by the senate of the State of Mississippi March 28, 1892.

D. P. PORTER, Secretary of Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5974) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, for fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. CALL as the said conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELECTION CONTEST—NOYES VS. ROCKWELL.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I desire to give notice that on next Tuesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall call up for consideration the contested-election case of Noyes vs. Rockwell, from the Twenty-eighth Congressional district of the State of New York.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COOPER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the matter which I desire to submit here to-day might as well, perhaps, go into the newspapers or be submitted to a committee. But I am a member of this House. It is a part of my duty to be present on this floor, and it will be my pleasure to meet the gentlemen whom I see here day by day face to face; and it is my right and my desire that what I say here to-day shall be said to them face to face in order that they may know precisely the facts in regard to the matter about which I speak.

Commissioner Raum, as a part of his defense to the charges of official misconduct made against him here and elsewhere, has procured and offered a mass of testimony to show that Mr. S. R. Hersey, whom he sees fit to denominate my private secretary, has violated certain regulations of the Pension Office.

The charge, as I understand it, is that he has, by the use of my name, examined into the condition of claims, and reported to the attorneys or claimants the result of such examination and that he has received a fee for such services.

He has also discovered that three years ago, soon after I came into office, Maring & Slusher, pension attorneys, procured my name to a great number of Congressional call slips, which the office then refused to recognize. He has even procured and filed with his papers here an affidavit of one David L. Gitt, who represents himself as a real estate agent here in Washington, that, I quote the exact language of his deposition:

During 1888, when Gen. Black was Commissioner, there were a great number of slips went into the office by GEORGE W. COOPER, member of Congress from Indiana, at Columbus, Ind., bearing the printed card of Maring, Slusher & Co., of Columbus, Ind. These, by reason of their great number, were such an imposition upon the Congressional privileges of the office that I felt called upon to present the matter to Gen. Black's personal attention for orders as to their disposition. Gen. Black told me to throw them into the waste-paper basket.

Attention is also called to the fact that in the summer of 1889 the firm of Maring & Slusher had printed a large number of Congressional call blanks, with the facsimile of my signature thereon, for use in their office in calling up cases. These constitute the specifications of offenses with which an effort is being made by Commissioner Raum to couple my name: First, as to Mr. Hersey's conduct, I neither excuse nor justify it, but it is my duty to state the facts, and from them I think the public will see that whatever has been done of wrong I have infinitely more cause to complain than any other person, and that I have not the slightest responsibility therefor. I first met Mr. Hersey in the Pension Office, where he was employed as assistant chief of the western division. I was introduced to him by Mr. R. A. Durnan, then and still chief of that division. I understood that he had been connected with the Pension Office for a number of years, having, I think, been formerly appointed from Massachusetts.

This was in the winter. I do not remember to have met him again until early in the summer following, when he called on me at the House. He then told me that he had lost his place, and that he had opened an office here in this city as a pension attorney; that necessarily his business would be light, and that he wanted to make an arrangement with me in connection with other members of Congress to assist us in whatever work we might need to have done in the Pension Office. I made inquiry about him and learned that he was considered entirely competent and reliable. I needed such a person, and employed him at the rate of $20 per month. The arrangement was that he should furnish me with such assistance and information as I might require of him in relation to all matters connected with pensions, and for this purpose he had authority to use my name on Congressional call slips.

During most of the time he worked for me pension attorneys were allowed four days out of every week in which to examine their cases. Those living here and such as were able to come could, under the rulings of the office, see the papers in their cases, but those who were not able to come had no other method of learning the status of their cases except by corresponding with the Bureau or calling to their aid a member of Congress. I learn that recently there has been some modification of this rule. I do not know whether the Pension Office makes any pretense to correspondence with nonresident attorneys for status of claims. I do know that hundreds, and I might say thousands, of complaints have been made to me by claimants and attorneys to the effect that their letters and communications are wholly ignored. As a sample of such complaints I submit these letters. I think I can say that I have received like letters from almost every State and Territory in the Union:

AUBURN, IND., March 10, 1892.

DEAR SIR:—

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I understand the gentleman from Indiana has risen to a personal explanation in relation to the statement that in some way his clerk has received compensation for calling up pension cases. He is now about to comment upon certain letters with the view of showing that the Pension Office did not discharge its duty in answering inquiries.

I submit that this does not relate to the gentleman's question of personal privilege, but to another matter now being investigated by a committee; and I submit that the gentleman should confine himself strictly to the charge which has been made against him in the newspapers and elsewhere. Beyond that he ought not be permitted to go.

Mr. COOPER. I am endeavoring to explain (and the gentleman will see, when he hears the correspondence, that it is entirely pertinent to my explanation) how it came that Mr. Hersey was called upon for this information, and how it became necessary that he should take pay therefor. When these letters have been read—by the time I get through with them—the gentleman will see precisely how pertinent the reading of them is to the matter in hand.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not see that the gentleman obviates the objection I make. It seems to me he should confine himself entirely to the charge made against him—that of his clerk calling up pension cases for pecuniary compensation. These transactions in the Pension Office have nothing to do with the gentleman's personal explanation; they relate to a matter now being investigated by a committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. But a gentleman rising to a personal explanation has always been permitted to refer to matters incidental to that explanation—matters showing the real situation; otherwise a gentleman seeking to make a personal explanation might be placed at a great disadvantage.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit the matter to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. So far as the gentleman from Indiana has proceeded the Chair can not make any decision respecting the point raised by the gentleman from Michigan; but the Chair will say to the gentleman from Indiana that he hopes he will confine himself strictly in his remarks to a "personal explanation."

Mr. COOPER. I shall be glad to do so; and when I am done I think the gentleman on the other side will see the pertinency of my remarks and will join in expressing satisfaction that the country has been given the information which I am here offering.

Mr. BURROWS. But when the gentleman is done it will then be too late to make the point.

Mr. COOPER. Well, if it is not pertinent, you can strike it all out.

This letter goes on:

Why is it that applications for pension under act June 27, 1890, which were executed and filed within the last six months, are adjusted and allowed in preference to applications under same act executed in July and August, 1890? I filed an application for Albert Robins in July 27, 1891, which claim was allowed January 30, 1892. He is a stockholder in Farmers' Bank, and is also cashier, and in good circumstances financially. I also filed application for Vincent Dilley October 23, 1891, and his claim was adjusted and pension granted February 25, 1892.

Now, I will give you two cases of the other extreme. I executed application for pension under act June 27, 1890, for John Perce, August 1, 1890, and I have repeatedly written the Department asking to have his claim adjudicated. Also called up his claim through you or VOORHEES, I do not remember which of you, and up to date neither he nor myself have received any word from the Department, with the exception that he was ordered for examination (April 8, 1891, when examined). Here is another. John C. Woodford executed his application for pension under act June 27, 1890, July 21, 1890, and up to date he nor myself have not received any word from the Department except a card acknowledging the receipt of his claim. He has not been ordered for examination, and the same effort has been made to have his claim acted upon. I could give a number of other cases similar to these, and I would like for you to look up this matter and see whether it can not be remedied. If you think best you can hand this letter to the Pension Department investigating committee. There is certainly something very rotten in the system employed in the Pension Department.

Yours,

DR. W. H. NUSBAUM,
Pension Attorney.

Hon. C. A. O. McCLELLAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

HILLSBORO, ILL., March 22, 1892.

SIR: I would respectfully call the attention of your Committee on Pensions to a case of the most flagrant neglect and outrageous treatment of a pensioner on the part of the Pension Bureau that ever came to my knowledge, and would ask your assistance in righting the matter. James McGraw, Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, was allowed a pension of $12 per month May 13, 1891, but has not been paid on this allowance one cent, since which time the attorney in the case has written to the honorable Commissioner five times, to the Hon. Isaac Clements, United States pension agent, twice; to the President once; to the Secretary of the Interior, once; to the Hon. E. LANE, member of Congress, Seventeenth Illinois district, twice; to Mrs. Logan, once, and lately a petition signed by all classes of people who know the soldier as a worthy man and needy. No response of any kind whatever has been received from the Pension Bureau in reply.

Advise me of your action in the case, and oblige,
Respectfully,

LOUIS WAGNER.

Hon. Mr. COOPER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I was called down from work that I was engaged in and informed that a discussion of the pension investigation was going on. I had the honor some time ago to be appointed a member of the investigating committee by the Speaker of this House. That committee has acted diligently. It has a session almost every day; the conduct of the office, the conduct of the head of the Bureau of Pensions, is now under consideration. The chairman of the committee—

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield the floor to the gentleman for the purpose of making a speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota to rise to a question of order, and will state it.

Mr. LIND. I desire to make this preliminary statement, Mr. Speaker, in explanation. I will assure the gentleman from Indiana that I will not attempt to make a speech. But this preliminary statement tends to emphasize the force of the point of order I make. As I was about stating, the chairman of this committee, and every member of the committee, so far as his time permitted, has been present at every meeting, and the committee have acted zealously and diligently in regard to the matters presented to them in the conduct of this investigation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not put on file here the proceedings of that committee. They have not been reported to the House.

Mr. LIND. But, Mr. Speaker, I have risen to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LIND. I am endeavoring to do so. I submit it is not only bad taste, but that it is against every rule, every rule of courtesy and decency, and against the rules of this House. It would be against the rules of any court sitting in this land anywhere for any purpose, even though an inferior justice's court, to discuss the issues before the court and appeal to that court, or an examining committee, before it had concluded the final hearings and was prepared to submit an orderly statement of the issues presented to it. Now the gentleman is proceeding—

The SPEAKER. But perhaps the gentleman does not understand. The gentleman from Indiana rose to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LIND. Well, he has concluded that.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, no; I have not begun.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that is perhaps true. The gentleman has not begun it.

Mr. LIND. Well, the gentleman has no right to submit the letters, such as he has been reading, as a personal statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to make the point of order that because there was pending an investigation in the Pension Office, this was out of order.

Mr. LIND. If the Chair will permit me, I will state my position.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. LIND. I am making a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state it?

Mr. LIND. I am endeavoring to do so. I may not be as facile of speech as some gentlemen—

The SPEAKER. The Chair only wants to understand what the point of order is.

Mr. LIND. It is that if the gentleman, under the peculiar circumstances disclosed in that committee, desires to rise to a question of personal privilege, it is eminently right and proper, and I think it would be exceedingly becoming on his part. But if at the same time he undertakes to anticipate the action of the committee, it is then out of order. And not only that, but it is decidedly out of order for him to take up and review, by ex parte letters, the operations and action of that department in proceedings which are now the subject of an investigation on the part of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to make the point of order that the letters of the gentleman have no bearing on the question of personal privilege.

Mr. LIND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed a moment, I understand the gentleman from Indiana to claim that these letters have a direct bearing on the question of his employing the man Hersey as his clerk. That is to say, that the action of the Pension Department necessitated on the part of the members of this House, the securing of some aid in ascertaining the condition of the pension claims.

Now, we all know the difficulty about this matter. I want to make no reflection upon the Pension Department. I do wish that there was some law to prevent members from interfering with the office at all. I do not say that the Commissioner of Pensions is wrong at all, for we know he is flooded with letters that it is impossible to answer, as in the cases cited by the gentleman from Indiana. But certainly the gentleman has the right to read letters to show the necessity that drove him to the employment of this clerk, and what that clerk did afterwards is directly material to the issue.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. COOPER. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] should be required to state the question of personal privilege at the very outset and not be permitted to proceed with a speech before stating the question of personal privilege. If he rises to explain away the charge that his clerk has been personally interested in calling up pension cases and has received pecuniary remuneration therefor, that is a charge which it is very proper for him to rise in his place as a matter of personal privilege and explain.

Mr. COOPER. Now, if you will allow me, this very letter which I am reading is one of the letters Mr. Hersey looked into.

Mr. BURROWS. Just a moment. Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is no way relevant to that matter to say that the Pension Department neglects to reply to the calls of attorneys or of members of the House. Even if that is so, it is no offense for any member of the House to employ an attorney to aid him in doing business with the Pension Office. That is no offense, and if that was all there was of it it would not involve a question of personal privilege at all. It is my right or the right of any member to employ whomsoever he sees fit for that purpose; but the gravamen of the offense charged is that the clerk of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] received pecuniary consideration for doing this. Now, that is a question of personal privilege upon which he ought to be heard, and I submit the Chair ought to confine the gentleman to that charge.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious, it must be obvious to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that at the very outset of this explanation it is necessary to show why the attorney was employed, the reason for the employment, the necessity for it.

Mr. BURROWS. But it is not an offense to employ an attorney. That is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know it is not an offense, but the reason—

Mr. BURROWS (interrupting). And that does not involve a question of privilege.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it has not been the common practice on the part of members of the House, and I think the condition of things existing in the Pension Office and its relation to the claimants for pensions might necessitate the employment of an attorney or an agent to look into this matter.

Mr. BURROWS. A large number are employed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that it must be clear that this is a proper preliminary statement, as an explanation of what subsequently transpired.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit it is not, and that the gentleman ought to state the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that it is very difficult, of course, for the Chair to determine what is or what is not strictly in order on a question of personal privilege.

The Chair is frank to say that he does not see much relevancy in the letters the gentleman is now reading. At the same time, when a gentleman honestly believes that it is a necessary and proper part of his personal explanation, the Chair dislikes very much to place his judgment against that of the gentleman, if he honestly believes this is necessary in his personal explanation.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the Chair allow a suggestion right there? The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] is an interested party. His judgment may be warped. Things that seem entirely irrelevant to the unprejudiced mind may seem to him pertinent, and that is the reason we appeal to the Speaker of the House to discriminate what is pertinent and what is not, and to eliminate from this discussion what is not relevant.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana please state what in his judgment is the relevancy of these letters?

Mr. COOPER. The letter which I am now reading, from Hillsboro, Ill., is a letter upon which, in the employment of the gentleman who has been denominated my private secretary, I obtained the status of a case.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it has never been said, so far as I know, that I have been charged with having received pay for this work; but it has been charged that my secretary has done it, and an effort has been made to show that I was cognizant of it and that he exercised the authority of using my name for the purpose of carrying on that business. Now, what I wanted to show was, and the reason why I have proposed to read this letter was, to show that what Mr. Hersey did as to some of these things, those that I knew about, those that came to my knowledge, were proper, and to follow that up by showing that what he did, which I did not know about, ought not to be charged to me. This letter I acknowledge I sent over there and obtained the status of the case, but I did it in answer to this letter, and he received no compensation for it whatever; but I contributed out of my own meager means the sum of $20 a month to bring about this information and to give it to these people. I could not get it otherwise. That is the relevancy of it.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman, these letters—

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Why could not Judge LANE have inquired as to this claim, as the claimant lives in his district?

Mr. COOPER. This man is a constituent of Judge LANE's, and you will see by the letter that he did call it up.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman, the charge is made that his clerk, or someone in his employ, had obtained information at the Pension Office as to pension claims, the status of which was sold for a consideration. The gentleman claims that these letters will show that the inquiries he made were inquiries based upon letters received from his constituents?

Mr. COOPER. This one is from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Letters received, and he puts these letters in as a justification, or explanation rather—

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; of my relation to the calling up of these very cases.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is a very clear distinction between the two cases. Is it done in regard to another question—in regard to the impropriety of acts done in his official capacity—or is it done in explanation of the manner in which these calls are made? If these calls for information which the gentlemen were sending were properly used in these matters and used with the gentleman's consent, I do not see that there is any question of personal explanation necessary. I do not see how the matter is to be effected by discussing the question of asking for information, which is sent to members continually.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to mean that this letter was used for a predicate for an application for the information, not coming from the clerk, but coming from a soldier or interested person in Indiana, Illinois, or somewhere else.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That does not make any difference, because we are all doing that, and there is no law or rule against it. If the gentleman from Indiana says that his clerk has been using these Congressional slips legitimately for inquiries there is no objection to it.

Mr. COOPER. I admire the gentleman's ability, but I do not wish him to make my statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again request the gentleman from Indiana to confine himself to what is strictly relevant to the question.

Mr. COOPER. I will do so; but does the Chair pass any opinion on this letter which I am now reading, and which I say had come to me? I would like to know if the Chair means to imply that I am not now under the rule? That is what I want to know. I think I have explained the relevancy of this letter. I want to finish the reading of the letter, and I will say that it is the last one, if that is any relief to the gentlemen, that I desire to read. In response to the suggestion of my friend from Maine, I want to say that I admire his ability and assurance. He is a good talker, but I wish to make this particular speech myself, and I do not care to have it dictated or made by him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I desire to say that I have not the slightest desire to embarrass him in his personal explanation.

Mr. COOPER. I do not yield.

Mr. BLAND. When the gentleman rises to a question of personal privilege he ought to be permitted to state it.

This is the letter which I have read from:

James McGraw, Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, was allowed a pension of $12 per month May 13, 1891, but has not been paid on this allowance one cent. Since which time the attorney in the case has written to the Hon. Commissioner five times; to the Hon. Isaac Clements, United States pension agent, twice; to the President once, to the Secretary of the Interior once; to the Hon. E. LANE, M. C., Seventeenth Illinois district, twice; to Mrs. Logan once, and lately a petition signed by all classes of people who know the soldier as a worthy man and needy. No response of any kind whatever has been received from the Pension Bureau in reply. Advise me of your action in the case, and oblige.

Respectfully,

LOUIS WAGNER.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this letter came to me by reason of my relation with the Pension Office for the last two years, which is known to the country. I sent this gentleman, Mr. Hersey, over there to look into the status of that case, and I found that last spring the certificate which had been allowed to the pensioner had been sent to Hillsboro, Ohio, while the man's home is in Illinois. It remained there for some time, and then it was returned, and pigeonholed. These letters had been going on all through the year and not one of them had ever been answered until I dislodged it by the aid of this gentleman, Mr. Hersey, and by his aid its whereabouts was discovered.

For that no fee, consideration, or charge at any time was made. As I have already said, none has ever been made by me. There are 2,000 persons employed in the Pension Office, and yet it appears there are claimants and attorneys everywhere except in Washington who are so desirous of gaining some information in regard to their cases that they are willing to pay for it. I make no excuse for anyone who violates the regulations of the office or the confidence of Congressmen to obtain this information to supply this demand, but I venture the assertion that it will be perfectly clear to claimants and attorneys living away from here that the policy pursued by the Commissioner which banks up the business here in the hands of Washington attorneys, among whom are his son and the indorsers of his commercial paper, is much more a crime against them and their interests, and a debauchery of the public service much more harmful than furnishing such information even for compensation.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has named the Commissioner of Pensions and has criticized him. That is no part of a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair—

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair, but this sounds more like an arraignment of the Commissioner than like a personal explanation.

Mr. COOPER. I know how it sounds to the gentlemen, inasmuch as they have to stand responsible for this official.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask a ruling on the point of order that I have raised.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. COOPER] is not confining himself to the question of his personal explanation, but is dealing more largely with the practice in the Pension Office, which is not now before the House.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it was the Commissioner of Pensions who made the charge, and the charge must be construed in the light of the facts as they exist in his Bureau, because it is out of the management of his Bureau that the charge grows and is made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may be mistaken about it, but the Chair understands the charge to be that some gentleman in the employ of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] and acting as his clerk, sold information to these attorneys. Now, how can that affect what takes place in the Pension Office?

Mr. COOPER. Why, Mr. Speaker, that is only one of the charges, and I see now that perhaps there has dropped out of the minds of Representatives a very material part of this matter, which is that the Commissioner has charged me through the papers and by his testimony before the committee, with using my Congressional call slips too much, with exercising too wide a privilege in that respect.

I have just read you some letters from different parts of the country in explanation of why it is I have gone to such an extent in the use of my call slips, and why they have become so frequent in the Pension Bureau, and I think that is inseparable from the case and everything that relates to it. The charges are that a great number of my call-slips have come there from time to time; so many, in fact, that some persons have dumped them into the wastebasket, and I was only endeavoring to show why it was that they came and what the occasion was for called slips.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the statement of the gentleman as to Washington attorneys and the Commissioner has any bearing on the question of privilege.

Mr. COOPER. Well, I have no particular desire to put in that part of it. That is a fact which is so well-known that it perhaps need not be stated here. Whatever Mr. Hersey did in the way of furnishing this information in the manner charged by the Commissioner was done without my knowledge or consent, as he has already testified. The Commissioner has shown that he was cognizant of facts as early as the 1st of September last, which led him to believe that Mr. Hersey was abusing my confidence. Indeed, in January of this year Mr. Raum asked me whether Mr. Hersey was authorized to sign my name, a thing which I think he already knew, and yet, instead of telling me his suspicion, he did everything in his power to bring about his fall, arranged as he has himself testified, to have him bribed, and, in the hope that he might in some way entrap me, spread a net over two or three States and called into requisition the spies and informers who were his creatures and do his bidding about him.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, is that thought to be in order as a matter of personal explanation, that reference to the "spies" and "creatures" of the Commissioner?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has said, it is very difficult for the Chair to determine a question of this kind. The Chair appeals to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] to confine himself to the question of personal privilege. That question relates to his own conduct more than to the conduct of others.

Mr. COOPER. The first information I had that Mr. Hersey was receiving pay for work done over my signature was when I received the letter from Morgan containing $25. I immediately sent for Mr. Hersey, and told him that I could not allow him to receive pay for that kind of service, and returned the money to Mr. Morgan in the following letter, which explains itself:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1892.

DEAR JIM: Your letter containing $25, which, you say, is for Mr. Hersey, came while I was out in Indiana. So soon as I returned it was delivered to me. I have been very busy or should have answered immediately. I wished to see Mr. Hersey before doing so. I had not fully understood what it was you wished him to do for you. From your letter it seems you have sent him the money to pay him for calling up cases. Of course, Jim, I can not allow you to pay Mr. Hersey for that kind of work. He is in my service, and it is only as my secretary that that work can be done for you. I have called up thousands of cases, and have always done it cheerfully, but I have never received nor knowingly allowed anyone connected with me to charge a cent for that work—not even a postage stamp.

I shall not, therefore, allow you to pay anything for that service. It is not right. It is a burning shame that the office with 2,000 employes can not or will not carry on the necessary correspondence with claimants and their attorneys. However that may be, I am clear that I ought not to allow you to pay Mr. Hersey anything while he is in my service. Whatever is done by me in that direction is done in the line of my duty, and is so to be regarded. I will do the best I can for your cases, but not for pay. I therefore return the money.

GEORGE W. COOPER.

Your letter to Mr. Hersey came this evening, and was opened by me by mistake. I have stated my position to Mr. Hersey and the matter is satisfactory to him.

Yours,

Mr. JAMES F. MORGAN,
Bloomington, Ind.

COOPER.

Morgan was from my district. I devoted some time to him while here. While he is a Republican, and has always fought me politically, I never suspected him of perfidy. I did my best to enable him to see all matters and points of interest about the city, and showed him through the Capitol. I took him to the Pension Office with me, and it was in his presence that Raum asked me whether Hersey was authorized to use my name. He expressed a desire to meet Hersey, and I took him to his office and made them acquainted. It is not true that I said to Morgan that Hersey would work for him for pay, nor that anything whatever was said upon that subject.

It seems very clear to me now that that was what was in Morgan's mind; that his business with me was to get some such statement; but he did not get it. I wanted to serve him freely as I had always done before, for I never made any distinction among my constituents upon political grounds when it came to looking after their individual interests. And I say here that never at any time did I ask or accept one single cent for any service growing out of my connection with my public service, neither directly or indirectly, and I defy any human being to show to the contrary. I make this declaration hoping, and so far as I am able, intending that it shall go to every home in my district, and with the consciousness that I can confront here and hereafter every soul of that dear people which have honored and trusted me, and show them clear hands and a conscience void of offense.

Correspondence between Mr. Hersey and Mr. Peet is set out at length, and it is charged that he is related to me. He is not related to me, but is a brother-in-law to my brother. I never had until the publication of these letters the slightest intimation that such correspondence was going on. Mr. Peet, as an employé of the firm of Maring & Slusher, had seen some of Mr. Hersey's work for me, which I had sent to claimants living in that vicinity. He told me that he was going to Kansas to start up for himself, and he would like to have a Washington partner, and thought Mr. Hersey would suit him, and asked me to recommend him to Mr. Hersey. Mr. Hersey's letter, which the Commissioner gives, shows that he had some such purpose.

I believe that he contemplated a regular and honorable business engagement, and never thought of the matter afterwards. I have been absent from Columbus most of the time since, and we have had no correspondence upon that subject. Indeed, I have been at home within the last ten days, and he must have known that I was there, and although his deposition had then been taken and the Commissioner supplied by him with every scrap of evidence which he supposed would reflect upon me, he did not inform me of it, nor did I see him. He was then, and I presume is still, in the employ of John N. Maring, of whom it now becomes necessary for me to speak at some length.

Mr. Maring is a Republican. He was at one time favorably mentioned as a possible candidate against me at the polls. When I first became a member of Congress, which was on March 4, 1889, he was doing a very extensive business. I then knew absolutely nothing about the pension laws, never having been employed in any way in relation to such matters. He came to my office and said that he desired the use of my name in calling up the cases of "the boys;" that it was usual for Representatives and Senators to make such calls, and I think he exhibited to me one signed by Senator TURPIE. On his representation that such was the custom I consented. It was my understanding, however, that this privilege was only to be exercised on behalf of soldiers in my district.

I afterwards learned that he was using it generally in his business, and called up claims all over the country. I then wrote to Commissioner Tanner and told him that while I had authorized the use of my name I had expressly limited that privilege to soldiers of my district. I can not give this letter for the reason that I kept none of the correspondence, and Commissioner Raum, for purposes which will be perfectly plain, has either destroyed or in some manner suppressed the whole of this correspondence. If that letter and my other correspondence with Commissioner Tanner were produced Raum's criticism would be answered in advance. Under this administration of that Bureau a practice of abstracting documents from the files has become so common that it has acquired a name, and is called "skinning the files."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order upon the remarks of the gentleman. He is again criticizing the conduct of the Commissioner and of his Department.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. And, I may be permitted to add, that seems to be the prime object of the gentleman from Indiana—to arraign the Commissioner. Almost everything that he has said or read, including these letters, is proper to be considered by the committee of investigation, and the committee ought to have an opportunity to consider it. They can hear everything the gentleman has to say. They can examine all these letters. The gentleman has political friends who are members of the committee, and I submit that it would be in better taste to let them determine this question before the gentleman undertakes in this way to arraign the Commissioner and the Department on the floor of the House.

Mr. COOPER. I believe it was Horace who said, "De gustibus non disputandum est," which, being liberally interpreted for the benefit of gentlemen, means that nothing is to be gained by disputes about matters of taste. Therefore, if only a question of "taste" is involved here, I presume it is not a matter demanding my serious notice.

If, however, the remarks are to be considered as having presented a point of order, I wish to state now that I am simply explaining that I wrote letters to this Bureau when Commissioner Tanner was in office, which would show how it happened that my name was on this great number of Congressional call slips; that these letters have been in some manner withheld from me, and I am endeavoring to explain how it is.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois made some remark.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the exact language which the gentleman used.

Mr. COOPER. It was a friendly admonition—

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I intended it in that way.

Mr. COOPER. I suppose the thing that brought these three or four gentlemen to their feet was the language "skinning the files," that phrase being now very common about the Bureau and in Washington. I was endeavoring to explain how it came that this language was used with reference to abstracting papers, letters, and other documents from the files. That is all.

Mr. LIND. The gentleman made that charge; and it is utterly false, as he knows. There has been no evidence of that kind before the committee, and the gentleman has never made that charge before the committee. That shows the impropriety of this discussion at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. For the purpose of speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be heard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any opposition to permitting the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] to occupy the floor for a personal explanation. It seems that he thinks the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions, as given before the committee, and as it has appeared in the newspapers, has reflected on him; and he is taking advantage of this opportunity to reply. Now, it is to the interest not only of the gentleman from Indiana, but to all gentlemen on both sides of this floor, that the personal privilege of members—the right of a member to defend himself from a personal imputation—shall be preserved; we are all interested in this; but it does seem to me that this right ought not to be abused.

In this instance it would appear from the whole tenor of the gentleman's remarks from beginning to end, that he is not so much seeking to make a "personal explanation" and vindicate himself, as he is endeavoring to abuse this privilege for the purpose of making an unwarrantable attack upon the Commissioner of Pensions.

Now, in passing upon this question of order, it is well enough to recall as a matter having some relation to the question that the gentleman himself at the last session of Congress instigated an inquiry into the condition of the Pension Office—

Mr. COOPER. I did not yield the floor for a speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am not making a speech, and it does seem to me that the gentleman is not the one who should charge anybody with wandering from the question in view of the irrelevant matters which he has introduced into this so-called "personal explanation." At the last Congress, as I was saying, an investigation was entered upon at the instigation of the gentleman, and a report was made, upon which Congress took action. Now, at the present session another resolution has been introduced here for an investigation into the proceedings of that office, and the gentleman has appeared, as I understand, before the committee in the capacity of a prosecutor.

Now, it seems that something has been drawn out in the examination before the committee—in the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions—which my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, seems to think reflects upon him; and he rises in his place under the rules of the House to make what he calls a personal explanation. He reads a series of letters, which I undertake to say, in the light of what has transpired within the last ten minutes, were not at all necessary to his own vindication and which indicate clearly that his purpose was not so much to make a personal explanation as to make a direct attack upon the Commissioner and forestall the action of the House in the pending investigation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no gentleman should be permitted, under the pretense of a question of personal privilege, to make an attack of this kind upon an official who is the subject of an investigation. Nobody seeks to restrict the gentleman from Indiana in the use of any language he may see fit to use to place himself right. It would be difficult to undertake to do this, as no two men would probably express themselves in the same way, and he must determine for himself the character of the language he employs. But this is a matter of good faith and he ought not to be allowed to abuse his privilege. He is allowed to get the floor contrary to the ordinary rules of order and proceedings in the House, to make a personal explanation, and he should not be permitted to go far beyond that, and under that pretense make an assault of the character he has been making upon the Commissioner when no opportunity is afforded for replying to him.

It seems to me that the whole tone of his remarks from beginning to end shows that he is not trying to vindicate himself, although he alleged that he rose to a question of personal privilege, but is seeking, I say again, to cast imputations upon the head of the Pension Bureau, and by virtue of his membership of this House and of his right to rise to a question of personal privilege he procures the attention of this body for the purpose of making this assault. If the gentleman wants to do that let it be done by the introduction of a resolution in the proper manner. Let him go before the committee, and bring testimony that he shall introduce to support the allegations he makes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleague from Indiana will not consume any more of the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order, and the Chair will state that it is only in order to vindicate himself from any charge which may have been made against him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Nobody objects to that, but the gentleman is passing far beyond, and abusing the privilege of the House for the purpose of making an unwarranted attack upon the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. COOPER. I have called upon the Commissioner for these letters, and he says he can not find them. I asked him for the letter-press copy book used by Commissioner Tanner that I might see the copies of his answers to me. He said "Commissioner Tanner took a lot of that stuff" away with him and he presumed that he had it. I knew better, but I did not leave it there, but addressed this letter to Commissioner Tanner:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., April 9, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR: Do you remember having had any correspondence with me upon the subject of Congressional calls while you were Commissioner of Pensions? If so, are my letters or copies of your answers thereto in your possession? If not, please state what disposition, if any, you made of them. I will also be glad, if you can do so, to have you give your recollection of the contents of any such letters.

Very respectfully yours,

GEO. W. COOPER.

HON. JAMES TANNER,
Washington, D. C.

To which he responds—

[James Tanner, attorney and counselor at law, Loan and Trust Company building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 9th instant is at hand and contents noted. I remember very distinctly having some correspondence with you on the subject of Congressional calls in connection with the firm of Maring & Slusher, of Columbus, Ind.

Regarding your second inquiry as to whether your letters or copies of my answers thereto are in my possession, I have to answer no. It was official matter, and was left in the files of the Pension Office when I retired. My recollection of the matter is that I learned that there were a great number of calls relative to the claims in which Maring & Slusher were attorneys, which calls bore what assumed to be your signature. I think, in fact I am very positive, that it was reported to me that there was about 2,800 of them. I had a letter from you stating that you had authorized them to use your name on call-up slips, but stating that it was your understanding that your name would be used in that connection exclusively regarding cases of applicants for pension who were residents in your district only.

If the honorable Commissioner of Pensions was correctly reported in the daily press a few days since, then I think he must certainly have been somewhat mixed, and confounded I you with the senior Senator from your State, the Hon. DANIEL W. VOORHEES, for I remember that in connection with that matter I was informed that the same firm had, while Gen. Black was still Commissioner, presented some 5,000 call slips with Senator VOORHEES's signature attached. I am clear in the recollection that the 2,800 calls above referred to (and which I ordered destroyed) were the first ones in my experience as Commissioner that your name had any connection with. This matter came to my mind when I read the testimony of the honorable Commissioner, in giving which he located the 5,000 cases under Gen. Black. You, if I recollect, came into office as Gen. Black went out.

Very respectfully yours,

JAMES TANNER.

HON. GEO. W. COOPER,
House of Representatives, City.

I knew that this correspondence should be among the files in the law department, among the papers relating to Maring's record as an attorney, and I went and examined there. Not one scrap of paper bearing my name was among those papers. Then I knew that some one had "skinned the files," and suspecting the party most interested to be the guilty one, I went immediately to the Commissioner's room and asked him for the papers, with the result before stated. I remembered, however, that when at one time early in the investigation he thought he could damage me by associating my name with Maring's he threatened me with a long telegram which he said he had in a bundle of papers held in his hand, in which I asked the Commissioner not to disbar Maring until he could have a hearing.

I called Raum's attention to this, and asked him what had become of my message. He then remembered that he had that, and produced it from among his private papers. In answer to my question why it was not with the files, he said he thought he might have use for it, and wanted it in safe-keeping. In view of this can anyone have any doubt as to where my other letters are? or that the reason they are not produced is that they would confound and condemn him?

Early in September, 1889, Maring received notice that he would be disbarred for some irregularities in his business, the particulars of which I do not remember. I know it was nothing that grew out of my relations to him, and at his request I united with Mr. J. I. Irwin, a leading Republican and banker of Columbus, in requesting that he be given time to answer. This was the substance of my dispatch, and is the one which the honorable Commissioner abstracted from the files. By this time I began to think that it would be better for me to cut loose from the leading Republican and possible competitor Maring, and that it would be better for me to have him for a political opponent than a personal friend. So I resigned all claims on him, and the relations shifted.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Speaker think the gentleman from Indiana is in order at this point talking about "abstracting papers" from the files of the Pension Office, and intimating that the official at the head of that Bureau is guilty of such conduct?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman is directing attention now to the existence of the number of Congressional calls that seem to have found their way into the office over his name.

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; and the gentleman from Michigan—I appeal to the gentleman to hear what I have to say—it is charged by the Commissioner that a young man in the office of Mr. Maring, from whose office these calls came, was a relative of mine, and that this great number of calls came in some way through my relationship to him.

Mr. BURROWS. How long would it take the gentleman to deny that fact if it were not true?

Mr. COOPER. Well, I am not satisfied only to deny the fact. I want to deny it and to produce absolute proof of its falsity.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, that the gentleman from Indiana ought not to be permitted to cast slurs and insinuations against the Commissioner of Pensions, stating that "he knew where the letters were gone," he knew "who the guilty party was," he knew "who had abstracted the papers from the files," and so on, charging him with petty larceny or grand larceny, whichever it may be, pending the investigation now going on.

Mr. COOPER. If my friend from Michigan will listen to me for a few moments, I am sure I will be able to convince him on that subject.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems very fair for the Commissioner of Pensions to charge anything against any gentleman here which he may see proper to charge, but when that member so charged undertakes to answer, anything that he may undertake to say he is out of order. It is perfectly right to answer such charges, and the gentleman should be permitted to answer them in his own way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not out of order, as the Chair understands his statement.

Mr. PAYNE. But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the only thing now for the gentleman to refer to is what the letters contain, and not to account for the absence of those letters from the files. If they can not be found the gentleman can give the substance of them and give the reply of the Commissioner as to where the letters are. But it is certainly not in order for the gentleman to assail an officer, and make such charges as he has been making, under the allegation that it is a personal question.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House must bear in mind that this seems to be a somewhat spirited controversy between the Commissioner and the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PAYNE. But that is not the question, Mr. Speaker, at this time. The Commissioner is under examination before a committee, and the matters about which he is being investigated are not proper subjects for controversy upon the floor of the House at this time. The relations between the Commissioner of Pensions and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] are not involved here now. The only question is whether they furnish an occasion for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] to allow these pension attorneys the privilege of using the Congressional slips in his name to call up pension cases.

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman might explicitly and in a few words deny that; yet different men have different methods of making a statement.

Mr. PAYNE. But, Mr. Speaker, he goes further than that, and says that he explained that to Commissioner Tanner in certain letters which he can not find. Now, the only thing that is relevant upon that question is the contents of those letters, not his controversy with the Commissioner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe that it is evidently the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana—how far he has accomplished that it is not for the Chair to determine—to attack the animus of the Commissioner and to show that he has willfully withheld these letters.

Mr. PAYNE. How is that relevant upon this question? The question is as to the contents of those letters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that might show the animus of the gentleman who makes the charge, and that it might be very relevant.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] admits the charge.

Mr. COOPER. Admits what charge?

Mr. PAYNE. Wait a moment and I will tell you what the charge is, and then if I misstate it you will have an opportunity to correct me. As I understand it, the gentleman admits this charge, that this pension firm were allowed to use slips in his name. Now, that is the charge that he is specifically meeting at this time, as I understand it, and he admits that that is true, that he did allow them to use these slips. Is not that true?

Mr. COOPER. I do not desire to answer that categorically.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. COOPER. I can explain to the gentleman, and I appeal to him to allow me to proceed. This being a matter of personal honor, which is dear to me, I appeal to my colleague, and I will say that the difficulty with you and with my friends on that side of the House is that possibly you have not known the extent to which this charge has been preferred. The papers were filed with the committee, and the contents of them were telegraphed almost in full to the newspapers in Indiana. I think the gentleman has not seen more than small abstracts or slight references to them in the Eastern papers; but if he had seen them all he would have known how every word I have said here to-day is not only pertinent, but proper, and I hope that the gentleman will not interrupt and interfere with me with technical objections.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not making any technical objection to what the gentleman says. If he has not fully stated the charge that is made against him, he ought to do so for the information of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I think this is the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair has decided the question and the gentleman has not appealed. I submit he is out of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the Chair decided?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

Mr. COOPER. I was then saying that I had surrendered all my claims on the attorney Maring. Commissioner Tanner gave place to Raum. Raum began his methods, and I began to investigate them. Early in the fight Raum conceived the idea that he could smirch me with Maring's name. He searched the records and "skinned the files" for my correspondence. Speaking of Maring he referred to him as my man Maring. However, this did not last long, for Raum determined to invade my district and endeavor to break me down before the people. He has already admitted here how he prostituted the Pension Office in that contest.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. In order to bring this matter clearly before the House and the country I would like to ask whether the Speaker thinks it is in order for the gentleman in a personal explanation to state that the Commissioner of Pensions prostituted his office in a certain case?

Mr. COOPER. He admitted that before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] makes the point that what the gentleman is at present saying is not in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point of order that in a personal explanation it is not in order for the gentleman from Indiana to allege and charge that the Commissioner of Pensions has prostituted his office.

The SPEAKER. There might be a question arise where that would be in in order, might there not?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I only ask the Chair to rule. I make the point of order that it is not in order for him to charge in his statement that the Commissioner of Pensions in a certain case prostituted his office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the language the gentleman has just used was in order, as the Chair understands it; but the Chair can not decide that general proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana to repeat what he just said.

Mr. COOPER. I will gladly do it, and I will elaborate it if the gentleman wishes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; just please repeat what you read from your written statement.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to read it to you in full, the statement where he testified before the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Please read what you read before.

Mr. COOPER. Yes, I will. I will accommodate you, if it will have any effect to soothe you. I will begin back. Speaking of Maring, he referred to him as my man Maring. However, this did not last long, for Raum determined to invade my district and endeavor to break me down before the people. He has already admitted here how he prostituted the Pension Office in that contest.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what I desire to have a ruling upon.

Mr. COOPER. Well, I have not read the balance of the sentence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is what we have been asking for a ruling on all this time.

Mr. COOPER. The balance of the sentence shows the relevancy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say to the gentleman that his argument seems more largely addressed to assailing Mr. Raum and the Pension Office than to any charge real or supposed on himself.

Mr. COOPER. He assails me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You first assailed him.

Mr. COOPER. I am showing the animus and the spirit which actuated him in making the attack; that is all. And in this particular instance here, I want to show how it was that he had set the example for Mr. Hersey to furnish information to outside parties.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must bear in mind that this is not a debate upon the Pension Office—

Mr. COOPER. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. But a mere question of personal privilege. Where a gentleman is assailed, under the rules of the House, and of every other parliamentary body, he has a right to get up and make a personal explanation, and that personal explanation, the Chair thinks, should be confined to the charge or insinuations made against him.

Mr. COOPER. The trouble between us, Mr. Speaker, and the friends on the other side is, that I do not think the Chair, with all due deference, nor some gentlemen on the other side, understand the scope of the charge, or how broad it has been.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please read the charge so that the Chair may understand?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; I will be glad to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please read the charge.

Mr. COOPER (reading):

That Mr. S. R. Hersey, whom he sees fit to denominate my private secretary, has violated certain regulations of the Pension Office.

The charge, as I understand it, is that he has, by the use of my name, examined into the condition of claims and reported to the attorneys or claimants the result of such examination and that he has received a fee for such services.

He has also discovered that three years ago, soon after I came into office, Maring & Slusher, pension attorneys, procured my name to a great number of Congressional call slips, which the office then refused to recognize. He has even procured and filed with his papers here an affidavit of one David L. Gitt, who represents himself as a real-estate agent here in Washington, that—I quote the exact language of his deposition:

"During 1888, when Gen. Black was Commissioner, there were quite a great number of slips went into the office by George W. Cooper, member of Congress from Indiana, at Columbus, Ind., bearing the printed card of Maring, Slusher & Co., of Columbus, Ind. These, by reason of their great number, were such an imposition upon the congressional privileges of the office that I felt called upon to present the matter to Gen. Black's personal attention for orders as to their disposition. Gen. Black told me to throw them into the waste-paper basket."

Attention is called to the fact that in the summer of 1889 the firm of Maring & Slusher had printed a large number of Congressional call blanks with the fac simile of my signature thereon, for use in their office in calling up cases. These constitute the specifications of offenses with which an effort is being made by Commissioner Raum to couple my name.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? The gentleman from Indiana has the floor for a personal explanation.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I was merely going to state what I understood the point to be. Now, the gentlemen on the other side seem to think that all that the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to is simply to put in his denial; he is to join issue upon the charges made against him by the Commissioner of Pensions. Now, it does seem to me that in making his personal explanation he is entitled to go into the motives the Commissioner had in making this charge; and he is entitled to go into all the facts and circumstances in support of the truth of his denial.

Mr. LIND. Would it not be better for the gentleman from Tennessee to furnish an affidavit?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat that it is very difficult to determine what is or what is not in order on a question of this sort, and the Chair will ask the gentleman to confine himself to the question of personal explanation.

Mr. COOPER. I will be glad to do so.

I wish to make it perfectly clear, if I can. I do not desire to transgress against the rules of the House, and will not do it if I know it, and I hope the Speaker will admonish me if I do so. The difficulty is that the House and some people are not familiar with the scope of this charge.

Now, in this very matter to which I am calling attention here there is a charge made by the Commissioner that 45,000 of these slips were printed. That is his charge, and I desire to call attention to the fact that among the papers filed by the Commissioner with the committee is the affidavit of the printer who printed these slips, showing that there were only 5,000 of them instead of 45,000.

Then it was my purpose to show—and I would like to be able to do that if it is perfectly legitimate, otherwise not—that the reason Mr. Maring made the statement that there were 45,000 of these slips with my name printed upon them, whereas the proof shows, the statement of the printer, who says that he testifies from his books, that there were only 5,000 of them, is that the Commissioner more than two years ago had a recommendation written up that Mr. Maring be disbarred, and that he has held that over him ever since; that he never sent it to the Interior Department at all, but kept it among his private papers, for the purpose, as I insist, of controlling Maring in these matters and influencing his judgment, or at least his testimony, in order to make out a case against me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what this "testimony" is to which he is referring?

Mr. COOPER. The testimony before the committee that is investigating the Bureau.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The committee now in session?

Mr. COOPER. It has been in session.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that on the face of it—

Mr. COOPER. The testimony was published. I do not know how extensively it was published in the gentleman's district, but in mine it was published quite extensively in all the papers.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was about to call attention to the obvious impropriety, as it seems to me, of bringing in here by piecemeal extracts from testimony given before an investigating committee of this House which has not yet reported. Now, I desire to say this to the gentleman from Indiana in perfect candor. We are three hundred men here, standing upon the same basis, with the same risks and the same desire to vindicate our integrity whenever it is assailed.

I know there is no member of this House who has the slightest desire to impede or obstruct the gentleman from Indiana in any proper attempt to vindicate his good name. We shall all be glad to see him do it. But I do submit that he is not conducting to that end when he diverts a personal explanation in his own behalf into a renewed assault upon a public official whom he has been pursuing, as we all know, with great activity, and between whom and himself there has arisen a controversy of a very serious character, which has been referred by this House to a committee with full power to investigate, determine, and report.

Under such circumstances, for the gentleman from Indiana to come into the House and, under the guise of a personal explanation, to arraign this official, who is now under investigation and is meeting his accusers upon his oath before a committee acting under the authority of this House, does seem to me to be both in bad taste and out of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend from Maine allow me a question before he sits down?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very obvious that there have been serious charges made by the Commissioner of Pensions against my colleague [Mr. COOPER]. That is known to the country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And vice versa.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, is it not the privilege of a member of this House, in the vindication of his own character and standing here, before his constituents, and before the country, to show the spirit in which those charges have been made?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will answer my venerable and distinguished friend from Indiana by asking him as a lawyer whether he thinks that a proper and satisfactory method of disposing of a controversy is for one person to come into a tribunal where the other can not be heard and to make ex parte statements of the facts or the evidence?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not to be regarded exactly from that standpoint, Mr. Speaker. A charge is made against a member of this House. That charge has gone to the country. It has apparently, from my standpoint, although I do not assert the truth of this—it has apparently gone to the country in a form which has been influenced perhaps in some degree by the conduct of the public officer himself who makes the charge. Now, is it possible that, with our reputation so valuable, so dear to us, we are going to stick upon technicalities as to the form and mode of procedure in making a vindication?

The Commissioner of Pensions has his own method of making a defense, and he is making it, apparently, before the committee that is investigating this matter; but I hold, and I say to my friend from Maine, that when the character of a member of this House is assailed every member should feel that the case is his own, and should seek to give every opportunity for him to furnish a complete vindication.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I agree with my friend absolutely; but I hold that the opportunity is not presented in this House upon a personal statement of one of the parties. It is customary, as the gentleman well knows, quite an ordinary thing, for a member who is accused of wrongdoing to ask for a committee of investigation and to have it granted. There is a committee now in session investigating this matter—

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, is this going on by my permission, or by yours, or how?

Mr. BOUTELLE (continuing). And I say that if, in addition to the general statement which the gentleman makes denying the charge, he feels bound to go into details, especially details which necessitate on his part convicting the Commissioner of Pensions of wrongdoing, he should go before that committee and file his proof where it can be met and answered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair renews his statement that he appeals to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] to confine himself strictly to the question at issue.

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir. Now, I was about to state the relation which Mr. Maring and Mr. Raum and I bore to each other, with the view of showing what weight should be given to the statement that forty or forty-five thousand of these call-slips were found with my name appended to them.

On August 5, 1890, he had a letter written by the law clerk recommending that he be disbarred. It appears from the jacket which contains the papers in the case that this recommendation was sent to the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and on that date, viz, August 5, 1890, but it never reached the Interior Department. At least it had not a few days ago when Secretary Noble kindly had a search made for it at my request. I have heard that the Commissioner carried that document to Indiana with him when he went out to stump my district. I do not know that this is true, but I do know that whereas Maring had been very bitter against Raum on account of the now notorious order of the completed files, about the time Raum was to arrive in Indiana he published in the local papers a long card in which he gave the Commissioner and his order his unqualified indorsement; that he met the Commissioner at the station in Columbus and marched about the streets with him, and I have been told that they had a private consultation in Maring's office. I know that they have cooperated together from that time to this; that under the stimulating influence of this suspended recommendation for disbarment he swore in these papers filed by the Commissioner that the number of imitation Congressional call slips which he had printed was forty or forty-five thousand, whereas the man who printed them swore that the number was only five thousand, and stated that he took the number from his books. I quote from his evidence:

Q. (Mr. MITCHELL.) Mr. Maring in a statement made before me said he had forty or forty-five thousand of these slips printed by you. Could you be mistaken as to the quantity printed?

A. No, sir; I take the quantity from my books as charged for at the time.

As to all these slips of Maring's I have this to say: I gave him the use of my name on his representation that it was usual and necessary to the proper and speedy adjudication of the soldiers' claims. As I have explained I then knew nothing of the routine work of the Bureau. I corresponded freely and fully with Commissioner Tanner about it. He and I did not differ.

I wish now to call attention to a letter which was handed to me by the Postmaster of the House only a few moments before I took the floor to-day. The letter to which I have already referred and which Commissioner Tanner in his letter to me states that he remembers all about, I have not been able to find, either here or at home; but my brother, in searching through my files at home, has discovered the letter to which I have referred in reference to the spurious call slip on which my name was printed; the one which I hold in my hand. I kept a copy of that letter, which I received, as I have stated, only a few moments before I took the floor to-day. I read it:

COLUMBUS, IND., August 3, 1890.

DEAR SIR: Sometime ago when I had no Congressional call blanks, pension attorneys Maring & Slusher proposed, as a saving of labor to me, to have some printed. I could see no impropriety in it, and yet it occurred to me that I ought to consult you about it as your name is printed upon the blank exactly as in the original, and for the further reason that in a former letter you decided to not consider calls made for attorneys as coming within the courtesy extended to Congressional calls. I send these for your inspection and information, and beg you to say whether I may as occasion requires use them. I am now out of Congressional call blanks, and will be glad if you will send me a new supply at once.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. COOPER.

COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

I did not know until a few moments before I took the floor that this letter was still in existence. It must have been in some way providentially preserved.

So that, Mr. Speaker, I think the evidence here all conclusively shows that from the time I entered upon my duties as a member of Congress—from the time I first had my attention called to Congressional call slips—I from the beginning consulted with those in authority; that I laid the facts in the matter before the highest officer concerned with such subjects—the only one, so far as I know, to whom it would have been proper for me to appeal—asked his advice and guidance, and received his entire approval of whatever was done by me.

When, so far as I knew, the matter was dismissed with the public mind, a statement was procured from a gentleman in Indiana by the name of Holt, who revived the matter. He having been in Mr. Maring's office at the time, sent a letter which was put on file here with the papers of Commissioner Tanner, calling attention to it. I presume he did not know I had fully corresponded with the Commissioner of Pensions, and had with him a full understanding in regard to the matter.

I can not but feel, Mr. Speaker, that the motive which influenced this man to send that letter to Commissioner Raum was because the last time I ever met him I was compelled as attorney to eject him from a house that belonged to my sister. From that time on I never knew what became of him. It seems he is still at large. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume that what I have said has reflected upon somebody. I have felt honestly and conscientiously that it was necessary for me to make this statement. Some of my colleagues have said, "There is nothing in it," but I can not feel that way about it so long as some of the papers have printed with headlines such questions as "Is COOPER a partner?" etc., speaking with reference to a violation of the rules and practice in the Pension Office. Mr. Speaker, most of my Congressional life has been sincerely and honestly devoted to an effort to purify that office, and it would be remarkable indeed if while engaged in that effort I should myself willingly or knowingly violate any of the rules and regulations of that Department.

I have asked your time; you have taken some from me; and we have consumed together a good deal upon this matter; but I have brought it up, because, as I have said, I expect to meet you gentlemen here day by day and I want to be able to look in your faces and to have you know that if there has been anything wrong about this matter from first to last, I did not know it and had no part in it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] will be equally charitable toward the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. COOPER. I do not ask the gentleman for charity. I demand what is right. As for the Commissioner, he is before another tribunal and he must stand or fall by the facts, as I propose to do.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OUTHWAITE, for the rest of the week, on account of important business.

To Mr. PRICE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SEERLEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. WILSON, of Washington, as conferees on the part of the House upon the Indian appropriation bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong;

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 1645) making Velasco a subport of entry; and

A bill (S. 1643) authorizing the Velasco Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ADDITIONAL ARTILLERY NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on the Militia, reported back the bill (H. R. 5062) to provide additional artillery for the National Guard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 5684) to authorize the Dennison and Northern Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the urgent deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the gentleman's request to the House, that when it shall go into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills, the urgent deficiency bill may be taken up. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SAYERS was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. O'FERRALL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the urgent deficiency bill, and the Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7816) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Maine [Gov. DINGLEY] state if he desires any time for general debate?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not. I may say, with the consent of the gentleman from Texas, that this is unanimously reported from the committee, and I think a word of explanation is all that is necessary.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have about thirty minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I will yield to the gentleman twenty minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I want about thirty.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from Texas will understand that my answer was predicated upon the assumption that there would be no general debate.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that if anything is said by the gentleman from Missouri in the course of his remarks to call for an answer I will very willingly yield him the time.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Has there been any agreement about the time to be consumed in the general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. For I may have need of some time myself.

Mr. SAYERS. How much does my colleague want?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I do not know that I shall want any. If I get some papers from the Department in time I may want a few minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask that the time for general debate be limited to thirty minutes, with the understanding that if any gentleman on the other side finds it necessary to reply to any remarks of the gentleman from Missouri it will be yielded to him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Perhaps the limit had better not be made until we know what may be said.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. And I may want some time myself. I hope my colleague will not limit the debate. I have no disposition to delay the passage of the bill, but would ask my colleague not to limit the time until he is ready to go on with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, then, I will do that. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, as this is a money bill, the question of money is under consideration, and I send to the desk to have read a letter published in the Chicago Herald from a distinguished gentleman on this subject, to which I propose to reply for a few minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 27.

The substance of this letter was written on the 12th of March, and at that time silver bullion was worth 90 cents per ounce; on yesterday, March 26, it was quoted in New York at 87 cents. The United States bought the additional amount authorized by law at about 88 cents. The Bland bill is supported in the House of Representatives as a free-coinage measure—that is, as a measure intended to authorize and promote the actual conversion of silver bullion into actual standard silver coin—while, as a matter of fact, it is not expected that under the provisions of the act any coinage will take place, or that the quantity of actual silver coin in the country will be increased.

As will be seen upon an investigation of the bill, it declares that the unit of value in the United States shall be the standard silver dollar now coined, consisting of 412½ grains of standard silver (900 parts of fine silver, 100 parts of copper) or the gold dollar of 25.8 grains of standard gold (900 parts of fine gold, 100 parts of alloy), and that the standard gold and silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private. The next paragraph of the bill is that "any holder of gold or silver bullion of the value of $100 or more of standard fineness shall be entitled to have the same struck into any authorized standard coins of the United States free of charge at the mints of the United States."

REAL PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

The provisions of the law purport to authorize the free coinage of standard silver and are intended, no doubt by the authors of the bill to attract public attention and create the impression on the public mind that its object is to promote the actual conversion of silver bullion into silver coin. The real purpose of the bill is expressed in the language which I now quote: "Or the owner of the bullion may deposit the same at such mints and receive therefor coin notes equal in amount to the coinage of the bullion deposited, and the bullion shall thereupon become the property of the Government. The coin notes to be issued to the holder upon the deposit of bullion at the mints shall be in denominations not less than $1 nor more than $1,000, and be a legal tender in like manner and invested in the same monetary uses as the standard gold and silver coins of the United States."

The well-understood effect of the passage of the bill will be to make the United States the purchaser of all the silver bullion which may be offered at the mints at its coinage value, which will be $1 in the coin notes for each 412 grains standard silver. It will be noticed that the option of receiving the coin notes upon a deposit of standard silver bullion at the mints is given to the holder of the bullion, whose interests will always favor the acceptance of the coin notes rather than standard coin. The coin notes taken in exchange for bullion will be most convenient and be worth more than the standard coin.

UNLIMITED PURCHASES AT HIGH PRICES.

The object as well as the effect of the bill will be to require the United States to purchase an unlimited quantity of silver bullion at its coinage value, which under the law is $1.29 per ounce, instead of purchasing silver bullion at its market value of 87 cents, according to the New York quotations of yesterday. Mr. BLAND in his report illustrates this (see report, page 10). At the present price of silver 54,000,000 ounces of bullion will make (cost) about $48,000,000 at its coinage value rate, viz, $1.29. This would make about $70,000,000, an increase of $22,000,000. In other words, the United States could to-day buy at the present price 54,000,000 ounces of silver bullion by an issue of legal-tender Treasury notes to the amount of $48,000,000, while under the Bland bill the purchase of 54,000,000 ounces of silver bullion will require an issue of $70,000,000 of coin notes, making a difference of $22,000,000 against the United States and in favor of holders of silver bullion.

These figures are taken from BLAND's report, and were intended to be only approximately correct, but at the time they were made the difference between the market and coinage value of bullion was about 38 cents per ounce, although, according to latest quotations, the difference is about 42 cents per ounce. In view of these facts, Senator TELLER is more than justified in saying that the "passage of the Bland bill will add $8,000,000 to the silver output of the State of Colorado alone."

A GREAT DISASTER AVERTED.

Mr. BLAND has said that the object of the bill is not the actual coinage of silver dollars, but it is to monetize silver, or to make silver a money metal equal in value to gold. By the bill, as he says, he intends to tie the two metals together, and keep them together, in value. The actual effect of the bill will be that the United States will issue coin notes for all the silver that may be offered at the mints, at its coinage value of $1.29 per ounce, and issue legal-tender coin notes, nominally payable in gold or silver, at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Treasury, but with an actual pledge, growing out of the necessities of the case, to keep the coin notes at par with gold, while the silver bullion purchased in exchange for the coin notes will be added to the 12,000 tons of silver coin and bullion which is now in the Government vaults.

It is true the bill professes to authorize the coinage of silver purchased whenever necessary for the redemption of coin notes, but it is well understood by everyone who has the slightest knowledge of the subject that the value of the coin notes, as well as the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver under the act of 1890, can only be maintained by the pledge implied in the act of 1890 and the necessity which will always exist for maintaining a parity of value between the coin and Treasury notes and gold.

The influence of the accumulation by the Government of the many thousands of tons of silver which would become its property by the provisions of the Bland bill, added to the many thousands already in its vaults, would menace and paralyze the business of the country, and an attempt on the part of the Government to throw upon the market any portion of its enormous accumulation of silver in the form of bullion or to insist upon redeeming its Treasury or coin notes in silver coin would produce universal distress.

This is a very brief statement of the effect of the passage of the Bland bill. It will not promote the conversion of silver bullion into dollars, which is the "free coinage" favored by a very large proportion of the people, but it is the scheme of silver bullion at 42 cents per ounce more than its market value, to be paid for in coin notes, which the Government undertakes to maintain at a par with gold.

JOHN M. PALMER.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I would have noticed all the misrepresentations of this communication had there not been two statements in it that I regarded as reflecting upon the committee that reported this bill and upon myself as chairman.

One statement begins to the effect that it was intended the country should understand—that a sort of deception was practiced upon the country and the House—that the country should understand that it was a free-coinage bill when really it was not, although by its terms the bill provides that any holder of gold or silver should have it coined freely at the mints of the United States.

The next is, it denominates it as a scheme of the silver ring. Just why a newspaper should be selected in some locality to publish this matter, when the gentleman who wrote the article belongs to another end of this Capitol, where at any time, under the rules of that body, he has the right to offer resolutions and discuss this question where he can be heard and replied to, I do not know.

A scheme of the silver ring! Mr. Chairman, nearly every Democratic State in this Union in 1890 passed resolutions in favor of the free coinage of silver. I suppose that was a silver ring. Over a million of people, laborers and producers, in this country, throughout the land, in every State in it, have demanded of this House the passage of a bill for the free coinage of silver.

I suppose these millions of voters belong to the silver ring; and it will be well for gentlemen to put their ears to the ground for a moment and listen to the great masses of the American people upon this subject. It is a silver ring worthy of their consideration; and in that regard I care not for the accusation of being actuated by a silver ring, when it applies to my people and the pledges that I made to them upon the subject.

There are other rings in this country; and when gentlemen refuse to hear the voice of the people and put their ears to the tickers that click from Wall street, gambling in railroad stocks and all other stocks and bonds, the interest and principal of which is to be paid in gold without the opportunity for silver to come in competition with it, I might say that such gentlemen belong to the gold ring. And then we have two rings, the gold ring and the silver ring.

But, Mr. Chairman, in reply to that article, as it refers to the bill it is a misrepresentation. It undertakes to make it appear that this bill provides that gold, and gold only, shall be the metal of the coin used for redemption, when on the contrary the bill provides for the coinage of silver and the coinage of gold as fast as may be necessary for redemption of the coin notes, and the notes to be redeemed in either at the pleasure of the Government; and it repeals the law of 1890, referred to, repeals the law which undertakes to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to redeem in gold and gold only, and under which law the Secretary of the Treasury claims the authority to sell bonds in order to get gold for the redemption of silver notes. So that the charge is not true. It repeals the only law upon the statute books that undertakes to make silver notes or notes issued upon silver bullion redeemable in gold and gold only.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all the bonds of this Government are redeemable in coin. The act known as the Public Strengthening Act, looking to the redemption of the greenback, provided that it should be redeemed in coin and used silver as a part of the coin. All of the obligations of the Government, in all the past, have been made coin obligations, the same as these notes, and redeemable in coin. Now, what was the law before the demonetization of silver in 1873? And I call attention to it to show the striking similarity of the law of 1837 and this bill, that is denominated a bill not in favor of free coinage. If the writer of that article desires to intimate, or does intimate, that he favors the free coinage of silver at the mints of this Government, he is in a forum where he can introduce his bills and his resolutions, where he can be heard; and this bill itself is upon the Calendar and can be amended in any manner that the House may suggest. I remember that that distinguished—

Mr. WIKE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary question.

Mr. BLAND. I hope it will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. WIKE. I desire to submit it as a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.
